The WHITE ROSE

The Story

"The White Rose" pictures a love story of tremendous appeal, beautifully told—a story of plain people aimed straight at the heart, and never missing its mark,—a story like a page from life—a story that will tug at the heart strings of every spectator from every class—a story that draws on every human emotion, and that first brings tears, then relieving laughter.

The Cast

The incomparable Mae Marsh, again under Griffith direction, does the greatest work of her career. The many millions who knew her in other days are sure to welcome her in this triumphant return to the screen; the delicately beautiful Carol Dempster, known for her splendid work in Griffith pictures; Ivor Novello, the handsome hero and Neil Hamilton, a new Griffith "discovery."

The Picture

All the D. W. Griffith touches in picture-making are found in this film. It is artistic for those who want screen art; pleasing for those who want deep pathos plus subtle comedy; a woman's picture but also a man's picture; a picture that is dramatic and entertaining at all times; a film without a dull moment, with superb photography depicting the most beautiful scenes.

Every one of your patrons—no matter the age, the sex or the station in life—will enjoy "Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing," and will find genuine entertainment from the very first flicker to the final scene of a most thrilling climax.

Mae Marsh as Paddy, the tom-boy daughter who tries to take the place of the son, gives one of those rare performances which have made her loved by millions. Here she is hoydenish, impish, prankish, but always just bordering on the serious.

Romance for those in love with Love. Thrills for those who want breath-taking suspense. Adventure for those who like a real man-to-man fight scene. Action for those who want their pulses stirred and a final climax that will make anybody sit up and take notice.

The New York Verdict—

"Don't Miss It."

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,' a sequel to 'Robin Hood,' accounted for the string of hopeful ticket buyers extending from the Strand Theatre box office all the way down 47th Street. We enjoyed Richard quite as much as we enjoyed Robin. We were happily surprised, because we had not expected great things. Wallace Beery as Richard, the Lion-Hearted, is magnificent. He is a royal King! We should advise every one not to miss it."—Harriette Underhill, N. Y. Tribune.

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted' is a good picture. In the role of Richard, Wallace Beery is the same splendid, forceful, vital, engaging King that he was in 'Robin Hood.' We are given a glimpse of the unforgotten wonders of 'Robin Hood'."—R. E. Sherwood, N. Y. Herald.

"Dramatic Moments."

"Wallace Beery gives a convincing and vital performance as King Richard. There are dramatic moments, excellently staged scenes, and it takes us back to the stirring times of the Crusaders."—Morning Telegraph.

"Strikes Home."

"Associated Authors in their initial production struck home. The settings are splendid, as are the costumes. Wallace Beery fills the role he had in 'Robin Hood' just as one would want it, and in the humorous scenes he is excellent. The cast is far above the average." N. Y. Times.

"By All Means See It."

"If you like romantic adventure skilfully don into a movie, by all means see 'Richard, th Lion-Hearted.' It is a colorful tale, and beau tiful maidens are saved and villainous foreign ers slain while you pant in suspense. Th great difference between 'Richard, the Lion Hearted' and the 'million dollar spectacles which dot Broadway and its side streets is tha tickets don't cost you $2."—N. Y. Sun.

"Exactly The Thing."

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,' is exactly th thing as a photoplay for Associated Authors Wallace Beery, the leading actor, the Strand Theatre, and, most important of all, also for the movie-going populace."—N. Y. Evening Telegram.

"Most Enjoyable."

"Wallace Beery gives an interpretation of England's crusading King which is human to the Nth degree, and which shows the greatness and the smallness of this medieval hero. These actions are unconventional and most enjoyable."—N. Y. Evening Mail.

"Pictorially Beautiful."

"Laughs On All Sides."

"We heard laughs on all sides at the subtle, clever performance of Wallace Beery. Others were affected as we were. You might be, too, if you see the picture. As for settings, frills, and all the rest, they're all just fine. Excellent, in fact!"—N. Y. Daily News.

Dear Sir:

We are pleased to note that since Moving Picture World has been placed under your editorial supervision that publication's whole-hearted cooperation, as regards exhibitor organization activities, has been forth coming.

It was our pleasure at the last annual convention held at Lake Hopatcong to place on the records our appreciation of this constructive attitude and it was with a greater degree of pleasure that this action was reaffirmed by the Board of Directors at their recent meeting in Atlantic City.

Please accept our sincere commendation of your activities and rest assured that a continuation of such cooperation will merit the continued support of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey.

UPON a narrow ribbon of celluloid wound on a spool is recorded the achievement of artists, the genius of director, the skill of cinematographer, the vision and the dollars of producer.

But it is not by this sole record that the picture is judged, but by the positive prints that go forth to the public.

That each of these prints may be perfect reproductions of the master film down to the most minute detail — with quality uniform in every particular is one very good reason why so many leading producers entrust the developing and the printing of their film to these laboratories.

MOVING PICTURE
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Motion Picture Day

THE exhibitor needs organization. The exhibitor wants organization.

The number of theatre owners who will admit the facts above is legion.

But organization to be of value must be active; activity costs money. And between the number of exhibitors who proclaim the necessity of organization and those who, in the past, have contributed their share towards the expense of organization—what a difference.

This is something for the theatre owner to think about; a question for him to put squarely to himself, and on the answer depends largely the right of the individual exhibitor to criticize organization or to participate in it.

VARIOUS methods of meeting necessary national organization overhead, good, bad, and indifferent, have been tried in past years. It goes without saying—but is at the same time a sorry confession to make—that no scheme has been successful.

In State and local bodies better results have been achieved in many instances. The pledges secured at the recent Michigan convention, as told elsewhere in this issue, are one evidence of local strength.

But the national body has been an orphan. Something to be kicked around when you felt grouchy; a prize to be bitterly fought for from time to time; but always and forever an object for niggardly consideration and a starvation diet.

Which is not as it should be.

THE results of the orphan-like treatment are plain. It is a fact well known to many in a position to learn the facts that national organization has for too long been dependent upon the ability of its individual leaders to carry the burden.

That's one result of past conditions.

The other is that the national organization is forced into abortive attempts to raise funds, methods that involve activities beyond its scope.

This cannot last—if exhibitor organization is to last. And it must last—regardless of the personalities and politics of the moment, for organization as organization is above all and beyond all.

This is a funding method adopted by the directors of the national organization after lengthy and exhaustive investigation of all possible means.

It is a method that has met with an enthusiastic response—such strongly organized territories as New Jersey, Western Pennsylvania and Arkansas are among those that have placed this enthusiasm on the records. The Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce in New York City, not by any means a Cohen organization, is cooperating wholeheartedly.

It is a method in tune with the possibilities and operations of the motion picture business.

THE date of Motion Picture Day is drawing near.

The time is already here for the individual exhibitor—with or without organization affiliations and no matter what those affiliations—to decide upon his own part in the campaign.

He must face the question.

He must answer it honestly.

Either he desires national organization efficiently and intelligently operated; or he prefers national organization run on the basis of the Salvation Army tambourine. Or he doesn't give a hang about national organization.

But he can't criticize and throw bricks at an edifice towards the erection of which he has refused to contribute. He can't refuse aid to the right hand of organization and plead for help in his battles from the left hand.

The points at issue are obvious. They can neither be dodged nor confused.

This Week

Don't let anybody tell you that the Admission Tax fight isn't progressing. Very nicely. Some good work being done. Some worth-while friends being made. And no small part of the valuable effort being put forth is that on the part of Moving Picture World readers—responding to our urge to write their legislators. We knew a lot of letter-writing was going on, for most of the exhibitors send us copies. But we were ourselves surprised by reports from Washington this week. A number of Congressmen who never knew there was an Admission Tax are now showing a strong desire for information.

F. B. O. heads the news list this week just as they have also captured this issue of Moving Picture World. The news is: MAJOR H. C. S. HOMSON has been elected managing director of the organization, succeeding P. A. POWERS. No further changes in personnel or policy contemplated.

The man who gets our goat is the fellow who asks us the meaning of day to day happenings in the FEDERAL TRADES COMMISSION hearing. You can't answer him—there is no answer. Lots of good newspaper headlines—but they don't mean anything.

SAM ROTHAFEL celebrates the fourth birthday of the Capitol this week. The big house opened with "THE MARK OF ZORRO"—and the celebration comes just when UNITED ARTISTS is putting that production back on the market with a flourish. Looks like a great follow-up bet for the exhibitor playing "ROBIN HOOD."

FRED J. BEECROFT has just returned from a motor trip through Indiana, Illinois, Ohio, and a few other states. Reports that he found both THE NEWS and THE WORLD subscriber doing as well as could be expected.

Friday sees day and date opposition on the luncheon atractions. Fredman being honored at the Astor, and Baby Peggy holding a birthday celebration at the Ritz.

When is news not news but something else again? That is a problem that has entered the news weekly field and is going to take a lot of threshing out before it is finally settled. If you want to read a real modern "Romance of Business" don't miss the story in this issue about the Zev-Papyrus race and the pictorials' clash. Ex-Postmaster Generals would never do in the weekly field. When those boys get ambitious they'll have to go out and hire Foch and Pershing.

FRANK J. CARROLL
Of Colorado Pictures Corporation.

ERNEST FREDMAN, editor of The Film Renter, London, is in town. Comes in just as jovial and likeable as FRANK TILLEY on his entry. Hope he doesn't repeat the Tilley stunt of entering like a lamb and going out like a lion.

Met DOC SHALLENBERGER at the Astor. "Just back from a trip?" we asked. "Yes." "Just starting on another one?" we followed. "Yes." And then he added: "You have to keep moving in the picture business these days. No time to warm the chair."

JOHN W. McKEON, formerly of Mayflower, is in town as advance prophet of a new distributing plan. Something of a "zone showing" plan. Prints, advertising, and sales concentrated in one section—a grand clean-up, then on to the next territory.

HODKINSON announces the completion of a contract for HARRY CAREY'S next series. There hasn't been much talk about new product from Hodkinson lately, but they say this announcement is the first shot of a series.

SAM WARNER wants it known just as emphatically as advertising can make it that any exhibitor can book any Warner picture anywhere without having to take other product.

FRANK CARROLL has been away from New York so long that we are afraid some of you boys may be passing him on the street without nodding. So we went out to the office files and dug up the old cut to present herewith.

Frank has had a busy day on behalf of the Colorado Pictures Corporation and "The Birth of the West." Contract signing in abundance—and some important news to spring next week.

Just saw a real serviceable and snappy press book. Merritt Crawford the creator. "The Right of the Strongest" the picture. E. K. Lincoln the star. Also hear that Merritt did a great editing job on the film.

Nebraska M.P.T.O. Plans to Fight Unjust and High Taxes and Rates

EXHIBITORS and exchangemen to the number of more than 100 met at the Hotel Loyal in Omaha, Neb., in a two-days' session of the Motion Picture Theater Owners' Association of Nebraska, October 16 and 17.

Admission tax, music tax, insurance, and the relation of exchanges to exhibitors, were among the subjects freely discussed. As a result of the two days' session, a set of resolutions were adopted, providing for a campaign against the admission tax, the music tax, a campaign against high fire insurance rates for motion picture houses, approving "Movie Day," as set aside for November 16, endorsing the theatre owners' distribution corporation, and seeking means to bring down the prices of films.

Al Pramer, of Omaha, president of the association, opened the session the afternoon of October 16, by introducing Kelso A. Morgan, Omaha, attorney, who welcomeed the picture men in behalf of Omaha.

The president then outlined some of the problems before the exhibitors, declaring that while the government had during the war placed the motion picture theatres among the most essential industries of the country because they were morale builders by keeping the public at home cheered up, the government had nevertheless not yet seen fit to remove the burdensome war taxes which Mr. Palmer said, 85 per cent. of the owners were absorbing themselves instead of charging back to the public. He suggested that some definite stand be taken on the matter of getting these taxes removed.

"Ethics in Salesmanship" was the subject of an address by C. R. Gilmour, Omaha manager of the Fox Film Corporation. Speaking for the Film Exchange Board of Trade, of which he is a member, he said, the board would tolerate only the cleanest of methods.

He admonished exhibitors not to take verbal promises from salesmen as a part of the contract. "You yourselves know that nothing will hold except what is on the contract, and when a man has given you everything he can, and writes it in the contract and then goes on making you verbal promises, stop him then and there, for you know he cannot do what he is promising.

"When your dates are booked full and a salesman from another house tries to get you to pull out dates and cancel some of the contracts to put his goods in, you are in duty bound to the industry to kick that man out of your theatre. Thus in your own hands lies the problem of clean selling."

The exhibitors seemed to take this talk as a kind of challenge. They refused to accept the proposition that it is entirely up to them to make clean salesmen out of the representatives of the exchanges. Mrs. R. W. Steen, of Atlantic, Ia., woman exhibitor, answering Mr. Gilmour, said that there are seven exchange salesmen calling on the houses at Atlantic, for example, "and," she said, "if we kicked out every one who tries to get us to pull dates and put in his product, we would only have three left out of the seven."

Eugene Blazier, Omaha attorney, who until recently represented the exchanges here, but now represents some exhibitors, told Mrs. Steen and the rest of the exhibitors his version of why salesmen use the high pressure methods. It was due to the intense competition and pressure from the branch offices and the producer. "When a picture is produced," he said, "the producer is badly in the hole, and the picture must sell at once or go on the rocks. The producer then gives the district manager his quota of $40,000 for example, assuming that the picture cost $1,000,000 to produce. The branch manager is told to sell his $40,000 in a given time or lose his job. The branch manager puts his salesmen out and gives each his particular quota with the same admonition to sell it quick or lose his job. They are pushed to use every method to get their goods sold to save their jobs.

Exchangemen sought the floor to answer Blazier, and C. E. Senning, of the Educational Film Co., pointed out that Mr. Blazier was until recently the paid attorney of the exchanges, "and be it known," he said, "while Mr. Blazier is talking of certain practises that anything done by the exchanges was until recently done under the sanction of Mr. Blazier."

C. R. Gilmour then denied Mr. Blazier's charges that the exchanges were putting any one on the "blue card" or threatening to do so. "It should be remembered," he said, "that the exchanges have three men who work hard every morning on the board of arbitration with three men of the exhibitors to straighten out cases that come before them. So don't get radical. You have an arbitration board to settle all differences. Let the board do it. We don't need lawsuits. We need arbitration. Let the exchanges help you. We'll fight your battles if you'll fight ours."

Mr. Blazier got the floor again to point out that while the exhibitors get a chance to meet at the arbitration board they do not meet in the Film Board of Trade, and the "exhibitors are nailed to the cross," he said.

President Pramer had to take matters in his own hands at this point to restore order, for men were on their feet in all parts of the house ready to debate either side of the question. The president drew attention to the fact that the meeting had started out to discuss taxation and had got badly switched off. and he gently drew them back again.

Philip A. Schlumberger, Denison, Ia., declared that in the palmiest days of the saloon, the saloon had never been taxed as the motion picture house is taxed today.

C. E. Senning reviewed his experience as one of a committee that made a fight Congress on the taxation question. "We made a plea for no tax on motion pictures charging 25 cents admission or less. We made a good case, and thought we had a chance, when the circus people and the so-called 'legitimate' people went into conference with the committee and insisted on having all taxed or none taxed and the thing proved a boomerang on us when the circus people came in."

He advised that the fight be made on either the admission tax or the seat tax, instead of both at once

Here it was pointed out by A. C. Smead, of Council Bluffs, that this tax brings the government a revenue of $70,000,000 a year and that experience has shown that it is hard to get a tax removed when once it has been shown to be a tax that produces handsome revenue. He warned the picture men that this means a real fight ahead of them.

"There is only one way to beat it," he said, "and that is to convince the congressmen and senators one by one, that their job depends upon the repeal of that tax. Then and then only will they listen. You know that many times the question has come up in Congress of placing a heavy tariff on Canadian wood pulp from which news print paper is made. But it has never been passed. Why not? Because the newspapers have to buy the paper made from the wood pulp and they do not want the tariff on it, and every one of the congressmen is afraid of the newspapers."

M. Stern, of Omaha, said the picture theatre man was the only business man he knew of who was compelled to pay a tax on his losses as well as on his profits. "When you have a bad week and lose a lot of money, you nevertheless pay taxes on every ticket sold," he said, "when you have a rainy or stormy night and only have a $7.50 house, you nevertheless pay the government tax on even that $7.50. I believe you should make it clear to Congress that you are perfectly willing to pay a tax on profits and a big tax on everything above a legitimate profit, but that you want to be relieved from paying taxes on your looses."

Speaking on "Independent Productions" Al Kahn, of the Crescent Federation of Film Exchanges, said for the first time in history the independents feel on a par with any of them, and that they are now putting out some of the best pictures in the field, which are being shown at the leading theatres in the country. He said many of the independents were putting on extensive advertising campaigns in the newspapers in the key cities and he advised the exhibitors to take advantage of these advertising campaigns which are placed so as to do the exhibitor the most good.

Discussing advertising and promotion of business for the picture house. C. H. Dumont, of New York, representing Warner Bros., said the exhibitor must advertise and exploit his business as any other line of business if he would keep the crowds coming to his theatre.

"Insurance" was discussed by John Alden Towers, of Kansas City, representing the Theater Inter-Insurance Exchange of Philadelphia, Pa. Flaws often creep into policies, he said, and so many of them that the exhibitors finds after a loss, that he is not as completely covered as he thought he was.

Officers Elected

The following officers were elected the morning of the second day: C. E. Williams, Omaha, president; F. M. Honey, Tecumseh, Neb., vice-president; J. E. Kirk, Omaha, secretary; George H. McArdle, Benson, Neb., treasurer.

Executive committee, all of Nebraska: H. F. Kennedy, Broken Bow; Blaine Cook, Beatrice; J. C. Jenkins, Neligh; S. A. Hayman, Grand Island; J. E. Kirk, Omaha; H. A. Larson, Oakland; A. G. King, Pawnee City; W. H. Creal, Omaha; H. Burrus, Crete; F. M. Honey, Tecumseh; James Schoonover, Aurora; George McArdle, Benson; T. B. Thomas, Fremont; William Hawley, North Platte; W. H. Ostenburg, Scottsbluff.

Exhibitors Throughout the Union Back National Motion Picture Day

WITH practically every state in the union lined up solidly behind National Motion Picture Day, under the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, which organization is sponsoring the event, is concentrating on a drive to furnish every theatre in the country with slides, campaign books and similar exploitation aids. There will be no lack of material placed in the hands of theatre owners whereby they can energetically promote public interest in their big celebration on November 19.

The Service Book

A twelve-page service book is being mailed to every theatre in which is covered every phase of the campaign. The front cover carries a reproduction of a calendar in a two-color effect, which calls attention to Monday, November 19, as National Motion Picture Day. The next page is devoted to an explanation of the purpose and general plan of the observance, stressing its importance and outlining briefly the high lights of an ideal campaign. Page three contains especially written letters to newspaper editors, mayors, merchants, civic clubs, city department heads and women's clubs. The exhibitors will use the suggested communications in securing the support of these officials and organizations.

Newspaper Campaign

The two pages following are devoted to a special campaign of newspaper publicity, with stories to cover every angle of the day's celebration as it appeals to public interest. The next two pages carry definite suggestions of exploitation and advertising. This includes ideas for fitting programs on the big day, together with suggestions for special music and similar features. A section is devoted to appropriate plans for the theatres, which includes lobby decorations and displays. A wealth of ideas are presented for street exploitation and a complete campaign of newspaper advertising is presented. An advanced drive is worked out and copy is suggested for a postcard and direct-by-mail campaign, as well as material for program announcements and contest ideas to be arranged in conjunction with newspapers.

Slides and Posters

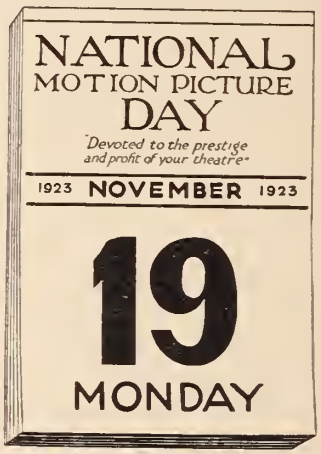
The back cover of the book carries a reproduction of the slides and posters prepared by the national headquarters and the names of theatre owners composing the National Motion Picture Day Committee, of which William Bender, Jr., is chairman. A four-page spread in the center of the book is printed on a green stock and outlines the manner in which campaigns are being worked up by three state units, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey, Western Pennsylvania and Arkansas.

The other exploitation aids now being sent out include special posters and two series of slides, whereby the theatre owners can start their campaigns immediately and stimulate public interest during the time between now and November 19. It is understood that, as the day draws nearer, two separate folders containing supplementary exploitation ideas and suggestions will be furnished all theatre owners, as well as a series of letters of instructions and individual assistance.

SPREADING THE GOSPEL OF MOTION PICTURE DAY

Fleets of trucks delivering film throughout New York and New Jersey carried the message, "Go to the Movies on Monday, November 19, National Motion Picture Day."

Monday, Nov. 19



EXHIBITORS!
This is your BIG DAY!

Make the day make friends for you

Generally Approved

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is leaving no stone unturned in providing ways and means of putting over National Motion Picture Day. The campaign has already won its approval and support of between eight and ten thousand theatre owners. From all indications the movement, which has certainly won instantaneous approval, will prove the biggest thing ever attempted by the exhibitors in the history of the industry. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have inaugurated a comprehensive and complete service campaign, based on showmanship and the ideals of public service, which distinguish the movement.

Motor Trucks Aid

In New York City, the large fleet of motor trucks which daily deliver film to over 400 theatres throughout Greater New York and New Jersey, are carrying National Motion Picture Day banners. These will bear the message of the event to the public from now until November 19. This is the first shot of the campaign in New York and New Jersey, which promises to bring forth several startling innovations.

U. S. Bureau of Education Urges Teachers to Boom Exhibitor Day

ONE of the most important announcements concerning National Motion Picture Day on November 19 is given out from the offices of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to the effect that the Bureau of Education of the Department of the Interior, Washington, through Dr. John J. Tigert, Commissioner of Education, is co-operating with the theatre owners in making the event an outstanding success. As American Education Week, in which the Bureau of Education is interested, will be observed November 18 to 24, inclusive, and National Motion Picture Day is to be held on November 19, the educational forces of the country and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America are uniting their mutual interests for that date.

Writes to Schools

To achieve the highly desirable contact between local school authorities and the theatre owners in each community, the Commissioner of Education is writing to each and every superintendent of schools and high school principals throughout the entire country, urging them to immediately get in touch with the motion picture theatre owners in their respective localities toward the end of meeting the theatre owners and effecting a line of mutual service in carrying out the purpose of the week. A portion of one of these letters, from the commissioner, is quoted in the statement from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as follows:

Pupils to Be Told

"We respectfully suggest that you have all the teachers in your district call the attention of the pupils of the schools to the fact that National Motion Picture Day is being observed on Monday, November 19, in all the theatres of the United States and that on that day special attention will be given to our National Constitution as part of the program of American Education Week. We will be pleased to have you make such suggestions to the theatre owners as will best serve our mutual purposes. Slides and other material to present this matter on the screen will be furnished by the theatre owners and you can co-operate with him in determining just what shall be placed on the same."

In addition to writing the above communication to all superintendents and high school principals, the Commissioner of Education is sending a letter to every theatre owner in the country expressing his gratification that the theatre owners, through the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, are so deeply interested in the patriotic and constructive work of the Bureau of Education, and complimenting the theatre owners on their policies of public service and co-operation in all such matters of national importance. Commissioner Tigert concludes his letter with the following words:

"I am writing to the school superintendents and high school principals all over the United States to co-operate with the theatre owners in this matter. No doubt, you will be visited by your local superintendent and school principal. I hope that the arrangements you make with them to help further the high purposes of American Education Week will be mutually satisfactory."

Letters to Exhibitors

In order to emphasize the importance and value of this contact with the United States Bureau of Education, a letter is being sent to every exhibitor in the country from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America as follows:

"This is to advise you that the United States Bureau of Education, of which Dr. John J. Tigert is commissioner, is now engaged in promoting the observance of American Education Week, November 18 to 24, inclusive.

"It is our desire, and no doubt you share with us that patriotic feeling, to have every theatre owner in the United States co-operate with the United States Bureau of Education and the state and city superintendents and school authorities generally in making this movement a pronounced success.

"We know you will co-operate. During this period on Monday, November 19, we celebrate National Motion Picture Day and you no doubt have arranged special programs for that day. You can add to this program such elements of the Education Week plans as the school authorities of your locality and yourself agree upon.

Cohen Co-operates

"The United States Bureau of Education has communicated directly with every school superintendent in the United States and requested them to co-operate with the motion picture theatre men in this relation. You may expect a visit from your school superintendent; please give him the best line of screen co-operation you can.

"We will supply some slides and other forms of screen publicity and you can arrange for others with the proper local features yourself. We will be pleased to keep you further advised on the matter and earnestly hope you will do everything in your power to aid the cause of education in this connection."

This letter is jointly signed by Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America; William Bender, Jr., chairman of the National Motion Picture Day Committee, and M. J. O'Toole, national chairman of the Public Service Department of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

The undersigned hereby heartily endorses the celebration of NATIONAL MOTION PICTURE DAY, MONDAY, NOVEMBER 19th, 1923, and agrees to give twenty-five per cent (25%) of his gross receipts on that day to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America for the protection and advancement of the interests of the motion picture theatre owner.

New Jersey Theatre Co-operation Assured for Motion Picture Day

THE board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey met in regular meeting at the Hotel Stacy-Trent, Trenton, N. J., on Wednesday, October 17. In attendance were R. F. Woodhull, Joseph Seider, Henry P. Nelson, William Keegan, Charles Hildinger, Peter Adams, Sidney Samuelson, Arthur B. Smith, Ben Shindler and A. J. Moeller. Luncheon was served in the Princeton room. A business session followed.

Activities as they relate to National Motion Picture Day were reviewed and a definite policy as it relates to the celebration of that day was determined upon.

Plan Mass Meetings

Mass meetings will be held throughout the state during the ensuing two weeks, one of these to be held in Trenton of all of the exhibitors in Mercer County on Thursday, October 24, at the Hotel Stacy-Trent, Trenton, N. J. Theatre owners attending will be the guests of Charles Hildinger, of Trenton, at a luncheon at the Hotel Stacy-Trent on that day. Mr. Hildinger is a member of the board of directors and one of the leaders in the National Motion Picture Day movement in New Jersey.

The purpose of the meeting is to discuss fully all legislative activities, National Motion Picture Day and numerous other matters of importance to New Jersey theatre owners.

The plan of procedure with regard to National Motion Picture Day is a powerful one. New Jersey is taking the campaign direct to the public in a tremendously big and constructive way.

Realize Opportunity

Following the establishing of a public service policy, New Jersey is tying up with National Motion Picture Day. New Jersey realizes the tremendous strength of the greatest medium for publicity in the world—their screen—which is the link between the theatre and the public, and as a result are building an important campaign around it, having adopted the slogan: "TALK DIRECTLY FROM YOUR SCREEN."

They are going to use National Motion Picture Day as an opportunity for building up a close and cordial relationship between the theatre owner and their public. They are going to show the people their sincere purpose of gratifying the public's wish as regards entertainment. They are going to be able to meet the public on a common ground of service and pave the way for the public to appreciate their problems and, in return, help the theatre owners solve them.

Concretely, New Jersey is preparing a series of slides. Get that—not A slide but a series of slides. They're going to explain what National Motion Picture Day is, and what it means. Then they're going to follow along making National Motion Picture Day mean something, by asking the public what they like and what they want. That's the constructive effort, stripped of all superfluous words.

Explanatory Slides

The slides will explain the purpose of the campaign. The next step will actually secure the public's opinion. This will be done by passing out blanks at every performance upon which patrons are asked to indicate in writing what kind of pictures they like and want; if they prefer comedies, comedy dramas or dramas, etc. What kind of picture the children like, and similar questions which will give the theatre owners a general idea of the attitude of their patrons, in order that they may be in a position to give consideration to the wishes of the majority.

All this is directly tied up to National Motion Picture Day. Consider what vast possibilities the idea affords. Consider the talk which will be stimulated among the people. Consider the publicity National Motion Picture Day will receive. It's immense—it's right in line with the day.

JOSEPH SEIDER

Chairman of the Board of Directors of the New Jersey M. P. T. O. and promoting National Motion Picture Day.

To carry out the campaign, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New Jersey has appointed fifty additional theatre owners as members of the National Motion Picture Day committee for New Jersey. These are in addition to the Congressional District chairmen who are already appointed and hard at work.

Resolutions were adopted tendering the use of the screens of the State of New Jersey for the purpose of furthering National Education Week—week of November 18. Resolutions offering co-operation of the roll call campaign of the American Red Cross on November 12 by displaying slides, the Red Cross flag and otherwise assisting this worthy institution.

Rosenthal a Director

Louis Rosenthal, of East Orange, was elected a member of the board of directors to fill the unexpired term of Samuel Sobelson.

Means of procedure as it relates to state legislative activities were determined upon, as the Legislature convenes on January 16, and New Jersey is determined to combat all adverse legislation and see that some favorable legislation for theatre owners is procured.

Joseph Seider, chairman of the board of directors, presided. The next meeting of the board will be held in New York City at the Hotel Astor, on November 2. The directors on this occasion will be the guests of Joseph Seider, chairman of the board of directors, at a luncheon. Other members of the board tendered similar invitations to the board of directors to hold meetings in their respective cities as their guests.

Brooklyn Exhibitors Pledge a Quarter of Big Day's Receipts

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn held a regular meeting on Friday, October 19, 1923, at the Hotel St. George. Following a luncheon a business session was held, at which R. Sanders presided. Several matters of importance came before the meeting and considerable progress was reported.

The operators' situation was thoroughly discussed, and notwithstanding certain reports that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn are having difficulties with Local 306 of the Operators' Union, denial was made that any fight between the two organizations is on, it having been stated that any slight misunderstanding between the members of the Brooklyn Theatre Owners and Local 306 would be adjusted without difficulty.

The following resolution was adopted indorsing National Motion Picture Day:

"Whereas, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn have directly participated in the benefits accruing to theatre owners generally through the activities of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, and

"Whereas, the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have designated Monday, November 19, as National Motion Picture Day for the purpose of continuing their activities for and in behalf of the motion picture theatre owners throughout the United States.

"Therefore be it resolved that the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Brooklyn, in meeting assembled on this 19th day of October, 1923, do hereby heartily indorse National Motion Picture Day and pledge themselves to give twenty-five per cent. of the gross receipts on that day to the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America."

The following National Motion Picture Day Committee was appointed: Messrs. Rosenthal, Schiffmann, Rosen and Phillips.

Implements of War Called Into Play As Rival Cameramen Film Horse Race

ALL the thrills of a military campaign attended the filming, by different motion picture companies, of the Zev-Papyrus international horse race last Saturday. Pathe paid a reported sum of $38,000 for the privilege of officially filming the race, after Pathe's competitors had declined to bid, arguing that they, as well as the newspapers, should be permitted to "report" the race gratis. These rivals of the privileged organization, however, did not sit back with folded arms and philosophize, and to hinder in every possible way their attempts to film the race, Belmont Park assumed the appearance of the Marne front. Smoke pots were set off around a tree in which "uninvited" cameramen were discovered, gigantic reflecting mirrors mounted on trucks flashed to foil other prying camera eyes, guards stood at all the gates to turn back disguised rival cameramen, and an aeroplane overhead laid a smoke screen to frustrate the efforts of competing 'planes. Guerilla warfare, you might call it.

The result was that clever ruses enabled all the companies to photograph the race. Sept cameras concealed in the handbags of actresses was one of the stunts that succeeded for Fox News. International News recalled the storming of Babylon by rushing observation towers on motor trucks up to and overlooking the inclosure. Kinograms "shot" from a house outside the park and also got cameramen by the eagle-eyed spotters at the gates.

The following stories tell just what each company did, in its own words. Certainly they are interesting tales of a spectacular matching of wits and initiative, and well worth reading.

Pathe Accomplishes Its Herculean Task

WHEN America's champion race-horse, Zev, passed under the wire ahead of the English Papyrus at the Belmont race-track last Saturday afternoon, October 20, camera work was being completed on a screen production which in point of box-office value and historic significance surpasses anything of its kind ever attempted before. With the final glorious dash of the American monarch of the turf across the finish line amid the acclaim of over 60,000 frenzied race fans, twenty Pathe cameramen ceased their nerve-racking task of recording the first international horse-race ever held in America.

One herculean task had been completed—and with rare success—but another of equally colossal proportions was just starting, the task of developing the precious negatives and distributing prints as fast as human ingenuity could make possible to waiting screens all over the world. Within a few moments after the close of the race, aeroplanes in a nearby field soared aloft with one set of negatives, bound for prearranged destinations. One of these headed for the open sea and set out in pursuit of the S.S. Leviathan, which had left its New York berth fully six hours before bound for Europe. By the end of the week, London, Paris, and possibly Rome will be witnessing Pathe's pictures of the great American turf classic. Another set of negatives was loaded aboard waiting autos, which preceded by an escort of motorcycle police, to assure right of way along the entire route, tore at top speed to the Pathe laboratory in New Jersey.

Before midnight, two aeroplanes supplied with prints left the New Jersey plant for Chicago and Cleveland, distributing centers for the Middle West. Before dawn special messengers started for Boston, Philadelphia and Washington, with ample quotas of prints. The distributing field, accustomed to feats of extraordinary speed, had never accomplished such marvels. By Sunday evening every key city from the Atlantic Coast line to Chicago was showing Pathe's exclusive picturization of the Zev-Papyrus race.

The Pathe special is in two reels and is the most comprehensive picture of its kind ever filmed. When arrangements were effected whereby Pathe secured exclusive rights to film the event, the Pathe representative in England was cabled to secure motion pictures of all the highlights of Papyrus' career—his sire and dam, English methods of breeding and training race horses, and the recent English Derby in which Papyrus was the victor. All these views were incorporated in the two-reel special of the race, distributed by Pathe.

Exactly the same procedure was followed with relation to Zev. Pictures of his sire and dam, the American method of breeding and training race horses, and the Kentucky Derby showing Zev the winner were also incorporated in the special. Thus the Pathe picture embodies, with many spectacular touches, a comparative screen study of horse-racing methods here and abroad and resumes of the careers of America's and England's most outstanding three-year-olds.

During the entire training period, a staff of eight Pathe cameramen were kept constantly at the Belmont race tracks, covering every phase of the training of the two contestants. When it is stated that the Belmont race park is some sixty acres in area and that both stables conducted the training of their charges with the greatest possible secrecy, the tremendous task confronting the Pathe cameramen becomes apparent. The cameramen had to watch and wait, making the best of their opportunities when either horse was in the open. There was no way of knowing when either horse was to be taken out on the course, nor where nor how long he was to remain in action. Only the immediate attendants of each horse were "in the know," and their impenetrable shroud of secrecy made a military censorship shriek like an open confession.

Unfavorable weather conditions at times and the presence of some hundred other race-horses in training at the track each day added to the difficulties. Despite these handicaps, the Pathe cameramen succeeded by dint of unceasing vigilance and constant effort, extending over a period of three weeks, in acquiring a comprehensive record of the training of both thoroughbreds. These views are also shown for the first time in the two-reel special.

The recording of the race itself was a feat of generalship and co-ordination never before equalled in the history of screen journalism. The entire Pathe camera force arrived on the field at 9 o'clock in the morning after being conveyed with full equipment from the Pathe home-office in a convoy of fifteen automobiles. A police escort accompanied the convoy, expediting the speedy passage of cars throughout the entire route. Upon arriving at the park the cameramen immediately took up their posts at the pre-arranged locations in the enclosure and along the home-stretch.

Ten special stands erected in the infield covered definite portions of the track. One huge stand, twenty-five feet in height, situated in the center of the oval, provided a continuous and uninterrupted view of the entire race course. A force of 550 detectives and guards patrolled the park in addition to the large detail of police. This entire force were under strict orders to confiscate all motion picture cameras found on the grounds, except those being operated by the Pathe cameramen. These arrangements, designed to enforce Pathe's exclusive rights to film the event, were carried out with dispatch throughout the day.

Every type of up-to-the-minute camera and camera accessory was included in the Pathe equipment for the occasion. Nothing was spared in the way of expense or effort that would make for perfect photography. Two weeks before Pathe's staff of camera experts had gone over the entire ground and after tests with special lenses and other apparatus had selected the best vantage points for the location of the camera stands. Only one thing was left to chance—the weather—and that fortunately was perfect for camera purposes.

Nothing was missed by the formidable battery of Pathe cameramen. From the very first appearance of Zev and Papyrus in the paddock to the final glorious moments when Zev, with Earl Sande up, crossed the finish line and was surrounded by the screaming, surging masses of delight-maddened fans, the Pathe cameras—regulation, Aikley and slow-motion—clicked on unceasingly, the expert hands on the revolving cranks cool, steady, unfaltering amid the hurricane of emotion, intent on one thing alone—the recording of these historic moments for the entertainment of millions everywhere, who impatiently await to see how an American horse met a royal British racer and beat him at the sport of kings.

Fox News Triumphs Over All Obstacles

TO what lengths William Fox will go to protect the users of his news service and to bring to them the news pictures to which they are entitled without extra charge, is strikingly illustrated by the manner in which Fox News presented its patrons with the results of the great Zev-Papyrus race at Belmont Park, New York, last Saturday.

Fox News secured magnificent news pictures covering this event, including the actual running of the race, and gave this as a part of its regular service to Fox News patrons without extra cost—and was first in the theatres, at that.

The film covering the Zev-Papyrus race was no mere apologetic flash of a few feet in order to claim that the event was covered; it was a real picture of 1,100 feet, showing the race in every detail and covering it from every angle. The enormous sum of $30,000 was expended by Fox News in order to insure that this event reached its patrons as a part of the service to which they are entitled.

For two weeks before the great race actually took place, plans were made for recording this event with all the care and attention to detail of a military campaign. Belmont Park, where the race was held, was examined thoroughly and all its vantage points noted. Most elaborate plans were laid for covering every foot of the track with squads of cameramen operating standard equipment. Thus it resulted that when the two horses went to the post for the contest, which was to determine whether the premier turf laurel rested with America or went to England, Fox News cameramen were in a position to make an absolutely complete record of this great sporting event, toward which the eyes of two continents were turned.

Twenty-five experienced cameramen were used in all, and these were assisted by fifty lay helpers. The services of ten big touring cars were enlisted, as well as six motorcycle sidecars and three enormous moving van trucks. In addition to this, two aeroplanes, bearing trained cameramen, covered the event from the air for Fox News. One main squad of cameramen was stationed to the left of the race course, looking from the grand stand. Two other squads were located at the right at various distances. Four other batteries of cameramen were placed at various intervals between these three main locations outside the track, so that every inch of the course was adequately covered by standard cameras every minute during the race.

Within the oval inclosure two other cameramen were stationed and slow-motion cameras were not overlooked. These, with the two cameramen shooting from the air and several accessory smaller cameras placed at various points, gave Fox News a magnificent assortment of film from which to select, as is well attested by the splendid picture of the race with which it was able to serve its patrons.

Now as to results. How successfully the arrangements had been made to expedite the handling of the Fox News film on this great sporting event was soon apparent. Each cameraman had been carefully instructed as to where he was to take the film which he secured; a rendezvous had been made with a waiting high-speed vehicle to convey this film to the Fox studios in New York.

By 5:15 p. m. Saturday the first film had arrived at the laboratories.

At 6:00 p. m. the first batch of film began emerging from the laboratories.

At 6:30 p. m. all takes had been run on the screen for cutting and editing.

At 8:15 p. m. the film covering the entire subject was in the laboratory for finishing.

At 9:15 p. m., just one hour later, the first print was out of the laboratory, followed by others immediately thereafter. Special touring cars were waiting to rush these prints to the big Broadway theatres and the various theatres of the Fox circuit, in order to be able to show these pictures first to their patrons.

At 9:30 p. m. Saturday the Capitol Theatre in New York presented the Fox News pictures of the race—a complete splendid news covering of this event.

During Saturday only the Fox News picture was used at the Capitol and in many of the other theatres which had received this print first of all. Other prints came in during the evening and for the Sunday shows theatres which subscribe to several services made up composite prints, after their usual custom.

Between 9:15 p. m. Saturday and 1:30 the next morning a full quota of prints had been finished and distributed by Fox News, and those shipped by the post had been placed in the United States mails for distribution to every part of the country.

At the first early showings Sunday the Fox picture was displayed to the audiences in the principal theatres in New York, Philadelphia, Newark, Rochester, Buffalo and Syracuse.

Fox News had determined that the Zev-Papyrus race would be presented as a part of its regular service to its patrons, presented in splendid completeness and presented first. It kept its word.

International Displays Skilful Strategy

BELIEVING that a news reel is obligated to supply its clients with pictures of any great news event, whether the promoters of the event hope to make it an exclusive affair or not, the International News Reel Corporation laid plans to procure, and did obtain, exceptional pictures of the celebrated "race of the century," between Zev and Papyrus, at Belmont Park last Saturday. These pictures were taken despite every effort made to prevent the International News Reel Corporation from getting them.

The results of International's efforts were so excellent that a 400-foot subject was obtained and shipped to all theatres booking the International News. These pictures went out as a pre-release issue of International News No. 87, at no increase in cost to the exhibitor. They show the race from start to finish, as well as sidelight views of the crowds, the jockeys, and close-ups of the horses. They were shipped to all International first-run patrons during the evening following the race.

They reached Broadway theatres in time for the second show Saturday, and on Sunday more than thirty big New York theatres were using the International News shots. These theatres included the Capitol, Rialto, Loew's State, Olympia, Fox's Audubon and Fox's Academy, the Sheridan, Farragut, Stone, Claremont, 79th Street, Plaza, Bluebird, and the following Loew houses: Metropolitan, Victory, Palace, Orpheum, 83d Street, and State of Newark.

International's success in getting such good pictures of the race was due to a bit of strategy worthy of a high military command. Edgar B. Hatrick, the general manager, was in command. Permits were obtained quietly to erect camera stands in several of the best locations just outside of Belmont Park. The stands were not constructed there, however. They were built secretly several blocks away from the race track and mounted on huge trucks like the ancient assault towers used against Babylon.

The trucks were rushed to the selected locations just before the race and too late for the race-track detectives to devise means of putting them out of commission. This surprise attack bewildered those opposing International's work. As a result excellent pictures were obtained of the racing thoroughbreds at several of the critical points of the race—the first and second turns.

Meanwhile other International cameramen had entered the park in disguise, with cameras concealed in automobiles or under coats. These men successfully filmed the race, made shots of the crowd and other close-ups.

The various means taken by the race-track detectives to interfere with International included canvas screens, smoke screens and mirrors reflecting dazzling sunlight. They were futile, however.

Kinograms Also Outwits Its Opponents

DUPLICATING the service furnished regular Kinograms subscribers on the Japanese earthquake, the Kinogram Publishing Corporation, through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., provided their New York customers with prints of the great international race between Zev and Papyrus on the evening of the day of the race, beating other advertised "Specials" to the screen, and showing in four of New York's big first-run houses, as well as four in Newark, on Saturday evening.

The Kinograms racing scenes, all taken on the day of the race, were showing at the Rivoli, Rialto, Capitol and Stanley Theatres, all in the Times Square district of New York, at the 9 o'clock performances of these theatres. The Branford, Rialto, Strand and Goodwin, in Newark, also had the Kinograms racing scenes on their screens at the 9 o'clock show.

As with the scenes of the Japanese disaster, no extra charge was made for these scenes or for this service, as Captain George McL. Baynes, head of Kinogram Publishing Corporation, believes that subscribers to a news reel are entitled to scenes of any news event without extra charge, just as newspaper readers and subscribers are entitled to the big news of the day in their daily papers without extra charge. The scenes of the great race form part of the current issue of Kinograms, and are furnished without extra charge to all Kinograms subscribers.

Alexander Surveys Industry; Tells How to Solve Problems

WILLIAM ALEXANDER returned to New York this week after two months spent on a nation-wide investigation of distribution conditions for Carl Anderson, president of Anderson Pictures Corporation. He spent several weeks in Los Angeles, and, in going and coming, met with exhibitors in over twenty cities and towns throughout the country.

Mr. Alexander is recognized as one of the most practical sales executives in the industry. His experience dates back to the opening of the first Fox exchange outside of New York City. He was later special representative for the United States, and subsequently opened up both South America and Great Britain for that organization. Mr. Alexander is therefore well qualified to visualize conditions on a comprehensive scale, and his report, issued in the form of a statement by the Anderson offices, is worthy of careful consideration.

"There is no question but that, as a class, the exhibitors are today up against it. It is inevitable that the tremendous production costs of the past summer should result in a corresponding jump in the so-called exhibition values, passed on to the exhibitors in the form of higher rentals. It is high time that, in planning production and estimating the potential buying power of the public, the distributors give direct attention to the requirements of the exhibitor and to the facts which his business experience is bringing to light every day. This was brought home to me emphatically by the tremendous interest the theatre owners are showing in the announcements of policy from Anderson Pictures Corporation, which dedicate this organization to a regard for the exhibitors' requirements. The greatest opportunity ever presented in the history of the industry exists today for the organization which will handle good, high-class, exploitable pictures on a basis of really equitable rentals and widespread, available-to-all distribution.

"Production costs are inflated, gross valuations are fictitious. Producers and distributors alike have overstepped the bounds of business reason, and, as usual, the theatre owners are bearing the brunt of the battle.

"By no stretch of reasoning do I mean that the industry should return to picture standards of years ago. Retrogression would be more harmful than over-ambitious progress. But I do contend that, in making their big, fine outstanding pictures, producers should have a clearer understanding of the market. They should be guided more by the barometer of business conditions and prospects than by rosy expectations and hopes. They should serve the market instead of forcing the market to serve them. They should—and they can—make big pictures of wonderful entertainment value at more reasonable costs than they are doing at the present time, with no sacrifice of art or effects. It is a question of economy, of sensible valuations placed upon the component elements going into a picture.

"The story is the thing. A mediocre story may cost a million dollars and it would still be a mediocre piece of entertainment. An interesting story, produced on a sane cost schedule, makes an interesting picture of equal value and of infinitely greater power and possibility for the theatre owners. Such fine pictures can then be sold on a distribution schedule which will serve the requirements of all theatres, irrespective of size or position, on a price schedule that will make them attractive to the exhibitors, and, in the aggregate, achieve the gross figures necessary to assure the producer of his profit.

"This industry, like every other industry, is governed by certain fundamental laws of economics. But the motion picture industry, deluded into, or swept into, a course of overproduction and over-selling, has largely disregarded many of these basic laws. It has largely overlooked the most important link in the chain—the theatre owner. This link is today the weakest. It needs strengthening by careful attention and actual service. Frankly, that's just what Anderson Pictures Corporation is geared up to do. That is the fundamental policy of our organization; our plank, platform and plan."

South America Busy

Rio de Janeiro Opening 4 New Houses; Chances for American Equipment

Washington, D. C.—Several opportunities for American manufacturers of theatre equipment exist in Rio de Janeiro, according to advices just received by the Department of Commerce from Brazil. Four moving picture theatres are about to be built in that city, the report states, to be constructed along the most modern lines, and using the latest types of furnishings and theatre equipment. The capacity of each house will be in the neighborhood of 2,000 persons, and manufacturers of theatre equipment who may be interested can secure further particulars concerning the project from the Specialties Division of the Bureau of Foreign and Domestic Commerce, Washington, or from any of the district or co-operative offices of the Bureau.

Moving pictures are a very popular form of entertainment in Brazil, with American films predominating on the screen. Sao Paulo, the second largest city of the country, has twenty picture houses open seven days a week, with fifteen to twenty thousand paid admissions daily. Moving picture audiences of the better class in Brazil, according to Consul E. M. Lawton, have passed the cowboy stage, and like best society dramas taken from real life. Serial films are popular, but only as interpretations of historical facts, and not too extended.

Ruby Advanced by Pathe

The announcement of O. J. Ruby's appointment as branch manager of the Pathe office in Cleveland was contained in a statement issued this week from the Pathe home office. The assignment of Mr. Ruby to take charge of the Cleveland office is the culmination of a career of meritorious service under the Pathe banner.

Ince Denies Rumor

Thomas H. Ince has no intention of entering the field of theatrical production, despite a report which was recently published that he intended to stage a big musical comedy. He states:

"My interests are centered in motion pictures and I am entirely too busy producing big dramatic pictures to devote any of my time to theatrical production. The report may have been inspired by the fact that I have recently negotiated for the purchase of some big plays. These plays are for pictures."

HARRY SCOTT
New Feature Sales Manager for Pathe

New Pathe Officer

Harry Scott Succeeds W. B. Frank as Feature Sales Manager

An important trade announcement from the Pathe home office this week brings news of the appointment of Harry Scott to succeed W. B. Frank as feature sales manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc. Mr. Scott will enter upon his new duties Monday, October 29, at which time Mr. Frank takes over his new work as eastern representative of the Hal E. Roach studios.

Before becoming associated with the motion picture field, Mr. Scott was for a number of years identified with the theatrical field and served as press agent for the Ringling Brothers Circus for five years, during which time he traveled to every part of the country and made fast friends in the show circles.

His first affiliation in the film industry was with George Kleine, for whom he managed branch offices in Columbus, O.; Dallas, Texas; Philadelphia, Pa., eventually becoming eastern division sales manager of the Kleine organization. His next connection was with Goldwyn for whom he acted as special representative. Later he joined First National and managed its Detroit office for four years, resigning to become branch manager for Pathe in the same city. He returned to New York to become local manager of the Educational Film Exchange office and later was made manager of distribution of the Ritz Carlton Pictures.

Baby Peggy in New York

Baby Peggy Montgomery, the world famous movie starlet, has arrived in New York. This is her first trip east and not only does it mark her initial entrance into Gotham, but marks the celebration of her fifth birthday. The little star, who is now under the Principal Pictures Corporation banner for a period of years, was accompanied by her parents, Mr. and Mrs. Jack Montgomery, her sister and nurse. They are residing at the Biltmore during their stay east.

King on Vacation

Edwin C. King, general manager of the Paramount Long Island studio, is at White Sulphur Springs, Va., for a short vacation. He made the trip in his car and was accompanied by his family.

Michigan Convention Establishes Record for Striking Achievements

Attendance Mark Exceeded—Denniston Elected President—Members Pledge $10,000

HANGING up a record of accomplishments that it has never before equaled, the Jackson convention closed officially Wednesday night, the most remarkable gathering of motion picture theatre owners ever held in Michigan. Despite the fact that all phases of the industry were present, despite the fact that the problems were many and varied, there was not one discordant note struck during the entire three days' gathering.

And as the best evidence that the Theatre Owners of Michigan intend to maintain their title as "the greatest exhibitor organization in the world," on Tuesday afternoon, without perceptible effort or without the slightest coercion, $10,002.50 as voluntary pledges to the organization were made.

Representatives of trade publications, old timers in organization work, were unanimous in their statements that the Jackson meeting will go down in history as the greatest meeting they ever had the privilege of attending.

Joseph R. Denniston, old timer in exhibitor organization in Michigan and one of the best loved exhibitors in the organization, was the unanimous choice of the convention for the next president, taking up the work so admirably carried on by W. S. McLaren, of Jackson.

Who Denniston Is

Joseph R. Denniston, of Monroe, new president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, comes from a town of 12,000. He has been a director of the organization for four years, and by virtue of that experience is thoroughly conversant with the working of the organization. He has played as active a part in the affairs of the association during that time as any member, and holds the record for fidelity at attending directors' meetings.

Mr. Denniston is a fine example of a smaller town showman, assuming the responsibility in his community that he should. He is past president of the Exchange Club of Monroe, is at the present time president of the Monroe Building and Loan Association, and recently had the acceptance or refusal of the honor of nomination for mayor of Monroe tendered him by the biggest men of Monroe, which honor he declined because of his other civic activities.

The Family Theatre, of which he is president and manager, is a fine type of playhouse, a credit to the community and a community center.

Jackson welcomed the exhibitors of Michigan with open arms. Not a stone was left unturned to make the stay a pleasant one, and that they were successful was evident on every hand.

The outstanding features of the convention were the compromise conference between representatives of the association and J. C. Rosenthal, Mr. Hartman and Mr. Dentz, of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, over the Music Tax; the comprehensive plans for assistance on the Admission Tax matter as handled by Claude E. Cady; the assurance given by C. C. Pettijohn, of the Motion Picture Producers and Distributors, that Michigan would be given relief from the non-theatrical booking menace; the comprehensive outline of a program for the building of public good will in Michigan, and the excellent financial standing of the association.

The new officers and directors of the association for the coming year are:

J. R. Denniston, Monroe, President.
Phil Gleichman, Detroit, Vice-President.
H. T. Hall, Detroit, Secretary.
John E. Niebes, Detroit, Treasurer.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

Sam Ackerman, Detroit.
Bert R. Williams, Detroit.
Paul Schlossman, Muskegon.
Vernon Locey, Howell.
W. S. McLaren, Jackson.
James C. Ritter, Detroit.
Claude E. Cady, Lansing.
W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek.
Charles Q. Carlisle, Saginaw.
A. J. Kleist, Pontiac.
G. A. Cross, Battle Creek.

The address of welcome was given by Leland S. Bisbee, city attorney of Jackson, and E. R. Linabury, manager of the Jackson Chamber of Commerce. G. A. Cross then read the report of the Auditing and Budget Committee. The report was that of a certified public accountant and showed that although the organization had had the most active year in its history, had grossed over $32,000 and expended $25,000, and still had a balance of $6,222.09. Mr. Cross went into details regarding this report, explaining each and every item, analyzing the report for the benefit of each member.

J. C. Rosenthal, of the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers, who the night before had held a conference with J. R. Denniston, James C. Ritter and the manager, explained in detail regarding the music tax and the object of the tax. It was finally decided that this matter be left entirely in the hands of Mr. Richey and Mr. Dentz, of the society. Phil Gleichman read the report of the Committee on Constitution and By-Laws and several amendments to the Constitution were made.

Tuesday afternoon was an interesting session. F. G. Minisky, of the Mill Mutuals Company, outlined the fire insurance tie-up. Mr. Burhans, of the same company, explained the importance of expiration dates being furnished, and A. E. Harry, of the General Accident Company, outlined in detail the compensation and public liability tie-up.

H. M. Richey reported the progress on the non-theatrical situation, which, in brief, was that exhibitors who were being unfairly dealt with would be taken care of if they would notify the association office and that the matter would be handled by the association.

The next report was that of the manager, H. M. Richey, who outlined in detail the accomplishments of the association. He pointed out that the showing was only possible through the excellent co-operation and support given, and made suggestions relative to a comprehensive program of public good will on the admission tax, non-theatrical situations, etc. Mr. Richey was given a rising vote of thanks.

One of the interesting features of the convention was the address of Claude E. Cady on the Admission Tax. Mr. Cady read a very carefully prepared analysis of the situation and pointed out among other things that the tax was a war measure, and therefore was made severe; that in 55 per cent. of the cases the theatre owners had absorbed the tax; that the public was having this burden reflected in poorer pictures; that pool halls did not have a tax to pay; that music halls were exempt because they tended to raise music standard; that the seat tax had been raised 100 per cent. and that taxes had been lifted off passes, when they would apply to the man who has to pay his admission.

Blair McElroy, member of the firm of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, of Chicago, who have interests in Michigan, was right on the job to take charge of the dues proposition. An efficient committee, consisting of Mr. McElroy, Mr. Butterfield, Mr. Locey, Mr. Ritter and Mr. Baehr, handled the matter. In less than twenty minutes $10,002.50 was pledged. Scores of exhibitors doubled their pledge. A list of the pledges is attached.

The banquet Tuesday night was a colorful event. At the speaker's table and called on during the evening were President McLaren, J. R. Denniston, toastmaster; Lieutenant Governor Thomas R. Reed, Congressman Robert Clancy, Congressman A. B. Williams, John I. Gibson, of Battle Creek; Charles C. Pettijohn, legal counsel for the Hays organization; Judge Alfred J. Murphy, legal counsel of the Michigan organization, and Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland.

Entertainment was furnished by the Carrell Theatrical Agency, of Chicago, including the seven Brown Sisters, Three Buddies, with three beautiful solo numbers by Mrs. Charles Carrell, of Chicago. Music was also furnished by the Capitol Theatre Orchestra.

In his address Mr. Pettijohn paid tribute to the Michigan organization and deplored "the lack of national association." He discussed mutual problems in a straightforward manner, paying special stress to production and distribution costs, which he said were being lowered.

Judge Murphy delivered his farewell word to the organization, inasmuch as he will assume his duties on the bench January 1. He spoke of the place of the exhibitor in the industry, and showed that he has made a careful study of the exhibitor problems.

He paid high tribute to the association and its work, to the board of directors who were carrying it on, and to Mr. Richey, its manager. Seldom has an address made such a profound impression on the exhibitors of Michigan as Judge Murphy gave, and there were many dimmed eyes when he finished.

After the banquet, an entertainment at the Capitol Theatre, followed by two sparring bouts, was arranged by Mr. McLaren.

Wednesday morning the entire convention assembled were guests of Harry L. Hulburt and Chaplin Hopp, of the Jackson Prison, at a ham and egg breakfast at the prison farm.

The session of Wednesday afternoon was opened by a discussion on the uniform contract by Judge Murphy, with short addresses by Mr. Shreck, of the Exhibitors' Herald; Mr. Mason, Motion Picture News; W. E. Wilkinson, Film Board of Trade; Jacob Smith, Michigan Film Review, and the election of officers. Following the election, Saginaw was selected as the next meeting place.

The following resolutions were passed at the convention: Resolution of thanks to President W. S. McLaren, the Board of Directors, General Manager H. M. Richey, the City of Jackson, Leeland S. Bisbee, Mr. Linabury, Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland; Warden Harry Hulburt and Chaplain Hopp, Judge Alfred J. Murphy, the Entertainment Committee for the ladies, and resolutions relative to the music tax, non-theatrical booking, misleading press agent stories and authorizing a membership campaign.

Special interest during the convention was given to the public good will program as outlined by Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, of Cleveland. Mrs. Derr believes in the approval of good pictures, forgetting the poor ones, and her talks were a big hit at the convention.

The ladies attending the convention had a royal good time arranged for them by President McLaren, including a luncheon given by the Capitol Theatre on Tuesday, a theatre party at the Majestic Theatre, banquet Tuesday evening, entertainment at the Capitol later, with the ham and egg breakfast at the prison, luncheon at the Otsego Wednesday noon, and trips through the Gilbert Candy Works and the Jackson Corset Factory.

Mr. McLaren left nothing in the way to make the visit to Jackson a pleasure and the convention showed it.

During the next few months an active membership campaign will be waged in Michigan to get enrolled under the banner of the association every theatre owner in Michigan. Detailed announcements relative to this will be made later.

The First Semi-Annual

First National Franchise Holders Meet in Indiana

The first semi-annual meeting of the original franchise holders of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., was officially adjourned on Thursday, October 18, after a four day session held at West Baden, Indiana. During the meetings, which were closed, a highly satisfactory report of the company's financial position was presented and future production plans were outlined.

Those present at the meeting were Messrs. H. O. Schwalbe, Robert Lieber, R. A. Rowland, Sam Katz, A. H. Blank, E. V. Richards, Moe Mark, Adolph Ramish, Sol Lesser, W. P. Dewees, R. D. Craver, Sam Spring, E. Mandelbaum, J. B. Clark, George W. Trendle, E. A. Eschman, E. B. Johnson, J. Fabian, A. Fabian, John J. McQuirk, Harry Nolan, Harry Crandall, Col. Fred Levy, Spyros Skouras, M. L. Finkelstein, I. H. Rubin, J. H. Kunsky, C. S. Pinkerton, Tom Saxe and Mr. Hamm.

This meeting was the first semi-annual affair of the First National franchise holders. Heretofore the meetings were held yearly.

A New Branch

Paramount Opens Another Office in Brazil

The thirty-seventh branch office for the distribution of Paramount pictures outside the United States and Canada has just been opened at Juiz de Fora, Brazil. This announcement was made by E. E. Shauer, director of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation now maintains three offices in Brazil—Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo and Juiz de Fora.

Government Finishes Its Case in Paramount Investigation

Company Record Shows Brokers as Largest Stockholders

By TOM WALLER

AFTER practically touring the continent and securing bits of testimony here and there in its investigation of charges made against Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Federal Trade Commission got back to its starting point of many months ago and resumed in New York City hearings which had been adjourned since April last.

The commission, headed by Attorneys Fuller and Hawkins, has put in full days all of this week. Monday morning it was hoped that the Government would have concluded its case by Wednesday, October 24. But Wednesday arrives and there are yet four witnesses to be heard so the prospects for a wind-up on Friday, October 26, are more encouraging.

With the closing of the plaintiff's side of the issue a recess of one month will be taken, during which time the defendant will assemble all points of contention. Robert T. Swaine, chief counsel of the Zukor group, expressed a belief that the defense will not occupy a period in excess of three weeks.

During the last few days of its investigation the commission has gone deep into the history of Famous Players-Lasky. Outstanding among some of the details thus revealed by the court record is the fact that the company has no record of its president, Adolph Zukor, owning a share of either common or preferred stock; and that brokerage concerns are the largest stockholders according to the record. Marcus Loew's testimony is another of the highlights. Thirteen years ago he and Zukor severed business relations and since then it has been each man for his own.

Monday's Session

Twenty-five years ago Marcus Loew and Adolph Zukor were partners in a fur business in downtown Manhattan. Then Loew went into the theatrical world and later was financially assisted, partly by Zukor. Although it was conceded that the Zukor family owned about one per cent. of the stock of Loew, Inc., Marcus Loew, testifying at the hearing on Monday, October 22, before the Federal Trade Commission, declared that since he and Zukor severed business relations thirteen years ago neither has attempted to interfere with or legislate the commercial policy of the other. In other words, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, the Metro group and Loew, Inc., have enjoyed unrestrained and uninfluenced individual government.

Mr. Loew maintained that no partiality had been shown him in booking Famous productions or did the Zukor concern have the preference of Metro films. The distribution of Metro material in Australia and Brazil by Famous was due solely to a business transaction which had been negotiated strictly because of Famous efficiency.

Chief Examiner W. H. Fuller for the commission revealed through Leopold Friedman, secretary and counsel for Loew, Inc., that a Loew stock record dated April 4, 1923, showed Mrs. Adolph Loew as the holder of 6,392 shares of Loew stock and Eugene J. Zukor the possessor of 6,000 shares. With these Mr. Fuller read the names of other Loew stockholders, apparently pertinent to the government issue, which reached a total of about 26,000 shares. The latter constituted but a part of the 1,060,780 shares outstanding divided among 8,000 stockholders, said Robert T. Swaine, of counsel for Famous, in maintaining by the comparison that neither individually nor collectively had the stockholders cited by Mr. Fuller endeavored to control the policy of Loew, Inc., or Metro. In response to a question by Mr. Swaine, the Loew secretary said all of the Loew stockholders had made their purchases with a good investment as the sole motive.

Four other witnesses, whose testimony was of comparatively minor importance to that secured in the early part of the day's proceeding, were interrogated mainly by Gaylord Hawkins, the chief examiner's colleague.

The reorganization of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., established in 1917, into the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in 1920, was brought about by the harmony of the theatre owner members inspiring the expansion in membership, H. O. Schwalbe told Mr. Hawkins.

Under the new association about 3,300 theatres are now amalgamated, whereas under the original combine but 600 at the most were fraternized, he stated. The witness is the president of the Electric Theatre Supply Company, located in Philadelphia, of which he claimed he is the owner of practically the entire capital stock.

Elek J. Ludvigh of the Famous New York office said that although Mr. Zukor is president of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation he is less than a figurehead in that capacity and that the home office is little concerned about it. This corporation, he stated, was organized with theatre acquisition as the forethought and capitalized at $4,000,000 which was to be disposed of to Dominion residents. The stock sales fell short of $1,000,000 and of this amount Famous Players-Lasky invested $750,000, more as a compulsory obligation than an investment, he stated.

Concerning United States activities, Mr. Ludvigh said that Famous is contemplating the erection on the Putnam site, New York, of a theatre whose architectural design will be similar to that of the Capitol, except that it will be a smaller house than this Manhattan movie hippodrome. The other plan is for a theatre on the English Hotel site in Indianapolis, he stated.

It was brought out by Mr. Fuller that the Nanuet Holding Corporation was merged into Famous in 1917, and that Famous owns all of the common stock of Charles Frohman, Inc. In addition to this and since April 4, 1923, according to the witness, Famous Players-Lasky has acquired fifty per cent. interest in the Fairfax, Fairfax, Va.; lease on the Community, Miami; the Sugg and Kozy theatres, Chickasha, Okla.; the Graphic, Bangor, Me.; the Capitol, Pittsfield, Mass.; and fifty per cent. interest in the Criterion, Oklahoma City. Mr. Ludvigh's testimony further shows that Famous now owns outright the Metropolitan, Grauman and Rialto in Los Angeles; that seven theatres owned or controlled by Southern Enterprises have been sold since April; and that the organization has taken a lease on McVicker's house in Chicago.

The booking situation in Philadelphia was gone into with considerable detail by S. E. Applegate, United Artists manager there. Going over a list of twenty-one theatres, Mr. Applegate stated they were mostly under the Stanley control.

Certain dates which he had specified in his testimony at a Boston hearing were corrected by John E. Eames of Littleton, New Hampshire. This witness was formerly in the employ of Alfred S. Black.

Tuesday's Session

Who owns the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation? Is was obvious that the commencement of the second day of the proceeding, Tuesday, October 23, had, for the Federal Trade Commission, resolved itself into this question. The closing of this session showed that "on record" Adolph Zukor owns not a single share of common or preferred; that the total capital stock held and listed "on record" by eighteen members of the Board of Directors sums up about 9,378 shares, and that over 62,000 shares are credited to the titles of nine concerns of stock brokers.

This comprises in part the approximate 225,000 shares of capital stock issued and outstanding of the bulk of 450,000 authorized shares. In divulging these figures, relative to the financial status of the Famous Players-Lasky Company as sought out by Chief Examiner Fuller, Elek J. Ludvigh, treasurer and secretary of the organization, said that it was impossible to procure a record of the real owner of each share of stock and that there were on issue thousands of shares whose owners are unknown. He explained "unknown" by adding, as far as the record is concerned.

Prior to the organizing of the old Famous Company in 1913 Mr. Ludvigh, the chief witness of Tuesday's hearing, testified that he was Mr. Zukor's personal attorney. Except for drawing his will the witness said he did nothing of note for Zukor until he drafted the company's certificate of incorporation and entered its legal department. Arthur H. Friend incorporated the Jesse Lasky Company and when the organizations were amalgamated he joined the barrister force until the time came when he accepted the treasurership. Ludvigh said that he did not know whether Friend made this move to avoid a "clash" or whether it was because he preferred the business end of the game.

The witness said that he then headed the Famous legal department. He also mentioned, under examination by Mr. Fuller, that he incorporated the People's Vaudeville Company for Mr. Loew fifteen years ago. Until about three years ago he said he represented in barrister capacity that company and Mr. Loew, while for a part of that period he also represented Mr. Zukor.

Mr. Ludvigh admitted that he was a Loew stockholder. He explained that it had not been of his own seeking but that Loew at the time "couldn't" pay him his yearly salary of $1,000 for his legal advice and so instead of cash presented him with shares of stock in the Loew organization.

The record of owners of stock shares referred to by Mr. Fuller was dated September of this year. Mr. Fuller produced a letter alleged to have been written by the witness in September, 1920, in which the ten largest stockholders and their holdings were mentioned. It credited Mr. Zukor with being included as the possessor of 15,163 shares in June of that year. Asked as to what had become of those shares, according to the latest record which establishes Mr. Zukor with having nothing in hand, the Famous official replied that this could easily be accounted for by the fact that the amount of one's holdings often fluctuates from month to month.

Questioned as to whether it was necessary to be a stockholder in order to be eligible to sit on the Board of Directors, Mr. Ludvigh replied that he could not recall if such a provision was in the company's charter but that the statutory requirement for a director of a corporation to hold from five to eight shares of stock had become invalidated about eight years ago.

Considerable quibbling ensued when Mr. Fuller pressed the witness for details of the report which credited Mr. Zukor with having no stock in his own company. This in substance was:

Mr. Zukor owns not a dollar's worth of stock? the witness was asked.

The record shows he owns nothing. It is impossible to state the complete list of stockholders. Thousands of shares may be in brokers' hands. Finding out the owner would depend entirely upon the broker's practice. Sometimes brokers transfer shares to the names of clerks, Mr. Ludvigh replied.

No dividend was paid to Mr. Zukor in October?

The witness replied in the negative.

You personally do not know whether Mr. Zukor owns one dollar's worth of stock?

The witness hesitated and then replied: Not to testify about. I've had my impressions.

Do you know whether the stock Mr. Zukor had in June, 1920, was taken off the company's books?

Again the reply was in the negative.

You don't know what broker might have received them?

Mr. Ludvigh retorted: I have impressions but really could not say.

Mr. Fuller brought out that Mrs. Lottie Zukor, wife of the Famous official, owns 1,500 shares and Zukor's son, Eugene, and grandson, Eugene Adolph Zukor, 1,000 shares each.

Reaching the list of directors, Mr. Fuller observed that in September, 1920, Jesse Lasky possessed 3,530 shares of common stock and that for September of this year he owns but 300. The drop was attributed by Mr. Ludvigh to a fluctuation.

It was unearthed that in Mr. Zukor's class of owning no stock, according to the record, were Directors Maurice Wertheim, Felix A. Kahn, Sir William Wiseman and Harold B. Franklin.

On record with an average minimum of 100 and maximum of two or three thousand, some in preferred, others in common and a few in both, are: Directors William H. English, Fred G. Lee, Frank A. Garbutt, Theodore F. Whitmarsh, Gayer G. Dominick (under the firm name of Dominick & Dominick), Mr. Ludvigh, Jules E. Brulatour, Cecil deMille, Albert A. Kaufman, Daniel Frohman, Sidney R. Kent, Emile Shauer, Ralph H. Kahn.

The witness conceded that as far as the record goes stock brokers at the present are the largest holders of stock. Among the brokerage concerns on the Famous share record are: Halle and Stieglitz, Harriman Company, Hutten and Company, Keech and Company, McClure, Jones and Reid, Pane, Webber, Post and Flagg, Rothschild and Company, Seligsberg.

The remainder is unissued stock and is locked up in the safe of the organization, Mr. Ludvigh stated. In response to Mr. Fuller's interrogation he said the company has no voting trust to handle the stock. He added for the record that preferred stock has a conversion privilege so that an amount of common stock has to be reserved for such conversion.

Harold B. Franklin, who was called during a previous hearing, explained what he said was a form for a tentative contract which he maintained was used only by Southern Enterprises. The witness, who is in charge of Famous's theatre department, said that he never made contracts but in some instances approved them. He stated that this form, an innovation in his department a few months ago, was used by the office as a memorandum. He explained that it is an aid in selecting a picture which would meet with all of the requirements of the town where a showing is being contemplated.

Wednesday's Session

Al Lichtman's knowledge of the industry was tested from Portland, Me., to Seattle, Washington, with many stops in between, by Counselor Hawkins, who conducted the Federal Trade Commission investigation today, Wednesday, October 24. The witness, one time head of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, specified, under direct examination, what he considered first class first run theatres in a good number of the chief cities on the continent.

The term first class, Lichtman told Attornely Swaine for the defendant during a period of cross-examination, is a matter of comparative valuation—that the worst picture house on Broadway, New York, might be the best in "Oshkosh."

Mr. Swaine asked the witness if it were not true that statisticians in listing first class first run houses often vary in such listing from 100 to 900 theatres. Lichtman replied that such judgment was more a matter of individual interpretation and such theatres he had picked for the first rank had been gauged accordingly.

Capacity, price, architecture, quality of the picture and music for a large part go to make up such a house, he stated. He nodded affirmatively when Mr. Swaine asked him if in this respect the real thing was not the operator's showmanship. As an illustration, two houses with all of the former qualities might be standing side by side in the same city and yet one might be ranked in class ahead of the other. In such a case he said the lacking asset of the second house was the proprietor's ability to put the bill across.

No theatre where vaudeville is a part of the bill is recognized by the witness as a first class first run house. A house with a mixed policy cannot afford to pay the price for a film that a theatre specializing in movies can, he testified. The vaudeville makes up a big item in the expense account and lessens the percentage. Many go to such a theatre who are interested solely in the vaudeville, thereby creating a mixed audience in such a theatre, he pointed out.

In regard to good showmanship being a requirement for a top grade house, Lawyer Hawkins sought to break down Lichtman's testimony. He referred to the fact that many managers of the houses which Lichtman had placed in this category earlier in the hearing conducted houses which the witness had termed second raters. Under cross questioning by Swaine, Lichtman corrected this version by stating that overseers of topnotchers conducted some other houses on a different basis, taking into consideration the type of audience and the percentage which would be realized from the same.

Lichtman admitted that at the April hearing in this investigation he had testified that he had undergone considerable difficulty in selling pictures in the south. Since Famous Players acquired Southern Enterprises he stated he has been able to dispose of his product without any trouble and with considerable satisfaction. He stated that he has sold this season's output of fifteen features in the south, on a percentage basis ranging from 20 to 25 per cent.

"Did Franklin try to compel you to break contracts with competitive houses?" Attorney Swaine queried in regard to Famous's southern acquisition.

Lichtman replied that no attempt at coercion was made and that the negotiations were such as had met his own trade situation. The witness said that his last Broadway, New York, picture was "The Broken Wing," shown at the Rialto, of which he realized seventeen and one-half per cent. of the gross receipts.

In the opinion of W. W. Hodkinson, who was the sole witness during the afternoon session, Marguerite Clark was as good an actress as Mary Pickford when he severed connections with Paramount as its president in June, 1916. This belief was divulged when Lawyer Hawkins asked the witness if he did not believe at that time that Mary Pickford was Paramount's greatest actress.

The last conference which Mr. Hodkinson said he had had with Mr. Zukor before leaving Paramount was in January, 1916, when he advocated that Mary Pickford be granted a raise. This, he said, was presented before the Board of Directors and necessitated an advance in the price of Pickford pictures.

The merging of Famous Players, Jesse Lasky and Bosworth took place in 1916 when Paramount introduced, he said, the first five reel picture innovation. Hitherto companies had been making pictures ranging from one to three reels. The present day discrimination between features and short subjects was not then recognized, he testified, and Paramount had to compete in the same market with the shorter subjects. Mr. Hodkinson assented to a question by Mr. Swaine that as Paramount progressed in its five reel subjects competing companies fell in line and paid more attention to the bigger footage.

Prior to the merger Paramount acted as distributor for Bosworth and Lasky, it was brought out by Mr. Swaine. Also in this respect it was recorded that five other companies then distributed through Mutual.

No Enormous Salaries

Lesser Denies Stars Are Paid Exorbitantly

Sol Lesser, whose activities in the motion picture field should qualify him to speak with authority on practically any subject pertaining to that industry, now comes to the front with the statement that reports concerning gigantic salaries paid motion picture stars are entirely unfounded.

"The motion picture industry," says Lesser, "is just like any other legitimate business. It must be maintained on a business basis at all times, and these rumors and reports of fabulous salaries paid stars and players of the silent drama cannot be taken too seriously.

"The report that Baby Peggy Montgomery signed a contract with Principal Pictures Corporation, of which I am president, at a yearly salary exceeding $1,000,000 is entirely out of reason and unfounded. The motion picture industry cannot afford to pay any such price to any star—if it wanted to remain in business any length of time."

Joe Brandt Says Wall Street Millions Menace the Industry

THAT Wall Street millions poured into the motion picture producing companies, have lowered production standards and made it difficult for an independent producer to survive, is the charge made by Joe Brandt, president of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

"I look for a return to a production monopoly similar to that of the producers of General Film Company days," states Mr. Brandt. "There is the same affinity of interest between the Wall Street-financed producers of today as existed amongst the Patents Company producers.

"It will be remembered that the latter producers were independent and were competitive for many years until financial reasons made it wise for them to consolidate their interests. This is happening amongst the Wall Street financed companies of today. They have been spending money extravagantly in production that cannot possibly pay out, and the spirit of amalgamation is in the air.

"The independent producers cannot meet the competition of high finance. I say that the independent producer is the only one today who is making pictures at anything like a fair cost, but what does this matter when the wastage of the Wall Street producers is quickly made up by the sale of additional stock or securing tremendous loans from their banker friends?

"The independent companies are fighting the battle of their lives today but they are getting very poor aid from the exhibitors for the risks they are taking and the product they are building.

"A poor picture may be widely exploited as has been done by Wall Street, and the exhibitor is buncoed in believing that it is a big picture and he pays big money for it, and when he has run it and counted up his receipts, he finds he has taken a loss. Occasionally he puts up a squawk and he gets a rebate in the form of another picture —not cash—but a picture that was made under Wall Street auspices, and they can well afford to give a rebate in the form of a free run on this picture because nine chances out of ten the exhibitor wouldn't have booked it anyway. And I venture to say that a great many times when the exhibitor does get a good rebate picture, it's a picture that was acquired by the Wall Street-financed concern from an independent producer.

"In my opinion the handwriting is on the wall. The exhibitors must take the situation seriously in hand and begin to realize that the more they support independent pictures the quicker they are going to be able to make the Wall Street-financed producing unit bring down their cost of production and make pictures on a basis that will insure reasonable rentals. Unless the exhibitor is willing to do this, the independent's fight is useless and he might as well give up the field to the Wall Street-financed organizations, and let the exhibitors take their chances as to what the result will be."

J. Gordon Edwards Tells of Picture Activities Abroad

J. GORDON EDWARDS, the dean of the William Fox directors, has returned from a three months' pleasure trip through France, Austria and Italy. He was accompanied by Mrs. Edwards and his son, Gordon, who has appeared in a number of the Fox pictures directed by his father. Mr. Edwards keeps a car in Italy, where he spent a year and a half making part of "The Shepherd King," and before that "The Queen of Sheba." The Edwards' party motored through Rome, Verona, Florence and other towns in the Romeo and Juliet country, and sailed for home from Naples.

"I was much surprised," remarked Mr. Edwards during a recent interview, "by the great change I noticed all through Italy and the wonders accomplished by Mussolini. Not that I favor Fascism, but the country has improved 500 per cent. since the last time I was there."

In Austria the Fox director saw the making of a big spectacle, "Messallina." The company producing the picture had obtained permission to use the Imperial grounds in Vienna for some of the scenes. In Italy "Quo Vadis" is being made by the U. C. I. company. The organization rented the buildings and equipment at one of the annual fairs in Rome, following its close, and took many of their scenes there while Mr. Edwards was present. Emil Jannings, who is well-known to American audiences, is playing the role of Nero. Several important pictures are being made in Austria and Italy but, according to the American director, the two mentioned above are the biggest. The banks in these countries are very friendly toward the producers and are helping them in making big pictures.

"American pictures are greatly in demand throughout Italy," continued Mr. Edwards. "I met Louis Lenine, the Fox European manager, who was in Rome selecting a site for a new exchange. Mr. Lenine tells me that many of the Fox pictures will be shown at the Castanza Theatre, the great national theatre in Rome."

Mr. Edwards, who will soon start a big special at the New York Fox studios, was asked if he believed in making American productions abroad. "Not unless I can take an American cast from this country," he replied. "The certainty of obtaining the right atmosphere and also of keeping down production costs are important considerations, but I prefer our own brand of actors. Poli Negri and Emil Jannings are the only two stars the motion pictures have recruited from Europe. Valentino cannot be considered because he is a product of America and American motion picture development."

Music Society Warns

No Rights Waived, It Says, During Negotiations With M. P. T. O. A.

The American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers announces that, during negotiations with the M. P. T. O. A., it does not waive any rights as to public performances of the works copyrighted by its members, and that the mere fact negotiations looking toward a settlement of differences is under way does not confer upon any unlicensed theatre a right in the interim to play the society's music.

"No information, so far as our advices go," says the statement, "justifying any such construction of the arrangements made has been issued by either this office or the M. P. T. O. A., yet in many cases exhibitors are stating to our representatives that they 'understand' nothing is to be done until the conferences are over."

Annual Meeting Held

Chicago Film Board of Trade Elects Officers and Reviews Work

The annual meeting of the Chicago Film Board of Trade, held this week at their offices, Standard Oil Building, was marked by the election of officers for the ensuing year. Edwin Silverman, outgoing president, was re-elected by a unanimous vote. Other elections are as follows:

Vice-President, J. L. Friedman, Celebrated Players Corp.; Secretary, H. L. Hollander, Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan; Treasurer, I. Maynard Schwartz, Educational.

Board of Directors: F. C. Aiken, Pathe Exchange, Inc.; C. E. Bond, Associated First National; S. Meyer, Fox Film Corp.; J. Sampson, Film Booking Offices; R. Simmons, W. W. Hodkinson Corp.

The annual meeting was attended by the board's full complement. Following the disposal of regular business, nominations for the office of president were opened, with the subsequent election of Mr. Silverman. Coincident with the nomination of Mr. Silverman special mention was made of the unqualified success achieved by the local board, through the untiring efforts of its president, to faithfully serve the best interests of both exchange and exhibitors. Various speakers lauded the sagacity and fairmindedness of Mr. Silverman in his efforts to reconcile differences between the two factors, and also commented upon the state of efficiency the board had attained during his régime.

Installation of officers will be held at the board's annual banquet and dance on Friday, November 9, at the East Room of the Hotel La Salle. Prominent executives and stars are expected to be on hand to supplement a splendid program of entertainment arranged by I. Maynard Schwartz.

Kane Going to Coast

Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, expects to leave for Los Angeles within a week or ten days. He intends to look after production and distribution matters.

Safron Succeeds Flynn

Jerry Safron, one time New York manager of the Robertson-Cole exchange and more recently special representative of the Film Booking Offices has succeeded J. Flynn as manager of the Philadelphia exchange for the F. B. O. Mr. Flynn will take over the management of two theatres in New Jersey.

Goldwyn Restricted in Use of His Name According to Court Ruling

SAMUEL GOLDWYN, former head of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, was, on October 18, enjoined from releasing motion pictures under the Goldwyn name unless he makes it clear that the productions were not made by the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation. He is directed to use the word "not connected with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation" in display type in his advertisements.

Evidently Judge Learned Hand, who issued the injunction, sympathizes with the plight in which Mr. Goldwyn now finds himself with respect to his right to use his assumed name in business judging from several comments made in the opinion filed in the United States District Court. The decision does not pass on the merits of the controversy, and the injunction is only a preliminary one pending the final determination of the litigation.

"A self-made man may prefer a self-made name," remarked Judge Hand, alluding to the fact that Mr. Goldwyn had changed his familial name of Gelbfisch or Goldfish to Goldwyn. "Under circumstances like these at bar it appears to me that Goldwyn, who has familiarized the public—with the acquiescence of the plaintiff—with that name, has as much right to complain of its loss as though he had not inherited the less euphonious Gelbfisch or its equivalent, Goldfish."

Judge Hand expressed the opinion that Mr. Goldwyn had played a prominent part in building up the business of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, and alluded to the fact that it was not contradicted that he had adopted the name of Goldwyn at the suggestion of his business associates at a time when the company was not involved in any trouble.

Mr. Goldwyn had stated in affidavits that he resigned as president of the corporation on September 2, 1920, at a time when negotiations were under way to induce Dupont to invest new capital, and the latter was averse to doing so if Mr. Goldwyn remained as the head of the company. The negotiations fell through, however, Mr. Goldwyn declared, and he succeeded in interesting other financiers to invest capital in the business, with the result that his contract with the corporation was renewed, and he continued as head of the corporation under the provisions of a contract executed October 22, 1920.

Mr. Goldwyn's last contract expired on October 10, 1922, but it contained a clause prohibiting him from engaging in the motion picture business, and the present suit to enjoin him from using the name Goldwyn is based on this clause. Judge Hand did not pass on this question finally in the present decision.

"If there were any suspicion that the defendant had adopted his name in 1918 because he contemplated using it as he now proposes he could be enjoined," declared Judge Hand. "This would be true because it would then be apparent that he had no interest in the name to protect other than its use to take away the plaintiff's customers. There is, however, no ground for any such suspicion. The proof is uncontradicted that the suggestion came to him from his co-adventurers in the plaintiff's predecessor at a time when no trouble was brewing and when, so far as appears, he had no thought of its competitive use.

"A new name, when honestly assumed and worn, may well be of as much or nearly as much consequence to its bearer as though it were familial," continued Judge Hand. "Our names are useful or dangerous to us according to the associations they carry among those who hear them. If we have by our past conduct established a good-will which attaches to the name that is an interest, pecuniary or honorific, of which we may well object to being deprived, and which may exceed in value that which we inherited."

Bow Wow Wow!!!

Tuckahoe's population has taken a terrible jump since Clem Kracht, of the Moving Picture World's advertising department, abandoned his Manhattan apartment for an adobe dwelling in that village, noted in the past for its cock fights and in the present for its desire to become a "be-eg city."

The other night Mr. Kracht, after a futile search in the neighboring garbage cans, found Mrs. Kracht's pet mongrel with fourteen new sons and daughters under a neighbor's porch.

Anyone in the industry, Mr. Kracht announces, who wants a good, live, healthy pup can have one free of cost and parcel post and at the same time do a great service, as the Kracht fresh air ranch was not intended for a dog farm.

Receiver for Triangle

Bankruptcy Proceedings Filed Against Firm by Three Creditors

The Triangle Film Corporation, which was formerly one of the largest distributing organizations in the motion picture industry, passed into the hands of a receiver on October 17 following the institution of bankruptcy proceedings against the corporation in the United States District Court.

Percival L. Waters, who is well known in the industry, and who has practically been in charge of the company's business for the past four years, was appointed receiver under a bond of $10,000 by Judge Learned Hand upon the request of a majority of the creditors.

When Mr. Waters assumed charge of the company's affairs in 1919 the company owed approximately $2,680,000, but under his management the liabilities have been gradually liquidated, with the result that upwards of $2,000,000 of the former indebtedness has been paid off and substantial assets remain to meet existing claims.

The Triangle Film Corporation owns practically all of the capital stock of the New York Motion Picture Corporation and the Reliance Motion Picture Corporation. The New York Motion Picture Corporation controls the Keystone Film Company, and the three companies are creditors for about $1,000,000 each.

At one time the Triangle Film Corporation handled the productions of Douglas Fairbanks, Norma Talmadge and William Hart among others.

Building New Theatre

The Suffolk Amusement Company, of Suffolk, Va., is to erect a 500-seat house exclusively for colored people. It is to be ready by December 1, and is to be devoted to pictures and vaudeville. The company will also remodel the Fotosho Theatre at a cost of $25,000, increasing the seating capacity to 1,200.

Brown Married

Announcement is made of the marriage of Colvin W. Brown, Eastern Representative of Thos. H. Ince, and Pearl Marion Clark, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. D. E. Sayler of Elgin, Ill.

Film Exports Heavy

Continue to Maintain Their Recent Average of 15,000,000 Feet Monthly

Washington, D. C.—Exports of motion picture film continue to maintain their recent average of 15,000,000 feet a month, figures compiled by the Department of Commerce for the month of August showing that we exported in that month 1,164,002 linear feet of raw stock, valued at $31,408; 826,457 feet of negative film, with a value of $68,442, and 12,161,066 feet of positive film, worth $461,837.

By far the best market for positive film during the month was Australia, which country imported 2,625,244 feet, valued at $109,907. However, England, Canada and Brazil each imported more than a million feet of film, although in no case was the value of the film exported to those countries more than $60,000. The best market for both raw stock and negative films was England, whose imports included 404,721 feet of raw stock, valued at $8,995, and 245,063 feet of negatives, valued at $35,640.

To Visit Coast Studio

Abe Warner Practically Recovered from Illness

Warner Brothers' home office announces that Abe Warner has practically recovered from the illness that kept him in the hospital for six weeks, and, following a short recuperative period at Atlantic City, he will journey to the West Coast studio for a much needed rest and a general inspection on matters pertaining to future productions and general distribution.

While on the coast Mr. Warner will confer with H. M. Warner regarding the ten productions that have already been completed for this season and the different productions that are now facing the batteries of cameras.

Kane, Jr., Marries

Arthur S. Kane, Jr., son of the president of Associated Exhibitors, and himself a member of the publicity staff, was married in New Haven last Friday to Miss Flavia A. Cavanaugh of that city.

Press Book Tells How to Campaign For the Big Day

One of the finest exhibitor aids that could have been gotten out for National Motion Picture Day appears in the form of a press book replete with advertising and publicity suggestions and showing facsimiles of special free slides and posters. These latter are shown elsewhere in this issue.

"Devoted to the prestige and profit of your theatre" is the slogan that shows on the front page of the press sheet. "Exhibitors, this is your BIG DAY. Make the day make friends for you," is the advice under it. Within, under the caption, "The Big Idea Behind the Big Day," is an outline of the intents and advantages of observing National Motion Picture Day.

Then come the helpful hints. Exhibitors are suggested ways and means of obtaining the co-operation of city and town officials and organizations. Slogans are offered, and a compete campaign of publicity. A special insert in green describes how heartily New Jersey exhibitors are working out the project. There is copy for a postcard campaign, a contest idea for newspaper publicity, a program reader, a sample letter to be mailed prominent local folk, and street exploitation ideas. All in all, it's a helpful book for the exhibitor intent on putting over National Motion Picture Day with a bang.

Austria Turns From German Films to Productions Made in America

By W. STEPHEN BUSH

VIENNA, August 31.

ANOTHER recent and complete convert to the American film is the New Austria. When the Austrian crown was a subject for the jesting paragrapher and sold at wall paper prices, the German film dominated the Austrian film market, for the mark was closest to the crown in financial degradation and debility. Thus in the first three months of the current year about ninety per cent. of the films imported into Austria came from Germany, the rest from various other countries, ours being represented by about five per cent.

Austria Able to Buy

Like all the rest of Europe Austria was fond of our films but it could not pay for them and thus reluctantly it settled down to the heavy film diet supplied by Berlin and Munich. Its own producing ventures were then in a very primitive state and unable to compete seriously with the foreign product. Then the Allies took hold of Austria, stopped its foolish political wrangling and put the exploitation of its natural and economic resources on a sound basis. Thereupon the crown began to improve and now it has become stabilized at about 70,000 crowns for a dollar while you can buy six millions of German marks for the same price. Though they could now buy in the cheapest and nearest market in the world the Austrians distinctly turned away from German films. An estimate made for me by a competent authority shows that the imports from abroad within the last six months indicate an immense gain of the American over the German and every other foreign film, the proportion being about forty against five in favor of films originating in the United States. Fox has established an office in Vienna and there are reports of an overwhelming demand for his productions. This has naturally stimulated the demand for American films all along the line. It is true that the new Austria is a small country, scarcely as large as Belgium in point of population. Vienna however wholly lost its importance as a great distributing station between the West and the East. Moreover its taste in all matters of art is still taken seriously even by those states that detest Austria as a political entity. The result is that films with a successful run in Vienna to their credit acquire a prestige all down the Danube to the very gates of Constantinople.

Judge Us by Films

Having now travelled around and about the Continent of Europe for something like two years, always interested in what concerns the world of films, I may perhaps be permitted to offer an opinion touching the influence of the American films on the European and more particularly the Continental mind. Let me say at the outset that nothing next to the Great War has helped the European to discover us like our films. In every conceivable way the American film is our greatest advertising medium in Europe as indeed all over the world. To properly judge of the effect of our films on the mind of Continental Europe two things must be considered: first, the so-called better classes and the great aggregation of self-discovered highbrows do not as a rule go to the motion picture theatre; second, the classes that do go take the pictures very seriously and are eager for instruction no less than for entertainment. It would be idle to deny that the effect on the masses which are constantly growing in political power has been very great indeed. It will grow in volume as time goes on. Instead of the absurd notions propagated by romantic but mendacious editors, which made the United States seem like a huge and disorderly dime museum in the eyes of the European nations, our European friends begin to get glimpses of the real America—first of its bigness and its strong national feeling. Slowly but surely the Continental mind, begins to absorb the astounding fact that there is a vast country across the water where one may travel for four days from one end to the other on fast trains without a passport and without a custom house, using but one language and enjoying equal rights and privileges as citizens of a commonwealth numbering over a hundred million people. No medium of visualization brings this tremendous fact home to even the simplest mind quite as strikingly and quite as convincingly as the screen. It is indeed a revelation. More than one distinguished writer in the European press might be quoted on the power of our films in instilling new views and conceptions of life into the European mind. It has been said that the American head shows a depression where the bump of reverence ought to be. I might add that on the other hand the bump of humor is abundantly developed. Now this humor, which according to his own confession not even Mark Twain could make intelligible to the European mind and from which one translator after another has turned away in weariness and despair has been explained completely on the screen. The European Continent is still overburdened in every walk of life with a ballast of false dignity and useless dignity, often the outward symptoms of dry rot. American humor has "shown up" the silliness of all this stuff and has brightened the European mind where it needed brightening most.

Roy Crawford, After Survey, Predicts Big Year for Films

ROY CRAWFORD, vice-president and treasurer of Associated Exhibitors, returning to New York this week from a trip through the Middle West and the Mississippi Valley, predicted an unusually good year in both the theatrical and picture industries. He based his opinions on expressions made to him by exhibitors in several states.

Mr. Crawford's trip was made primarily to inspect his theatrical, banking and other business interests in Topeka, Wichita, and other cities in Kansas and Missouri.

En route the Associated official called at the offices of the organization in Chicago, St. Louis and Kansas City, and conferred with the branch sales managers.

"In every case I found these men more than enthusiastic over the prospects for the coming year," said Mr. Crawford on his return to New York. "Associated's product is enjoying an unprecedented demand on the part of leading exhibitors.

"This feeling of optimism is shared by all the exhibitors with whom I conferred, and I took the opportunity to meet as many as possible. The business situation generally throughout the Middle West is rapidly approaching the normal conditions which prevailed before the war, and it is inevitable that the existing prosperity should be reflected in the entertainment field."

Gain Wage Rise

Following conferences of several weeks' duration, projectionists in Albany, N. Y., have been granted a ten dollar a week increase in wages under a two-year contract, all other conditions remaining the same as in the past. The adjustment of differences between the theatre owners and the projectionists will now give the the latter $45 a week and an eight-hour day for six days a week, Albany not having Sunday movies.

The operators had demanded $50 a week, a six-hour day, two men to the booth, and a one-year contract. At first the theatre owners attempted a compromise at $42 a week.

Philadelphia Hopeful

Looks for Settlement at New York Conference

The City of Brotherly Love, which took a prominent part in defending exhibitors in some sixty suits brought by the American Society of Authors, Composers and Publishers, is hopeful that its efforts at pacification will be successful. At a conference to be held in New York this week, which will be attended by George P. Aarons, secretary of the M. P. T. O. A. and of the Philadelphia branch, and also its counsel, it is hopeful that the differences which have lasted six years will be overcome.

The moving picture interests contend that they are doing for nothing a work of publicity for the publishers and authors, and particularly in the smaller towns are popularizing musical productions more effectively than is done in the larger centers by song boosters and paid performers, and that in many instances they have actually established the fame and sale of productions.

The American Society contends that the productions are copyrighted and therefore that the theatre owner should pay a royalty. It is understood that a mutually satisfactory plan has been worked out and that it needs only the confirmation of the conference this week to make it effective.

Non-Theatrical Competition Serious in Michigan, Theatre Owners Agree

NON-THEATRICAL competition, the admission tax problem and the building of public good will were important subjects of discussion at the fourth annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Michigan, held at Jackson, Mich., October 16 and 17.

The convention was attended by 200 exhibitors of the state and all showed interest and enthusiasm in the organization. Reports showed the association to be in a flourishing condition. A healthy growth in membership was reported for the past year, and the financial report showed expenditures of more than $32,000, with a cash balance on hand at the time of the convention of more than $6,000.

The financing of this organization is partially taken care of by pledges made by the members. Out of $14,000 pledged for the year just closed, more than $12,000 was paid into the treasury. When exhibitors were asked for their pledges for the ensuing year, more than $8,000 was raised in about ten minutes.

In his annual report, H. M. Richey, manager of the association, stated that the exhibitors had gone into convention with the largest cash balance ever reported by an exhibitor association. He spoke of the establishment of an insurance department saving the exhibitor 40 per cent., and also mentioned that no legislation detrimental to the theatrical men's interests had been placed on the statute books of Michigan during the past year.

The non-theatrical situation, he declared, is very serious. In some instances, he said, the small exhibitor is being put out of business by this competition. He suggested a classification of films to be submitted to theatrical and non-theatrical interests as a partial remedy for the difficulty, the non-theatrical enterprises to run only the films of a religious or educational nature.

The building of public good will was stressed as an important problem of the theatre owner. Mr. Richey stated that the standards by which people who do not go to the theatre judge films should be changed and this class of people should be reached and made into picture fans.

Mrs. Emily Derr, of Cleveland, president of the Cinema Club of that city, also touched upon this problem in her address. She explained the operation of the Cinema Club, which is composed of representatives from all clubs, church groups, religious groups, civic organizations and any known club in the entire community. She stated that these representatives by indorsing and boosting good pictures, helped the exhibitor by backing him in his demands for something better and helped the producer by letting him know the desires of the public. Such an organization, she said, also helped the exhibitor at the box office as it enabled him to reach all classes, her contention being that pictures which do not appeal to some classes have a big appeal for others.

A statement made by Mrs. Derr which met with the hearty accord of the exhibitor was that little children have no place in the theatre. "The theatre has been the nursery too long," she stated, "and it is time the women found it out. The theatre is an adult amusement. The usual program is too long for little children and children from 10 years old to the adolescent age should have their entertainment chosen for by their parents."

Claude E. Cady, of Lansing, Mich., presented the problem of the admission tax. This tax, he explained, being a war measure, was far more severe than such a tax would have been under ordinary circumstances. He cited the excellent support given the government by theatre men during the war and the custom still prevailing of supplying entertainment for disabled veterans. "Other emergency measures have been lifted," he said, "but the theatre man, already burdened with many taxes, still is paying the admission tax. The exhibitor plays an important part in the molding of public opinion and should not be hampered. Better entertainment will be possible if he is given relief from this tax, and relief is needed up to 50 cent admissions.

C. C. Pettijohn, representative of the Hays organization at the convention, spoke Tuesday evening at the annual banquet, saying that by next year he hoped to see a good national organization functioning fairly and representing the exhibitors frankly and fairly. Bigger, cleaner and higher grade pictures are in demand, he stated, but to satisfy this demand the three branches of the industry must put their cards on the table. Cost of distribution will be diminished next year, he stated, by the organization of film boards of trade throughout the country. All producing companies will be working on production schedule next year, he declared, and the cost of production will be diminished from seven to ten millions of dollars.

"Many exhibitors run up the cost of pictures by buying pictures they never expect to play. The exhibitor who ties up a town by refusing to buy pictures except at his own prices is not fair, but the exhibitor who is willing to pay a fair price for his films should not be made to suffer competition with schools and churches."

The non-theatrical problem was classed by Mr. Pettijohn as one of the most serious facing the producer. He also stated that some of the present methods of publicity, termed by him "foolish and inane," were detrimental to picture interests.

Thomas B. Read, lieutenant governor of the State of Michigan, stated his opposition to censorship, declaring that censorship would destroy all initiative in the industry to produce better and higher class pictures.

Others who spoke at the banquet were Mrs. Elmer G. Derr, Judge Alfred J. Murphy, Cong. Clarence J. McLeod, Cong. Robert Clancy, Cong. A. B. Williams and Martin G. Smith, president of the Ohio association. W. S. McLaren, retiring president, had charge of the meeting and J. R. Denniston acted as toastmaster.

At the closing session officers were elected as follows: President, J. R. Denniston, Monroe; vice-president, Phil Gleichman, Detroit; secretary, H. T. Hall, Detroit; treasurer, J. Niebes, Detroit; directors, Sam Ackerman, Detroit; W. S. Butterfield, Battle Creek; Claude E. Cady, Lansing; C. Q. Carlisle, Saginaw; Glenn Cross, Battle Creek; A. J. Kleist, Pontiac; Vernon Locey, Howell; W. S. McLaren, Jackson; J. C. Ritter, Detroit; Paul Scholssman, Muskegon, and Bert Williams, Detroit.

The 1924 convention will be held at Saginaw.

An unique feature of the entertainment program was a ham and egg breakfast served at the North Prison Farm, just outside Jackson, followed by a trip through the farm buildings and a part of the main prison in the city. The breakfast was provided by the prisoners from their Good Fellowship Fund. Exchange men and exhibitors have been most kind in supplying the inmates of Jackson prison with the best pictures and entertainment obtainable and the prison inmates took this opportunity to show their appreciation.

Smoot Sees Hope of Admission Tax Repeal if Veterans Don't Get Bonus

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Hopes of securing the repeal of the admission tax have been raised again by statements of Senator Reed Smoot, of Utah, leading Republican member of the Senate Finance Committee, that if Congress does not pass any extravagant appropriations or provide a bonus for the soldiers, it will be possible to change the revenue laws so as to save approximately $500,000,000 to the people of the country.

The admission tax, as well as the direct taxes on jewelry, confectionery and a number of other articles, would be affected by any changes which might be made in that section of the law, it is believed. At a conference between President Coolidge, Secretary of the Treasurer Mellon and Senator Smoot, held recently at the White House, the Senator proposed to reduce certain of the special taxes by approximately $75,000,000, while at the same time reducing surtaxes from a minimum of 50 per cent to 33 1-3 per cent, exempting incomes under possibly as high as $3,000 from taxation, and reducing the rates on incomes between $3,000 and $10,000.

These changes, it was made definitely known, are contingent upon the setting aside of a soldiers' bonus measure and the practicing of strictest economy in the conduct of the Government. Furthermore, it is desirable that a full study of the situation be made before any steps are taken to change the law, and it is very probable that, if revision is undertaken, it will not be brought up until some time next Spring.

"Unseeing Eyes"

Thrills and Unusual Scenic Effects in Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Melodrama of Snow-Covered Northwest

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

For its second production to be presented for a run at the new Cosmopolitan Theatre in New York, Cosmopolitan selected "Unseeing Eyes" which is a virile melodrama of the Canadian Northwest; it differs considerably, however, from the usual picture of this type in the manner in which the theme has been treated.

It is an excellently produced picture of the great outdoors, the majority of the action taking place in deep winter snows. The backgrounds of snow-covered mountains are pictorial delights, as the picture was filmed in the Selkirks and Canadian Rockies. The melodramatic elements have not been neglected, there are many thrills, several of which center around an aeroplane which plays a prominent part in the story. This also provides some unusual effects such as closeups of the players in a moving plane with the snow-capped mountains as backgrounds. Each situation is handled so as to bring out to its fullest all dramatic action and there are many stirring moments.

Strong interest and suspense is developed in many of the sequences, however, the plot is slight and the main theme commonplace though its development is out of the ordinary. The climax is familiar and lacking in suspense as you feel sure of the final outcome. The hold of the picture on the spectator depends almost entirely on the fine acting of the principals, the excellent atmosphere and the treatment of the theme, although in a number of instances the sequences are prolonged to such an extent that the grip on the audience is liable to be weakened. It is a story in which heroism is matched against one of the most black-hearted villains the screen has produced, so much so that it would seem that at times this character is overdrawn and that the director has overstressed some of the situations for melodramatic effect.

Lionel Barrymore is excellent as the hero throughout, particularly in his scenes with the villain. Seena Owen is attractive as the heroine and does her best work, at the same time providing some thrills, where she becomes snowblind and wanders over the snow. The title evidently refers to this situation. Louis Wolheim gives an especially fine performance as an arch-villain; he is a superb type for this role and registers strongly.

They return to New York safely and Dean and Miriam face happiness together.

"Richard the Lion-Hearted"

This Film Provides Fine Entertainment With Wallace Beery in Same Role He Had in "Robin Hood"

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Starting out at that point in the story of "Robin Hood" as portrayed by Douglas Fairbanks where the Earl of Huntingdon leaves to crusade and returns to England, the first Associated Authors production "Richard the Lion-Hearted" distributed by Allied Producers and Distributors deals with the adventures of this celebrated English king and his attempts to wrest the control of the holy sepulchre from the Saracens lead by Saladin. Sir Walter Scott's well-known novel "The Talisman" furnishes the basis for the story.

It is a colorful, highly interesting and finely mounted production that promises well for the new Associated Authors organization. Being so closely connected with the story of "Robin Hood,"—in fact quite a few scenes taken from that picture introducing Douglas Fairbanks have been incorporated in the film—it is natural that these two pictures will be compared in the spectator's mind. This, in a way, is unfortunate, for "Richard the Lion-Hearted" makes no pretense of being such a stupendous production, neither has it the "snap" and speed of that film. But at the same time it is a picture that should appeal to and thoroughly satisfy almost any type of audience on its own merits. Also, it should, because of the great interest aroused in the character of "Richard the Lion-Hearted" on account of the fine performance of Wallace Beery, appeal particularly to all who saw "Robin Hood," for in the new film Beery continues his portrayal of that lovable monarch.

Beery's work in the title role is admirable from every standpoint and will be a revelation to those who have only seen him in "heavy roles" because of his excellent work in the lighter comedy moments of the picture. Physically he is convincing as the powerful "lion-hearted" king and a fine type for this character. He is just as fine in the more dramatic moments and makes this famous king seem to be alive. His entire supporting cast is above the average. John Bowers and Marguerite De la Motte give fine performances and furnish a romantic element, Charles Gerrard is excellent as Saladin and Kathleen Clifford attractive as the queen.

Chet Withey has capably directed the production and there are a number of fine effects including the battle scenes, hand-to-hand encounters, and particularly striking are the scenes in the camp of the crusades whose tents stretch out over a whole hillside. He has injected a convincing atmosphere and brought out strongly the possibilities of the story.

Whether your patrons have seen "Robin Hood" or not, makes no difference, for we believe that both classes will like this picture and that it will prove a good box-office bet.

Story

During the third crusade, the English king "Richard the Lion-Hearted" when his forces are ambushed, is saved by an unknown knight, Sir Kenneth who is honored by the king and falls in love with his niece Lady Edith. Sir Kenneth later betray's the king's trust as the result of a jest by the queen, and is disgraced. He returns to the king's service disguised as a slave. When Saladin the leader of the Saracens through a ruse draws the king away from camp and attacks the camp, Sir Kennth girds on his armor, helps to save the queen and Lady Edith and again wins the king's favor. When it develops that Sir Kenneth is really the brother of the king of Scotland in disguise, the king announces the engagement of Sir Kenneth and Lady Edith.

"In Search of a Thrill"

Metro Production Starring Viola Dana in Adventurous Story of Paris

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Viola Dana's excellent make-up as a woman of the Parisian underworld and the general Apache atmosphere here is the chief appeal. These features help to save a rather flimsy plot which affords the star only a limited expression of her individual talent. There is nothing vitally new about the picture but this will probably be overlooked by a fair number of patrons who will be lured by the picture's locale and types.

Too much of the stellar part is inactive, and in this respect not best suited to Viola Dana. She starts out as a pampered society girl and ends up by being reformed through the influence of the one person she loves. This is not exactly the star's forte and sometimes her real ability seems to be wasted. When she adopts the Apache disguise, she is more colorful and her gifts as a comedienne are allowed more of a chance to shine.

The development of the main idea, that is the change in the girl's character, will hardly be convincing to everyone. A trip through the underworld where the various degrees of suffering and crime are exploited does not seem sufficient of itself to arouse the great depth of womanliness which it does in this case. The idea is too fanciful and idealistic to have any great weight. A fair amount of suspense is developed in the climax where the girl and her escort escape after a cafe fight and a raid. The picture has some attractive society sets in the beginning and a supporting cast of satisfactory talent.

Ann Clemance inherits a fortune and goes to Paris to spend it. She meets Adrian Torrens, a writer and an old friend, who denounces frivolous women like herself who shower their affections on pet monkeys. He befriends an Apache dancer and Ann decides to appeal to him by impersonating an Apache and robbing his home. He sees through the disguise but takes her on a round of misery, showing her the squalor and suffering of Paris and arousing her sympathy. She decides to adopt an orphan and Adrian realizes that he has "found" her, at last.

"A Million to Burn"

Universal Releases Entertaining Farcial Comedy With Herbert Rawlinson

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A plot with some novelty, a sufficiency of action and a fairly good stellar role is afforded Herbert Rawlinson in this Universal feature. The story is farcical for the greater part and has a number of situations that will amuse.

Philanthropy in an exaggerated degree is proved to be infinitely disastrous. The coming of sudden wealth prompts a young man to give every employee in his hotel a holiday and to help each one to realize a starved ambition. This turns the hotel and grounds into a sort of circus where each one puts on his own performance. The chef becomes a sculptor, the chamber maid, a tragedienne. The comedy of these effects should appeal, and the general idea should meet with a fair amount of sympathy from most persons.

Herbert Rawlinson's acting is more convincing than usual. The plot provides him with some rather effective scenes and surely will appeal to the fans who want their screen heroes to be idealistic characters. Beatrice Burnham is pleasing as the feminine lead and the others are realistic types. As a light program number, "A Million to Burn" should keep the average fan interested because of its novelty and variety.

Thomas Gwynne, a young man of education, is a waiter in a mountain hotel until by force of circumstance he is appointed manager. He seeks to alleviate the bolshevistic feelings of the employes by attempting to create at the hotel a modern Utopia, where all persons are helped to a realization of their aspirations. The most outlandish situations arise until the hotel is bankrupt. Gwynne is left money, buys the hotel and fails again. The climax comes when the employes, failing to appreciate the manager's generosity, demand all sorts of queer things. The manager then uses a little fistic argument and Utopia fades, but contentment is established.

"Gold Madness"

If this picture were considerably shortened, it might be an average success in the small theatre. In its present extreme length and rather weak construction it is not a definitely reliable box-office attraction. The first reel is merely a prelude to the actual story and except for attractive snow scenes is not essential to the entertainment.

The names of the author and star will arouse a certain amount of interest, although this picture is not the usual James Oliver Curwood type. There is very little out-door stuff and the drama on the whole is strictly conventional. Guy Bates Post will no doubt appeal to his particular clientele, but to others his performance seems rather slighted.

The director has given the story a particularly somber atmosphere and it is this lack of sparkle which is the chief drawback of the picture. Cleo Madison and Grace Darmond are attractive in roles with limited chances and Mitchell Lewis is interesting in his few scenes. The picture would no doubt be greatly improved and make a very different impression if it were condensed.

Scotty McGee goes to Alaska where he succeeds in making crooked mining deals and in separating Jim Kendall from his wife, Olga, whom Scotty takes with him. Some time later Jim, posing as a millionaire, undertakes a secret service mission to arrest Scotty and Olga who are both involved in the mining deals. He succeeds despite Scotty's attempts to doublecross him and wins a real girl despite Olga attempts to get him back.

"Held to Answer"

House Peters and Good Cast in Metro Production of Average Interest

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Resembling to a slight degree the general theme of "The Christian," this Metro production is based upon the threatened downfall of a clergyman of high esteem. As in the former, an affair with an actress is the disastrous complication. But there are a number of vital differences and "Held to Answer" is far less stupendous both in material and emotional appeal.

It retains, nevertheless, a certain measure of appeal that is frequently attached to a more or less sensational slant on anything connected with the church. House Peters is a commanding type as the man who has given up everything in the cause of redeeming mankind. He will be sure to win the admiration of a large number of fans, and the unjust circumstances which brand him as thief will stir up considerable interest.

The crucial situation shows the clergyman refusing to tell the name of the real thief, who is the brother of his fiancee, and receiving the judge's verdict of "Held to Answer." The next big scene is a business meeting in the church in which the pastor is asked to resign. It has the expected melodramatic conclusion involving the brother's confession and the sudden awakening of a conscience in the woman who has caused the trouble.

It has been produced in fairly attractive program style. Evelyn Brent is very good in a rather restricted part and Grace Carlyle plays the artful woman of the world convincingly. James Morrison and Bull Montana stand out among the subordinate ones.

Story by Peter Clark MacFarlane.
Scenario by Winifred Dunn.
Directed by Harold Shaw.
Photography by Georges Rizard.
Length, 5,601 feet.

Story

John Hampstead, formerly an actor, goes into church work and establishes the "House of the Open Door." He is engaged to Bessie Burbeck, daughter of one of the trustees. Marian Dounay an actress once in love with him, returns and tries to ruin his standing by accusing him of stealing her necklace which is found in Hampstead's safe. The news of his guilt is published but the confession of the real thief saves him, and Marian's repentance follows.

"Tipped Off"

Playgoers' Release With Popular Cast Is Fairly Thrilling Crook Drama

A crook drama with some fairly thrilling scenes is available in "Tipped Off," a Playgoers' release. The action and suspense keep up entertainingly and the cast has four well known players, Noah Beery, Tom Santschi, Arline Pretty and Stuart Holmes. While it is not stupendous in any sense, it is a good program picture for the average theatre.

It has a slightly different angle from the usual crook drama. A fake robbery is staged just so as to prove to a theatrical producer that the heroine is capable of playing a woman of the underworld convincingly. The plot of some real thieves complicates things. Chinatown plays a large part in the settings and Noah Beery as the pious Chinese leader adds to the picturesqueness.

The fight between Santschi and Beery is perhaps the biggest scene. It will be interesting because it is an evenly-matched combat and although not exceptionally long, succeeds in producing considerable suspense. The types are all well depicted. Something is happening all of the time and while there is a suggestion of crudeness in the continuity at times, there is sufficient excitement to make the average person overlook this.

A Finis Fox Production.
Story and Scenario by Frederick Reels, Jr.
Photography by Harry Fowler.
Length, 4,284 feet.

Story

Mildred Garson, secretary and fiancee of Anthony Moore, playwright, is unable to convince him that she can play the leading role in his crook drama. Her brother arranges with "The Fox," an underworld leader to stage a robbery at Moore's home and have Mildred hold him up. At the same time real thieves appear and Mildred is forced to go to Chinatown with them where she is sheltered by a pious Chinese philosopher. The publication of the Moore robbery endangers her name but the discovery of the real thieves eventually clears up everything.

On the Banks of the Wabash

Vitagraph's Latest Has Many Thrills and Big Climax—Mary Carr Featured
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Thrill seekers will find something new and big in the flood climax which brings this Vitagraph melodrama to a close. The old "Sarah Jane" plowing through Main Street, making its rescues from second story windows is an impressive spectacle, but only a part of a maelstrom of dramatic events that culminate here.

"On the Banks of the Wabash" is an attraction which a large class of theatres cannot afford to miss. Its stupendous climax will accomplish its purpose in bringing the thrills, and giving your patrons what the earlier part of the picture hints at—terrific flood scenes.

J. Stuart Blackton, the producer, has not striven for fine effects, but for broad sweeping action with a certain undertone of human interest that makes it more powerful. This element is embodied mainly in the performance of Mary Carr. She has an appealing part which she plays with great understanding and invests the production with something that all women will like.

Various dramatic complications unravel themselves in the climax in which the suspense is splendidly managed. The artist, reported dead, returns to save his daughter from drowning and his wife from being burned to death; the burning house sets fire to the old river boat, the "Sarah Jane" which is doing the rescuing; the village spinster confesses her deceit which has almost wrecked another woman's life; the Captain discovers that her brother has been swindling the town with fake investments and prevents his escape; the boy goes back to his country sweetheart whom he had neglected because of an infatuation; in fact an incredible number of melodramatic incidents are involved. The fan who is looking for sensational entertainment could scarcely find anything more satisfactory than this.

The cast has many excellent types and shows enthusiastic direction. Madge Evans is wistful and pretty as the girl "who stays behind" and Burr McIntosh intensifies the heart interest by his fine performance of the Captain.

Based Upon the Song by Paul Dresser.
Direction by J. Stuart Blackton.
Length 7156 feet.

Story

Paul Bixler, an artist, who has accepted his wife's entire fortune in furthering his career, is seen about to jump into the river, by Tilda Spiffen, the village spinster. She reports his escape with another woman and his wife Anne is heart broken. Later when fortune plays Tilda and her rascal brother false, Tilda's conscience hurts and she tells the truth to Anne, who is still awaiting Paul's return. Meantime the river is flooding the town but before the rescue boat gets to Anne, her house catches fire. Paul returns in time to save her and she finds that he has become a success as an artist. Her daughter finds happiness in being reunited to her sweetheart and all are saved from the flood.

"Jamestown"

Second of "Chronicles of America" Series is Released by Pathe
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Similar to the first one of this series, "Jamestown" is remarkable in its authentic colorfulness. It gives further indication of the sincerity and competence of the producers, the Yale University Press, who are now offering the second of the "Chronicles of America," the first being "Columbus."

America's development at the time when Great Britain's control of Virginia was threatened by both the Indians and the Spanish is the subject. The Indian princess, Pocahontas, played by Dolores Cassinelli is an important historical figure in this. The British high Marshall holds her as hostage in order to force her father into certain agreements. In connection with this her love affair and marriage with the English colonist, John Rolfe, is touched upon. Another dramatic feature is the capture of a Spanish spy, detailed to carry messages to the Floridas.

The majority of patrons who are seeking superior entertainment will find much to enjoy in "Jamestown," which is in four reels, like its predecessor. It gives a more than adequate picture of America at this period. Jamestown is reproduced as a crude village, guarded by a high picket fence, practically isolated in winter and in summer the picturesque seat of conflict for the British, Indians and Spanish. It gives an exceptionally vivid idea of British politics at this time and their effect upon embryonic America. Edwin Hollywood directed the picture.

"Modern Matrimony"

Selznick Release with Owen Moore and Alice Lake Has Excellent Comedy Value
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Light comedy-drama of this type is much in demand. The troubles of the newlyweds having no cash and very little credit provide a pleasant hour of amusement for anyone. The picture has already proved capable of creating a chuckling response and can be booked without risk.

Victor Heerman's idea for the story is fresh and his direction shows a keen understanding of farce. While the situations are unquestionably funny, the action quick and snappy, the human interest note is not entirely submerged. Thus when the young husband's last lie has failed and the last piece of furniture has been removed, the wistful is quite as pronounced as the ludicrous. Owen Moore's clever performance is partly responsible for this.

He maintains a certain equanimity throughout his various blunders that makes them, of course, twice as amusing. His attitude is well counterbalanced by Alice Lake's work. She is a somewhat peppery young bride, inclined to demand explanations but infinitely credulous of her husband's lies. Their scenes together are highly entertaining.

The theme of the picture—the way the housing problem confronts young married couples—should suggest good exploitation angles. Various tie-ups with real estate firms would prove effective. Originally, the story was called "One Dollar Down," which will give some idea of its character. Miniature houses would make excellent advertisements, and would carry out the idea that has been used on one of the shots of an interior of the real estate offices. This comprises one of the many interesting scenes in the picture.

Its naturalness will be one of the picture's popular features. The comedy value is sure to register and the acting is in the hands of an unusually capable cast including Mayme Kelso and Frank Campeau.

Cast

Length, 4,960 feet.

Story

Chester Waddington marries Patricia, despite his small income and her mother's objections. He buys a house and furniture on the installment plan, promising a payment on a certain date. He uses his pay check to take a chance on a deal which he thinks his boss will favor, but is fired when the boss finds out. His creditors appear, remove the furniture, the sheriff comes to take possession of the house and then he finds that the deal which he helped has proved a tremendous success.

"A Wife's Romance"

Metro's Latest Release With Clara Kimball Young Should Be Generally Entertaining
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Typical of Clara Kimball Young's most popular work, her latest Metro release makes its greatest appeal to women. As this sort of entertainment it should succeed in the majority of houses. It has a story along the desired paths of romance and is attractively staged and costumed, with Spain as a setting.

An offshoot of the popular screen theme that the neglected wife is susceptible to attentions from other men, this one makes no great pretensions at being original but follows the lines of acceptable entertainment. It is interestingly done and will afford the average feminine fan a pleasant hour. The affair with the bandit is managed in a series of fairly picturesque events from the first meeting in the park at night to the fight with the toreador in the cafe. None of i carries much realism, but this is not the purpose. It is more or less like a day dream and as such caters to the tastes of a large class of patrons.

The star is unusually attractive in this setting. Beautiful gowns and exquisite Spanish laces are a becoming asset while her performance is charmingly reserved and eminently "wifely," even in the throes of a forbidden romance. The picture has an honorable ending that will doubtless appeal, in spite of the fact that the husband's renewed interest seems a bit far-fetched. Albert Roscoe is good as the romantic bandit and the others are well chosen. Thomas Heffron has given effective direction to the scenes and clear photography adds considerably to the enjoyment.

Cast

Length, six reels.

Story

Joyce Addison, wife of an American attache in Madrid, looks to her painting as sole entertainment, as her husband neglects her for business. One night late, while driving, she meets and is robbed by a bandit who proves sufficiently chivalrous to see her home. She recognizes in him a good subject for a painting, so persuades him to pose. This leads to a dangerous friendship and a trip to a notorious cafe where she is seen by an old friend. She sees the wisdom of giving up her bandit and, much to his unhappiness, tells him it is all impossible. Her husband overhears and determines to reform and be sweetheart as well as husband.

"The Tango Cavalier"

George Larkin as Colorful Hero of Western Border Picture Released by Aywon

A highly romantic cast to the performance of George Larkin is given in this picture of Mexican border life which Aywon is releasing. He is the vagabond frequenter of cafes, the king of the tango and a daring air pilot. With a few touches like these, the usual story of outlawry and one man's bravery is made slightly more alluring than as frequently handled.

The tango scenes are fairly well done. Ollie Kirby, who is Larkin's partner, is at her best in the dancing scenes as her dramatic work shows less experience. While her part is not nominally the heroine's, it is more colorful and indicates that with some direction in the art of facial expression, she would be a pleasing screen player.

At times the picture seems somewhat padded. Small, unimportant scenes are lengthened beyond their appeal and there is not much suspense. The aeroplane stunt and the spectacular ride down the perpendicular embankment are thrilling, but the picture as a whole is not especially full of action. It will interest those who admire George Larkin, and will average up as a fair program attraction in almost any small theatre.

Cast

Don Armingo.....George Larkin
Colonel Pomeroy.....Frank Whitson
Doris .....Doris Dare
Carmelita .....Ollie Kirby
Brute Morgan.....Billy Quinn
Strongarm .....Mitchael Telligen

Story

The bandits had unsuspectingly engaged the services of a secret service man, Don Armingo, to make a weekly flight across the border. When the time came for him to make an arrest, the bandits took flight, carrying Don's sweetheart. Don followed in his aeroplane and circling low, reached down and drew the girl from the tonneau of the car. Together they watched the headlong destruction of the bandits over the embankment.

"Bright Lights of Broadway"

Principal Releases Entertaining Picture of Popular Theme with Good Cast

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Another story of the country girl who seeks a Broadway career has been picturized in a way that should afford the usual appeal. The cast is above average, featuring Doris Kenyon, Lowell Sherman and Harrison Ford who give smoothness and charm to the performance. While the story is not exceptional it is pleasingly handled and should mean fair entertainment, generally.

Doris Kenyon's interpretation of the girl who gives up her sweetheart, for the thrill of seeing her name illuminating Broadway is interesting because it has her individual charm. She plays in a thoughtful, wistful manner and does not overdo either in acting or dressing. Lowell Sherman plays the part of tempter with a finesse that helps one to forget partially that it is one of the oldest of roles.

The locomotive accident is well managed. Consistent with the rest of the picture, it is a theatrical touch, but gives a melodramatic dash to the ending that will most likely be enjoyed by the masses. The picture has been attractively staged and the charm of the acting will appeal to many.

Cast

Irene .....Doris Kenyon
Thomas Drake.....Harrison Ford
Randall Sherrill.....Lowell Sherman
Connie .....Claire Dorolez

Story by Gerald C. Duffy.
Direction by Webster Campbell.
Length, 6,760 feet.

Story

Irene, who has a beautiful voice, is heard by Sherrill, the great producer, one day and his offer to make her a Broadway star is so attractive that she leaves her sweetheart, Thomas Drake, and goes to the city. Sherrill tries his usual game, deserts Connie, his latest sweetheart, and kills her one night in his apartment after a struggle with Drake, who has come to get Irene. Drake is accused and sentenced to the chair, but Irene forces a confession from Sherrill and, after a mad locomotive race, saves him.

"The Darling of New York"

Baby Peggy Makes Debut as a Feature Star in Universal-Jewel Picture That Provides Fine Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Baby Peggy the diminutive star who in two-reel Century Comedies has endeared herself to thousands, makes her debut as a full-fledged feature star in the Universal-Jewel production "The Darling of New York" which gives every indication of proving a great big box-office success and we predict that this little lady if she keeps on appearing in features as good as this one, will be the darling of film fans everywhere.

The story provides an excellent vehicle for her and shows her off to advantage. Those responsible for the production have not attempted to cast her as an overly clever or precocious child but have depended on her wonderful personality and undoubted ability to play upon the spectator's sympathy by casting her simply as a lovable little baby who becomes the plaything of fate and is buffeted about, falling into the hands of crooks, some kind, some unkind, then as the ward of a poor Hebrew with a large family, next a waif of the streets and finally trapped in a burning building, only to find happiness at last with her wealthy grandfather.

In this attempt they have surely succeeded, for it is a production that should appeal to all classes of audiences, it is the kind that will get under your skin, unusually strong in human interest, with plenty of action, pathos and clever comedy touches. It is a melodramatic story and there is considerable hokum but it is all well worked out and will "get" almost anybody. Your heart will go out to the poor helpless little tot who is buffeted from one to another in the underworld not knowing what it is all about, and maintaining a sunny cheerfulness through it all. In addition to the plight of the little child your interest will be held by a well worked out crook angle involving the adventures of a quantity of smuggled diamonds which have been hidden in the baby's rag doll and which becomes lost. You feel an intense sympathy for the crooks who have been kind to her and a corresponding hatred for the one crook that ill-treated her. There is such strong sympathy developed for the diminutive heroine and such suspense as to what will happen to her and the diamonds that at times you feel you can hardly wait to see how the sequences will work out, but at the same time the story is not padded.

King Baggot has finely directed the production and there are a number of finely handled scenes such as the manner in which the baby softens the hearts of the crooks who then shower her with toys, the scenes where she is a member of the kind-hearted Hebrew's big family and where she is left in an ash can and dumped into a street cleaner's wagon. Especially good too is the fire scene with the blazing house and falling walls culminating in a big climax where the kind-hearted woman crook who has decided to go straight jumps from a third story window into a life net with the baby in her arms, the camera following the figures as they jump.

Baby Peggy is really wonderful in this picture, she gets you with her personality, magnetism and ability and her infectious humor which has full play, and the already large number of her admirers will be increased many fold. She has been surrounded by an excellent cast, including Sheldon Lewis, Frank Currier, Carl Stockdale, Gladys Brockwell and others not forgetting Max Davidson who does particularly fine work as the poor Hebrew.

Here is a picture that you need not fear to run, for it will provide fine entertainment for any class of audience. It will prove a delight to the kiddies.

Story

Little Santussa's mother dies and she is being brought to America by her governess who gives the child to an Italian while she returns for her pocketbook. In the meantime the ship sails. The Italian is a member of a gang of diamond smugglers and hides the diamonds in the child's rag doll. In New York a rival gangster takes the child and leaves her in an ash can. Some newsboys find her and take her to a Hebrew with a large family. She runs away and a woman member of the crook gang who has been kind to her, finds her and takes her home. Police raid the place and the house is set on fire, the woman rescues the child by jumping into a life net. The Italian crook has determined to go straight and made a clean breast of everything to little Santussa's wealthy grandfather and the story ends with her happy in his magnificent home.

Greetings from F.B.O.

to EXHIBITORS THROUGHOUT THE WORLD FOR THE SEASON 1923-24

FILM BOOKING OFFICES of America, Inc., take this time and opportunity to thank exhibitors throughout the world for the loyal and splendid support given F. B. O. pictures in the season past.

We realize that without your support and help and without your words of encouragement we could not have attained the high position we now occupy in the film world, especially in so short a space of time as eighteen months.

We started this business on an ideal—"SERVICE TO OUR CUSTOMERS"—and we believe we have made good. At least we have done our work conscientiously. Distribution of good product backed by the best advertising and exploitation the industry affords has made the initials F. B. O. synonymous with success to all who have done business with this hard working, hustling outfit.

We are constantly striving to improve the productions we make and will never let up producing the highest type of sure fire advertising and exploitation for exhibitors on all our releases.

We have some splendid productions for the Fall and Winter season of 1923 and 1924. All are backed by intensive exploitation.

Big things are planned for all of 1924. If we have done well so far we expect to do a great deal more for exhibitors during the coming season. Study carefully the product announced in this special section. Each page has a message for every exhibitor. We thank you for your patronage and support. We sincerely hope to merit a larger share, by earning and deserving it, in the seasons ahead.

F. B. O. 1923-24 PLANS

A Tribute to Showmen

Credit where credit is due—

Think back eighteen months to conditions when those F. B. O. showmen and go-getters took hold of this big distributing organization—

And then look at F. B. O.'s position as we swing into the 1923-24 season!

A miracle of accomplishment? I'll say so! And even though an editor is stepping on thin ground when he singles out any individual or organization for a good word, I don't think any film man will frankly question me when I say it emphatically.

Am I right?

Moving Picture World feels a pardonable pride in having been selected by F. B. O. to exclusively present its elaborate announcement of coming product for the season of 1923-24.

F. B. O. has shown that it knows how to sell pictures—to the exhibitor and for the exhibitor. So we take some reflected glory in our selection for so important a piece of work as the broadcasting of the new season's announcement.

At various times in the past year readers may have noticed that we have had occasion to comment on the exhibitor's favorable attitude towards the F. B. O. type of picture and exploitation.

The creation of this attitude and its strength as we enter the new season is one of the most remarkable developments of this business.

We'll wager that in any exhibitor gathering you may attend after the conversation has passed the perennial subjects of film rentals, masterpieces, and whatnots, and has come to the point of "What got the money for you?"—you'll hear "Westbound Limited," "Third Alarm" and so on.

Pictures made at reasonable cost, sold on a basis that considers the customer's profit-making possibilities, and preceded, flanked and rear-guarded by exploitation—that's a great platform and a sure-fire policy.

Naturally, with such a record for the season past, there has been more than ordinary interest on the part of exhibitors in looking forward to F. B. O.'s plans for the coming year.

The pages that follow unfold a glittering array.

The effort that has been put forth on this section by the F. B. O. organization, the cooperation that has been extended by Moving Picture World, are a measure of our belief that you will find these pages well worth your attention and study.

The Box Office Angle As I See It

By EMORY JOHNSON

AS far as I can see it, there is only one sure fire slant for genuine box office winners and that is down-to-earth pictures that all can understand, see and appreciate. "Humble" pictures is my creed. Pictures for the masses which constitute 85% of the picture goers of this country.

Others can make the High Brow, big set and gorgeous scene stuff. For mine, I will continue to make pictures for the people,--high-grade melodramas, understandingly and artistically done.

I try to make my characters live, be natural, act natural and as to the success of that specialty I have thousands of letters of appreciation from fans as well as exhibitors who like my stuff.

Besides, I make exploitation pictures that can be boosted in a natural and clever manner. F. B. O. has a thorough understanding of how to exploit, which, backed by the kind of productions every class of people likes, has spelled success for all Exhibitors who have shown my productions. I shall continue to make high-grade melodramas for the masses all with that big box office appeal.

EMORY JOHNSON.

EMORY JOHNSON PRODUCTIONS

EXHIBITORS throughout the world have risen in one tremendous throng in magnificent testimony to the box office and entertainment powers of EMORY JOHNSON productions. With such past successes as "In the Name of the Law"—"The Third Alarm"—and—"Westbound Limited"—to his credit he now booms along with the biggest success of them all—

"THE MAILMAN"

In every community—Emory Johnson's MAILMAN picture will be received with acclaim. It is human, thrilling, dramatic, packed with action, pathos, and power. F. B. O. will distribute 8 more Johnson Productions. If you have not played the first three, do so at once and then prepare yourself for another mop up with "THE MAILMAN" and with the other Emory Johnson productions to come, all of which will be as big and bigger than these first four. Watch for "THE MAILMAN"; it's a knockout. You'll clean up with it. And watch for the others to come.

Emory Johnson, Box Office Producer

THE director who really knows the public and the box office is truly coming into his own.

Witness the meteoric rise of Emory Johnson, who, with his first three directoral efforts, has already attained such heights as few other young producers ever have achieved.

When Mr. Johnson's maiden directorial effort, "In the Name of the Law," was released by F. B. O., the wise ones said that its tremendous success was an accident—that he couldn't repeat. Then Mr. Johnson came across with "The Third Alarm," and the wise ones were surprised, but still skeptical.

"He can never do it a third time in succession," they said. "No man can be expected to hit a home run every time."

Mr. Johnson's answer was "Westbound Limited," the great railroad man's picture which swept the country with the speed and power of its own plunging trains.

And now comes "The Mailman," Emory Johnson's greatest and latest—a picture dealing with the life of Uncle Sam's postal employees, which is destined to dim even the brilliance of its three public-service predecessors.

And what has been responsible for Mr. Johnson's success? Let him tell you in the few simple words he used at a testimonial luncheon given in his honor by Film Booking Offices recently.

With almost boyish modesty Mr. Johnson told his listeners that he tried to make pictures for the masses—pictures that you and I and the other fellow can FEEL. Stories of drawing room and tennis court and gilded palace do not interest him, he said. The humble things of life are his material, and he strives to present them in a humble way—without expensive and elaborate sets and other garish trimming.

EMORY JOHNSON

But the heart of Mr. Johnson's pictures is in the home. That is also partly responsible for the gigantic success of his pictures. Their utter wholesomeness, combined with their swift action and melodramatic heart interest make them such as to absolutely sway the masses. And Mr. Johnson modestly gives credit for the bulk of his success to his mother, Mrs. Emlie Johnson, who writes all his stories, and to his wife, professionally known as Ella Hall, who plays the lead in his pictures.

Every picture carrying the Emory Johnson trade-mark has some great, big, vital, central idea around which can be built an exploitation campaign sure to put the picture over in a big way. It was that way with "In the Name of the Law," which had the endorsement and co-operation of every police chief in the United States and Canada; it was that way with "The Third Alarm," which was backed by the fire chiefs and firemen throughout the country; it was that way with "Westbound Limited," which had the approval and the help of every railroad employee in America, and it is that way with "The Mailman," which is being given country-wide recognition and promotion by every Postal official, as well as by the army of postal employees in every state in the union.

FROM every State in the Union I have received letters of congratulation from Exhibitors who have made money with my productions.

That to me is the answer as to whether or not I am making that calibre of pictures that exhibitors want. Not only have I received letters from these men but every mail brings me fresh evidence that I am on the right track in turning out the productions that possess box office value.

I see this business as a job of manufacturing entertainment, and nothing else.

This is show business. Show business means keeping the public amused, interested and entertained.

That's what I started out to do and that's what I intend to keep on doing. My tie up with F. B. O. guarantees exhibitors the best calibre of exploitation and advertising helps in the business.

I know this from experience. That's why my pictures are distributed by this progressive, hustling Company, the livest in the business.

Look over the pages that follow. Read what exhibitors have said about my productions. Then communicate with your F. B. O. exchange for bookings on my present releases and my coming pictures. They are "the goods."

CONJURE up in your mind the picture the words "Fashionable Fakers" produce, and the effect on your women patrons! Sleek, gorgeously gowned women, and sleek men.

"Fashionable Fakers"! ! ! It's a great title! Smart society crooks, masquerading as members of the highest strata of society in an atmosphere of wealth as yet unsurpassed on the screen!

"FASHIONABLE FAKERS"! A box office title that has absolutely no equal! For the exhibitor "Fashionable" spells M-O-N-E-Y, and "Fakers" spells M-O-R-E M-O-N-E-Y!

"Fashionable Fakers," which I bought from Charles Ray, was formerly known as "The Worm." "The Worm" is a person who bores holes into furniture to make it appear old and antique and therefore priceless. All unknown to myself, as Thaddeus Plummer, I am a poor country boy, become a "Fashionable Faker," and am hurled into a series of thrilling and exciting adventures which take me from a quiet country town to the very center of the hectic harem of a Sultan of Turkey! A story that is replete with thrills and adventure, with a denouement that is positively startling!

I think my work in this picture is my best to date.

Now that F. B. O. has Witwer under a five-year contract, I hope that all the pictures made from his stories are as good as this one. The world's greatest theatres (including the Rialto, Missoula) should be proud to run "The Fourth Musketeer."

—Guy D. Haselton, Rialto Theatre, Missoula, Mont.

From Ex. T. Review:

This is one of the best pictures that Johnnie Walker has done in some time. It carries an interesting plot with sufficient variety to hold interest throughout. There are some humorous moments that will be enjoyed and also a bit of pathos that will appeal. As a whole the picture should easily satisfy in practically any house.

From M. P. World:

The story is appealing throughout and has humorous touches that will be sure to please. There are several dramatic flashes and an excellent comedy wind-up. It is the best vehicle Johnnie Walker has had for some time showing him in an exceptionally likable role and doing full justice to his personality.

Our patrons raved over this picture. If you book it play it up big.

—Max Draffle, Empress, Cherokee, Iowa.

Give F. B. O. credit for making a good one here. Well acted and good direction with Walker getting more popular every day.

—Hugh G. Martin, American Theatre, Columbus, Ga.

Against "Robin Hood" for competition this snappy picture went over big here. Book and boost it.

—A. I. Latts, Royal, Ashland, Wis.

From Ex. Herald:

Johnnie Walker fits the leading role of this fantastic tale by H. C. Witwer perfectly. The story holds the spectator, and the dramatic situations are pretty sure to appeal to any audience.

From Morning Telegraph:

Hurrah for "The Fourth Musketeer" if this seems lacking in decorum and dignity, it is only because this reviewer is so enthusiastic about the picture. The story and treatment of it is intelligent, interesting, amusing and human, which seems almost too much to expect of one single picture. The direction is clever and the action is well sustained.

has already made money for several thousand theatres—Have you played it yet? Read the exhibitors' and critics' reports.

From M. P. News:
There is the thrill of flashing swords, a duel staged in the high bell tower, this set is a splendid one. The whole picture has an historical interest by reason of its California Mission settings. "Captain Fly-by-Night" has a definite audience appeal—because of its romance, setting and action.

From Ex. Herald:
A well-planned, actionful romance of Lower California during the days of the Spanish domination. It is full of surprises and a wealth of beautiful scenery. It is a colorful, well produced bit of Spanish fiction, beautifully photographed and interest-holding from beginning to end.

Any picture in which Johnnie Walker is featured will go over well here, and this pleasing melodrama is no exception. The picture, similar to the Fairbanks attractions, is full of action and should please any audience.

Johnnie Walker—The Showman's Star

NO, one can't apply the title, "From Rags to Riches," to the career of Johnnie Walker, magnetic and debonair juvenile of the screen, yet his career is somewhat analogous to the stage play of that name, in which he made his debut when only a boy of twelve, if one accepts "rags" as a symbol of poverty. For young Walker, when he had graduated from high school, was able to continue his studies at Fordham University only by dint of summer stock engagements.

Between "shots" of a recent photoplay in which he appeared, this born and bred New Yorker applied the proverbial New York hustle in acting as business representative for a producing director, with the result that he sold the production to a well-known distributor and effected an arrangement for several more productions by the same producing director. This was the Emory Johnson production, "In the Name of the Law."

His finesse in handling this deal was the result of his experience as salesman of scenic and educational film in China.

These commercial enterprises Walker varied with stage and screen engagements and directorial activities.

While yet at Fordham, Mr. Walker played in stock in his native city and at Washington, D. C. After college he essayed pictures, then springing into vogue, making his debut at the old Biograph studio in New York and later going to Edison as leading man for Viola Dana, Gertrude McCoy, Mabel Trunelle and others of picturedom's first constellation.

Universal next engaged him as leading man for Mary Fuller, long one of the foremost heroines of the screen. Then he returned to the stage, but this time as an exponent of musical comedy, appearing in such productions as "The Pearl Maiden" with Jeff DeAngelis, and "The Doll Girl," with Richard Carle and Hattie Williams.

When the world war ensued he enlisted as a gob and was mustered out at the conclusion of hostilities as ensign, having acted in the latter months of the war as assistant paymaster.

Mr. Walker then took over the Hallmark studios in New York and embarked in the business of directing pictures, his releases being known as the Arrow brand and comprising such productions as "The Devil," "When Dawn Comes" and "The Bachelor Apartment."

When Fox made preparations to produce "Over the Hill," great care was expended in the selection of a cast, and nothing less than Johnnie Walker would satisfy the producers in the leading role, so a sufficient financial inducement was offered and Mr. Walker put aside the megaphone for make-up.

The production proved one of the greatest to the credit of William Fox and acting honors were carried off by Mr. Walker and Mrs. Mary Carr. Immediately Mr. Walker was placed under a starring contract with the Fox organization, producing in succession five pictures, entitled "What Love Will Do," "The Jolt," "Play Square," "Extra Extra!" and Live Wires," the latter representing his first screen activities on the coast.

Johnnie Walker's 1923 Successes

1923 MARKED the release of Johnnie Walker's two biggest starring releases by the Film Booking Offices in "The Fourth Musketeer" and "Captain Fly-by-Night."

Released earlier in the season, the latter story, a tale of Southern California in the old days, established the youthful star as a versatile artist to be reckoned as a big box office draw. Closely following upon this H. C. Witwer's story, "The Fourth Musketeer," was released, which marked Walker as a sure "money getter" for the exhibitor.

All the buoyant spirit of youth, the homely philosophy and breezy action with which the noted author, H. C. Witwer, always invests his stories has been retained in "The Fourth Musketeer," which proved tremendously popular when it first appeared in the Cosmopolitan Magazine.

Witwer has the knack of infusing all of his tales with human interest and romantic charm, together with a generous portion of humor that has won him hundreds of thousands of followers throughout the land. In "The Fourth Musketeer," the famous author is shown in his most happy mood.

As a young pugilist who withdraws from the boxing game at the behest of his ambitious young wife and undertakes to manage a garage, Johnnie Walker has a role for which his talents are fashioned seemingly to order. Opposite him, is the beauteous Eileen Percy, charming always and blessed in this vehicle with a role that fits her as snugly as a new pair of kid gloves.

The fight episodes combine big drama and rousing comedy. As Brian O'Brien, the famous boxer, Johnnie Walker reveals all the fistic skill of a Terry McGovern or Abe Atell. It is the romantic element, however, that will have the most general appeal. Brian O'Brien, impressionable and deeply in love with his sweet young wife, works diligently at his little garage while his mate spends her time in high society. The youth hits upon a unique idea of bringing her to her senses and it is in the development of this that much of the fine humor and buoyant spirit is brought out.

In the more dramatic scene, Johnnie Walker puts into effect all the well rounded skill that brought him fame in such plays as "Over the Hill," "In the Name of the Law," "The Third Alarm" and others. Others in the cast who acquit themselves with distinction are William Scott, Edith Yorke, Georgie Stone, James McElhern, Aggie Herring, Eddie Gribbon and Kate Lester.

In "Captain Fly-by-Night" Johnnie Walker is at all times the buoyant facile artist who seemingly revels in the atmosphere of old Spain.

Written by Johnston McCulley, author of "The Mark of Zorro" in which Douglas Fairbanks scored one of his most notable successes, "Captain Fly-by-Night" has all the vivid and languorous color of olden California in the days of Spanish domination. It occurs in 1824 and has to do with the mistaken identity of the leading character—a dashing and daring young swashbuckler and patriot portrayed with virility and charm by Mr. Walker.

Of the many stirring episodes, it is safe to say that the scenes of warfare before the ancient mission walls are the most gripping. These are developed with striking realism. The surge of the charging cavalry; the sweep of the embattled forces; the puff-puff of musket fire; the panic of the natives—all these combine to give a thrilling note to the episodes of warfare. Then, too, it is worthy of comment that none of these scenes of battle were permitted to reveal any of the inevitable horrors of warfare. Instead the romance and action of the fight is stressed.

Moreover, there are duel scenes which grip one's nerves and send a tingle down one's spine. Walker and an antagonist clash in the lofty bell tower of a mission. This scene is big with thrilling action. Romance, too, glows in many captivating scenes. Mr. Walker, like the gallant Valentino, proves himself a fiery lover whose benighted charms engulf many of the most bewitching senoritas in olden California.

Still another interesting feature of the photoplay is the gorgeous scenic backgrounds, the adobe huts of the two towns especially thrown up for the production and the historic missions, which were the very centers of life in that sun-parched territory in 1824. Indeed, the entire production is literally soaked in the atmosphere of the old Southwest—the land of gaudy caballeros with spurs and broad sombreros and gleaming-eyed ladies with pitch black hair and yellow garments of richest silks. In the supporting cast which distinguishes itself in many scenes that require utmost in screen artistry, are such well known players as Francis M'Donald, Shannon Day, Edward Gribbon, Victory Bateman, James M'Elhern.

Carl Anderson's Purpose to Provide Good Pictures at Reasonable Prices

THE purpose of Anderson Pictures Corporation," says Carl Anderson, president, "is to serve all exhibitors, irrespective of size, with good pictures at reasonable prices, on the basis of efficiency and the elimination of excess costs. The manner in which this statement of policy has been received by exhibitors not only vindicates our business judgment, but proves in a very gratifying way that theatre owners stand ready to support the organization dedicated to their service and their interests.

"Anderson Pictures Corporation will specialize in pictures of definite exploitation merit, planned, produced and presented by showmen as well as business men. To these pictures we will give intensive selling efforts and wide distribution, with certified accounting to our producers and a continuous policy of open books and above-board methods. The national quota placed upon every production will be determined by the picture's exhibition value to the exhibitor after careful consideration as to business conditions and other economic forces.

"Our belief in the integrity of F. B. O. and its ability to deliver service, together with the complete harmony which exists between their plan and our own, resulted in the working arrangement between the two organizations whereby F. B. O. will distribute and also sell our product in accordance to the policies under which we operate. Their forces in 33 branch offices will be augmented by our own picked men, each one thoroughly imbued with our ideas of actual exhibitor service. Through this advantageous arrangement with F. B. O. we avoid a large portion of the overhead expense of other national organizations. This saving will go to the exhibitors and to independent producers as their rightful revenue.

"We already have announced the arrangement whereby Anderson Pictures Corporation will handle the product of the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation. We were selected by this exhibitor-owned and exhibitor-controlled organization because our business principles inspire their fullest confidence and because our working arrangements permit the Theatre Owners' Distributing Corporation to secure the economic distribution it desires on a basis of actual co-operation with exhibitors and the elmination of top-heavy distribution costs.

"Having completed our national organization we turned our attention to the formation of a world-wide service. As a result we have formed our own company, Anderson Pictures, Ltd., with headquarters at London and branch offices at Manchester, Leeds, Newcastle, Glasgow, Cardiff, Torquay and Birmingham. This service will distribute throughout the United Kingdom the product of Anderson Pictures Corporation. It also will handle the foreign sales for both throughout Continental Europe and all of the British Empire with the exception of Canada. Thus we at once take rank with the few American distributing organizations which maintain their own offices in the foreign field.

CARL ANDERSON

"As to our policies of operation, each production will be definitely treated as a separate unit. This applies to every element of our plan. Every prospective story will have a distinct basic idea of popular appeal, upon which we will build far-reaching campaigns of publicity and exploitation. Throughout production this phase of our plan will be given special consideration. As a result we will deliver every possible bit of selling value to the exhibitor when we deliver the picture. This unit idea holds also for distribution. There will be no block selling. There will be no strings or concealed understandings in any Anderson contract.

"Independent producers have been quick to appreciate the advantages which our organization affords them. Arrangements already have been made whereby exhibitors are assured of a steady supply of dependable pictures, produced on the basis of economy and efficiency, with the elimination of ridiculously high star salaries and a careful supervision of studio costs. Our plan is to make every dollar spent in production show in the finished picture; otherwise the exhibitor does not receive full benefit of the expenditures. Our product will be based entirely on known quantities: a story of established appeal, a cast of known value, and a director of proven ability to make pictures which make money for the exhibitors.

"Throughout our entire plan, in every detail of policy, organization and operation, we have built around the exhibitor as the keystone of our structure. We are dedicated to exhibitor service, and with the exhibitor we shall progress. Large and small, first run and last run, the exhibitors are looking to us to serve them faithfully. No matter how much we expand or how powerful we become we shall never fail them."

Thus is summarized the platform of an organization which centers in Carl Anderson; consecrated to his leadership and to the business policies and ideals developed from his life-long contact with every division of the industry. Anderson Pictures Corporation is the master-stroke of a man who believes in the literal, actual meaning of exhibitor service, and who is carrying out that belief—intelligently and fearlessly.

Chautard Has Wide Experience

EMILE CHAUTARD, distinguished French director, under whose direction "Daytime Wives" and "Beware the Woman," two special F. B. O. productions were filmed, was born and educated in Paris, France, and received his early theatrical training at the Conservatorie of Paris. His professional career began at the National Theatre in Paris, where he played in Shakespearean repertoire and in many of the modern plays by French authors. During this time he created the character of Napoleon in "Madame Sans Gene," a part which he played more than nineteen hundred times.

He came to America as a motion-picture director for the World Film Company and during his association with that firm directed Alice Brady, Robert Warwick, Holbrook Blinn and Mollie King.

Mr. Chautard directed Pauline Frederick in "Her Final Reckoning," "A Daughter of the Old South," "Out of the Shadow," "Paid in Full" and "Glory of Clementina."

Aside from his work, Mr. Chautard lives a very active, normal life. He is extremely fond of outdoor life, and walks at least four miles a day to and from the studio. He is an omniverous reader and is thoroughly conversant with the works of practically every modern American, English, French and German writer of the present century.

It is his contention that the only excuse for acting is a tugging at one's heart strings for expression, coupled with a great amount of talent and ability.

Army of Students Boost Palmer Play

DURING a period of over five years the Palmer Photoplay Corporation has built up a vast student body of 281,000 ambitious screen writers, through consistent national advertising amounting to nearly $600,000. These active students, representing the nation's most responsive of motion picture patrons, are being developed and trained by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation to supply the screen with original stories.

Over a national territory embracing 3,559 communities, this great force of "sure-fire" picture-goers are boosting the fact that one of their own co-workers is the author of the first Palmer play, "Judgment of the Storm," which means that in a great many communities boasting a picture theatre, a keenly interested and enthusiastic group of imaginative men and women are telling their friends, their acquaintances and their relatives that a student of the Palmer course has "made good."

These 281,000 eager fans are rolling a golden snowball of curiosity that cannot fail to swamp the box-office of every theatre in those 3,559 communities when "Judgment of the Storm" is shown. It needs little imagination to appreciate the cumulative effect of this audience-building campaign, intensified by the fact that the Palmer Photoplay Corporation is fanning the enthusiasm of this vast student body by instructing them, directly by mail, as part of their course, to witness the accomplishment of their fellow student, Mrs. Ethel Styles Middleton, a humble little working woman of Pittsburgh, and write a report on the salient features constituting the success of "Judgment of the Storm."

President of Palmer Photoplay Corporation

The tremendous double appeal of this production—human interest in the personality of this young housewife's success as a scenario writer, and intense public curiosity waiting to be satisfied by witnessing her work on the screen—needs no elaboration. It represents, without question, one of the largest and most perfect ready-made audiences, growing daily under the enthusiasm of 281,000 students, that has ever been prepared for every big and small exhibitor throughout the country.

The synopsis alone of "Judgment of the Storm" gives some indication of the wide popular appeal of the production, and of the excellence of the scenario which represents the one 100 per cent. story written direct for the screen and selected from among hundreds of thousands of manuscripts that have been pouring into the Palmer Photoplay offices during the past five years.

Bennett to Make 5 Supers for F. B. O.

CHESTER BENNETT, prominent producer and owner of the Bennett Laboratories, recently signed a contract with J. I. Schnitzer, vice-president of the Film Booking Offices of America, providing for the distribution by that organization of more than $1,500,000 worth of productions to be made by Bennett at the R-C studios.

CHESTER BENNETT and JANE NOVAK

The Bennett production program will include five big features in which Jane Novak will be starred and six outdoor photoplays featuring Eddie Hearn. Mr. Bennett personally will supervise the making of both the Novak and Hearn productions, besides actually directing the former star in all of her attractions. The director of the Hearn unit has not yet been chosen.

Following the completion of her current production, "The Lullaby," now in the final stages of filming at the R-C plant, Miss Novak will begin at once to prepare for her first picture under the new contract.

Eddie Hearn, who becomes a full fledged star by the signing of the contrace between Bennett and the F. B. O., has long been a popular figure in motion pictures. Tall and good looking and athletic he is well suited for the sort of roles in which he will be cast. Hearn, who was recently signed on a starring contract by F. B. O., will be turned over to the Bennett management by the R-C organization.

Mr. Bennett expressly stipulates, however, that the Hearn productions will not take the form of the dyed-in-the-wool westerns. They will strive in the development of the Hearn subjects for a note of novelty and homely humor with thrills and all the other ingredients that make successful motion pictures.

Bennett, who has long been known as a producer of note, was born in San Francisco, and educated at Leland Stanford University. While attending that institution he began to study law and upon receiving his diploma he was admitted to the bar of California, taking up his practice in Los Angeles.

Bennett soon tired of his career as a lawyer and the movie fever, which had hit Los Angeles, took hold of him. He joined the Universal organization as a business representative, but he wanted to be a director, and his friend, James Young, made him his assistant. In turn, Bennett assumed full directorship of the Earle Williams pictures for Vitagraph and made such Williams productions as "When a Man Loves," "The Purple Cipher," "The Romance Promoters" and Diamonds Adrift." For Antonio Moreno he directed "Three Sevens," "Secret of the Hills" and several other productions.

Chester Bennett is one of the leading members of the Motion Picture Directors' Association and his activities have helped to make that organization a powerful factor in the production affairs of the west coast.

F. B. O. PRESENTS W. P. S. EARLE'S PRODUCTION "THE DANCER OF THE NILE"

Houdini Mystery Photodramas

THE keenly-awaited Houdini mystery photodrama, "Haldane of the Secret Service," is set for early release through Film Booking Offices. The latest offering of the King of Mysteries carries a full quota of the stunts which have made him world-famous, and the ingenious manner in which they have been woven into the absorbing plot, together with the fame of the star, makes the picture one of the big ones this season.

The story does not lag an instant, the action is colorful, gripping and logical, and the mystery elements are strongly worked up. From the very first, sympathy is evoked for the young detective, Heath Haldane's single-handed fight against a great criminal association having its origin in far-off China, and for the lovely Adele Ormsby, who is in their clutches. Haldane's rescue of Adele from a forced marriage in the opening scenes, sets the tempo of a most exciting plot.

His combats and escapes from the gang in America and Europe are shrewdly used to heighten the Oriental mystery behind their operations. Houdini as Haldane is the real super-detective. One sees that he penetrates all the secrets of their world-wide camouflage, but one cannot conjecture how he will unmask them or what the result will be.

After many thrilling escapes and self-extrications from danger and death, the hero corners the band in a remote part of France. His trap is set, and it works perfectly. The surprise finish is a marvel. Ordinarily silent spectators of "silent drama" will shout and applaud. Indeed that breath-taking finish is quite too good to be revealed!

"He unites brain and muscle in the most perfect coordination I have ever known," was the tribute paid to Houdini by Bernarr MacFadden of Physical Culture Magazine after interviewing him recently and seeing his work in "Haldane of the Secret Service."

Mr. MacFadden is just as eminent an expert in the realm of right living—physical, mental and moral—as Mr. Houdini, is in thaumaturgy, drama and pictures. Consequently those who wonder how Houdini performs his almost impossible undertakings in "Haldane of the Secret Service" and other pictures, will be interested to hear the MacFadden explanation as printed in his big, million-circulation magazine!

"If it had not been for his athletic boyhood, years of long-distance running, swimming and other pastimes, he never would have been Houdini. He swam from earliest childhood, and in teens his favorite lope for running practice was the six-mile circuit around Central Park, New York City, which he usually accomplished in about thirty-eight minutes. It was in this way that Houdini built up the vigorous constitution and endurance upon which he has been compelled to rely in achieving his amazing and mystifying feats.

"To his athletic qualifications this miracle man of the stage and the movies adds cunning intelligence and extraordinary coordination of mind and body."

Houdini, the famous hand-cuffed king, in another one of his famous mystery dramas which carries you in his story across the globe. See him make the escapes that he is so famous for. Supported by Gladys Leslie, who is now playing the lead in "If Winter Comes." Cash in on the front publicity Houdini is now getting while touring on the U. B. O. time.

Hunt Stromberg Productions

THE first Hunt Stromberg Production set for release by Film Booking Offices is "Breaking Into Society," a big comedy special. "Breaking Into Society" is that unusual thing—a screen comedy without a star. Instead, every player has been picked for his or her individual ability to arouse laughter, and "gags" of the most original and humorous kind have been evolved around every member of the cast. Such people as Bull Montana, Carrie Clark Ward, Chuck Reisner, Florence Gilbert, Kala Pasha, Gertrude Short, Stanhope Wheatcroft, Leo White and "Tiny" Stanford have the leading roles. Nearly all of these players have at one time or another been starred in screen comedies.

"Breaking Into Society" tells of the ludicrous attempts of the O'Tooles to break into the exclusive social set of Pasadena. The fact that they hail from Tin Can Alley in the smokiest section of Pittsburgh, daunts them not, but the results of their new surroundings provide as much fun as has been encountered in many a day. In fact so fast does one laugh supersede the other that went before it that one cannot believe that this fun feature is of feature length.

A resume of the career of Hunt Stromberg, the man behind the guns—or more appropriately, in this case—behind the cameras of "Breaking Into Society," reads like an Horatio Alger story at first glance. Underneath, however, is revealed a business story of how brains, stick-to-it-iveness and ability that would not be downed, won their just rewards.

Hunt Stromberg is said to be the youngest producer in motion pictures. Although but 29 years of age, he has produced the series of Doris May features, the Bull Montana comedies, and now, "Breaking Into Society," which he considers his greatest success. Not only did he formulate his own company and attend to all the production details connected with such an undertaking, but, as in the case of "Breaking Into Society," he wrote and personally directed many of the pictures which he sponsors.

When Stromberg graduated from college he saw motion pictures as his goal. Taking advantage of the newspaper experience he had gained while attending college, he struck out in the publicity and advertising end of the industry. In a short time he found himself directing such a department for the Selznick Pictures Corporation. Not long after Goldwyn sought his services.

All this time he had been quietly preparing himself to qualify and when he received an offer to take charge of the publicity and advertising for the Thomas H. Ince studios, he left for California.

Then came his first opportunity to demonstrate his ability. He conceived and directed a three-reel advertising picture that took the spectator on a trip through the Ince studios. The ingenious manner in which the embryo producer staged it, proved that his goal was now a certainty.

The formation of the Hunt Stromberg Productions followed and now, with two years of success at his back, Hunt Stromberg can look to the future with inspired confidence and the assurance that he is firmly established on the peak of the mountain he has succeeded in climbing.

Richard Thomas Productions

THE LOVE PIRATE" is the title of the first Richard Thomas Production for release through Film Booking Offices. It is a strong dramatic story with an element of mystery that helps make it a powerful photoplay. Filled with thrilling dramatic episodes the story revolves around a cabaret which is the most notorious resort in town, and which is secretly owned by an unscrupulous man who is married to a well-known society woman.

This society woman's cousin is on the District Attorney's staff, and with these complications to start out with a swift-moving plot has been evolved which keeps the viewer breathless through its telling on the screen.

With all of its dramatic strength, the picture carries a strong flavor of romance, which is interpreted through the persons of the district attorney's assistant and a beautiful and talented girl who is studying music. Plot and counter plot vie for interest with each other, and the climax sequence, in which the unscrupulous cafe owner meets his death through the hand of a mysterious person, is one of the strongest ever filmed.

Presented by Richard Thomas, the sterling cast includes Carmel Myers, Melbourne McDowell, Charles Force, Kathryn McGuire, Clyde Filmore, John Tonkey, Carol Halloway, Edward W. Berman and Spottiswoode Aitken.

RICHARD THOMAS

Adapted by William Sester, the picture was directed by Mr. Thomas. Photography by Jack W. Fuqua. Set for release November 18, 1923.

"Phantom Justice" is the second Richard Thomas production listed for release by Film Booking Offices. It is an unusually dramatic story, teeming with suspense and thrills.

The story deals with a young attorney who, when offered a fabulous fee, is tempted to defend a girl whom he knows to be a murderess. On his way to court, he stops at a dentist's to relieve an aching tooth. Gas is administered, and he dreams that if he takes the case, the girl will double-cross him; and he in turn will be accused of the crime after the murdered man is found buried in his backyard.

He awakes with a piercing scream, rushes back to his office and tacks a sign on his door:

"Corporation lawyer — no criminal cases." He is cured, forever.

A charming love interest runs through the story, and the production is graced with a cast of distinguished and brilliant players. Prominent among them are Rod La Roque, Estelle Taylor, Kathryn McGuire, Lillian Leighton, Frederick V. Room, Gordon Dumont, Garry O'Dell and Fred Moore.

MY pictures are made for the majority of fans who appreciate good stories, good plots, good action, brilliant photography and good direction. There are some pictures that appeal to a few. Some appeal to certain classes. I have always tried and will always continue to strive to make pictures for the majority.

There is a certain type of picture that exhibitors always welcome. That is the type I have made in the two releases described below. They are melodramas. The public likes them. Exhibitors like them. What more can any one ask?

Cordially yours,
RICHARD THOMAS.

Rothstein's Exploitation Big Factor

By BEN GRIMM

ONE of the big factors responsible for the success and growth of Film Booking Offices of America is the exploitation put behind every F. B. O. release. And in this connection our hat comes off to Mr. Nat. G. Rothstein, director of advertising, publicity and exploitation for F. B. O.

Aided by a corps of able and experienced showmen-assistants, Nat Rothstein has put over some campaigns that come near making exploitation history. Outstanding among these have been the selling wallops delivered for exhibitors on Emory Johnson's "In the Name of the Law," "The Third Alarm," "Westbound Limited" and Mrs. Wallace Reid's "Human Wreckage."

It is always expected that special effort will be put behind big special productions. It can be said of F. B. O., however, that the brand of showmanship put behind every release was and will be of the same class—meaning FIRST class. The big pictures naturally were given more comprehensive and more far-reaching promotion than the smaller pictures, but even the smallest picture released was given a quality of red-fire exploitation that undoubtedly helped its earning power for exhibitors and its gross for the distributor.

F. B. O.'s exploitation always seems to sense the big selling pont of every release. And when such point is determined that gang on the ninth floor of the F. B .O. Building, at Forty-seventh street and Broadway, just go to it like the group of go-getters they have proved themselves to be.

And right here we want to tell you that Nat Rothstein has some mighty capable assistants. On the Coast is Hyatt Daab, who shoots the hot stuff from the lot from which the New York boys work. In New York are Ed. Hurley, publicity; Leslie Jordan, press books; James William Farrar, poster artist for the Otis Lithograph Company (and a darned good one); Frank Leonard, exploitation and tie-ups; Paula Gould, fan publicity; Dave Strumpf, art director, and Harry Osborne, who just eats detail work.

Now comes the new season. And, boy, if you could only see that bunch at work on Emory Johnson's latest and greatest offering, "The Mailman!" Previous campaigns on Emory Johnson's public-service, heart-interest melodramas may have surprised you, but when you get a copy of the press book on the "Mailman," which is now in course of preparation, you're certainly going to get an eyefull and a mindfull that you'll remember for some time to come.

And every other forthcoming F. B. O. release is receiving even more intensive effort by Mr. Rothstein's department than heretofore. The exhibitor who books F. B. O. pictures can rest assured that insofar as red-fire showmanship is able to help him make money on pictures he will be helped one hundred per cent. That goes for every promotional aid—posters, tie-ups, lobby displays, slides, publicity stories, novelties, trailers—and everything else, with perhaps a lot of new ones added.

"Service plus Brains" might well be the slogan of Nat Rothstein and his assistants in the F. B. O. advertising department.

"Service plus Brains."

That means a lot.

Herewith are shown a few random pages torn from F. B. O. press sheets. They speak for themselves. They are typical of Nat Rothstein's circus-style advertising, and, what's more, exhibitors tell F. B. O. that that's the sort of stuff that makes money for them. Space limitations do not permit the reproductions of many excellent posters, etc., which are reproduced from time to time in other columns of Moving Picture World.

His Early Bent Told in Long Run

HOW the natural bent of a person furthers his success is clearly demonstrated in the brilliant career of Warner Baxter, who has just signed a valuable starring contract with R-C. When a mere lad, Baxter was always "playing show." He would line up the neighborhood kids in Columbus, Ohio, his birthplace, and put them through all sorts of stage tricks, from broadest comedy to most mellow of dramas.

Then his inherent talents were dwarfed in sombre classrooms as he attended Ohio State University at Columbus, where he graduated. Then, several years more, slumbering histrionic desires remained submerged at an insurance school from which he emerged an assistant manager. Prior to that he had been in charge of eastern sales for a large manufacturing company of Columbus, which occupation also left little room for theatrical thought.

During these early twenties young Baxter's thespian ability would crop out at charity shows, which he wrote and directed and in which he acted. He became noted for his clever characterizations and adept stage direction.

Came a lull. He went to Tulsa and engaged in the humdrum business of selling automobiles. In this way he lost his money and fate pointed out his ultimate path. Remembering how he had succeeded on the stage at home, he applied to North Brothers Stock Company and was engaged as juvenile at the munificent stipend of $25 a week.

He made an instantaneous hit on both sides of the curtain. The critics acclaimed him a "comer," while behind the scenes his salary rose. He was soon cast for a leading part, within two months he was billed as leading man, and then followed his notable career on stage and screen.

WARNER BAXTER

He played the title role in "Lombardi, Ltd.," in the metropolitan premier and later came to Los Angeles to appear in a leading role opposite Wanda Hawley in "The Love Charm." "The First Love," a Realart production followed; then came "Her Own Money," with Ethel Clayton; "Cheated Heart," for Universal; ""The Girl in His Room," "St. Elmo," a Fox production, and "If I Were Queen," an F. B. O. picture with Ethel Clayton.

Baxter has finished work in "Alimony" and "Blow Your Own Horn" for Film Booking Offices, and will take parts in important subjects during the course of the next year. His delineation of the American doughboy who wins a million in the Owen Davis comedy drama, "Blow Your Own Horn," bids fair to endear him to millions.

Mr. Baxter is the husband of Winifred Bryson, herself a screen celebrity.

"Think success!"

"The principal thing that holds a lot of people in hard luck row," said Baxter, "is that they don't think success. They desire success, work hard for success, keep success as a shining goal ever before them, but fail to mentally dwell in the realms of successful achievement."

Dorothy Mackaill, Edmund Breese, Wilfred Lytell and Special Cast in "THE FAIR CHEAT"

Directed by Burton King

of which the Trade Papers spoke as follows:

F. B. O. attraction with Dorothy Mackaill is entertaining and different. It is a pleasurable experience to find a picture with an original theme such as this. "The Fair Cheat" is a fascinating story with a fascinating star. Should appeal to all fans, as it shows considerably more imagination than many other pictures. It has light, snappy movement that theatre-goers will like.
Moving Picture World

Dorothy Mackaill proves herself a right smart comedienne whose talent in this direction is as marked as her emotional gifts. Edmund Breese plays the role of father so effectively that he appears genuine. Such a picture as this needed the most competent interpretation. And this is what it has received. Bill as highly enjoyable comedy-drama.
Motion Picture News

"The Fair Cheat" should please the majority of picture devotees.
Exhibitors Herald

Story is good entertainment, realistically executed with spectacular scenes. Dorothy Mackaill is a charming heroine and capable actress. The cast is a worthy one.
Exhibitors Trade Review

SCENES FROM BURTON KING'S "THE FAIR CHEAT" FOR F. B. O.

Anderson a Disciple of Labor

ROBERT ANDERSON came to this country twelve years ago as an immigrant, with no worldly assets but an unfaltering trust in the Golden Rule and a burning ambition to become a great actor.

His lack of knowledge of the English language made it difficult for him. He followed his trade as electrician until he made enough money to go to California, where he was given his first job as a comic character in an early two-reeler directed by Marshall Neilan. After playing small parts in Douglas Fairbanks' first picture, "The Lamb," and "The Americano," he did one day's work with David W. Griffith in "Intolerance."

Then came the part that seemed to have been made for him. As Monsieur Coocoo in Griffith's "Hearts of the World," he portrayed a character which was as near to his own as any could be. He next secured a two-year contract with Universal, during which he appeared in "Hearts of Humanity," "The Right to Happiness" and "Once to Every Woman," all Holubar productions starring Dorothy Phillips. He also directed a comedy, featuring himself, called "My Lady's Ankle."

As Tony in "The Lullaby," Jane Novak's latest starring vehicle for Film Booking Offices, Anderson is cast in the role of an Italian immigrant, with an overwhelming passion for music. Although he is a finished musician, and can play the violin like an old master, he believes that if he actually played it during a big scene that his acting will not only be slighted, but that the sounds emitted would not do him justice as a violinist.

ROBERT ANDERSON

In the big scene in "The Lullaby," Anderson, as a good-natured, brawny immigrant, having just received joyful tidings from his frail little wife, played by Miss Novak, tenderly picks up his rare old Stradivarius, his most priceless possession, and plays a lullaby to the unborn bambino.

The music itself was supplied by a string orchestra, located back of the scene, which gave him the proper melodious atmosphere for his portrayal.

"Success sometimes can be defined as obstinacy, failure as subservience to circumstances. The only reason for such outstanding personalities as so-called geniuses or supermen is that the average human being prefers to cling to the line of least resistance."

This bit of philosophy sums up Robert Anderson's outlook on life. Anderson's deductions are the result of ripe experiecne. What might variously be defined as obstinacy, persistency, pluck or stick-to-it-iveness is responsible for his presence today in pictures and the enrichment of screen literature through many unforgettable delineations.

LOUISE LORRAINE

PERHAPS none of the present day screen stars have made greater strides in their art than has Louise Lorraine, leading lady in the "Fighting Blood" stories, whose dazzling beauty and rare charm have added greatly to the general appeal of these featurettes de luxe.

F. B. O.

Louise Lorraine Personifies Youth

MAINTAINING the bubbling spirit of youth that has thus far characterized the film series of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" stories, the Film Booking Offices chose as one of the personalities to appear in the second set of this popular series, Louise Lorraine, a sprightly, black-haired, sparkling-eyed beauty whose career in the movies since her debut at the age of fifteen has amounted to a march of triumph.

Since the time that she was picked out of a mass of extras for a special characterization in a picture of Clara Kimball Young's, the striking charm of Miss Lorraine has easily paved the way for her into a first rank position in her profession.

Miss Lorraine, a native of San Francisco, has spent most of her life in Los Angeles, where she has kept in close touch with the pulse of the picture studios. It was at the age of thirteen that she first took it into her head to adopt picture acting as a profession. A man selling pictures from door to door, noticing the fact that she was a distinct type, suggested that she go to the Ince studios for a camera test. Louise and her mother differed on the subject, Louise holding out so stubbornly for a studio trial that the matter ended in a spanking for the aspiring juvenile.

Two years later she had her first chance to follow her talents as an extra in a costume picture with Madame Young. When the director singled her out from the swirling throng of extras, Louise nearly fainted, afraid that she had done something wrong. It turned out, however, that the director had noticed the presence of unusual talent in the little girl and wanted her to do a special bit.

Since that time, she rose steadily in the ranks of picture stars, having been for the past few years under contract with Universal. With them she produced a long series of pictures, including "Up in the Air About Mary," "MacGuire of the Mounted," "Fire Eater," "Gentleman From America," "Heading West" and "Stanley in Africa."

From then on Louise forged ahead, until last year she was accorded the honor of being chosen by the Wampus society, an organization of picture publicity men, as one of the thirteen stars which they choose annually, meriting their support. It is considered that when a picture actress attains this prominence, she is assured of success.

Ralph Lewis On Crest of Stardom

At last on the high crest of stardom, Ralph Lewis has won widespread popularity during the last year or so in Emory Johnson's box office attractions, distributed by F. B. O. Now Lewis is regarded by hundreds of exhibitors as one of the best and most reliable box office propositions of the day in motion pictures.

As the veteran policeman of "In the Name of the Law," as the fireman in "The Third Alarm," as the engineer in "Westbound Limited," and as the plodding letter carrier in "The Mail Man," Ralph Lewis has endeared himself to millions of theatregoers with his artistic characterizations.

Mr. Lewis has builded his popularity on a foundation of rock-bottom firmness. Remembered as Senator Stoneman in Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation" and in his famous role of the miser in "Conquering Power," not to mention his many other notable successes, Lewis enjoys a background of achievement vouchsafed to few other artists of the screen.

He is now under contract to the R-C. organization and is said to have achieved his greatest artistic triumph in "The Mail Man," which is soon to be released by Film Booking Offices of America.

RALPH LEWIS

Helen Van Upp to Supervise Four Specials

ONE of the most important production announcements made by the F. B. O. during the present season is the formation of a series of four special feature productions, to be produced under the direct supervision of Helen van Upp, who for many years has been associated with Universal, Federal Photoplays, and other well-known producing companies in the capacity of production manager, production editor, and other executive positions in the production department.

Mrs. van Upp has had wide experience in the cutting, titling and editing of films and with her wide knowledge of the market conditions, she should be able to furnish one of the greatest selling series of pictures that the exhibitor can buy. Mrs. van Upp has written more than twenty original stories for the screen and made adaptations for more than forty successful photoplays.

Associated with Mrs. van Upp will be Lucile de Nevers, formerly scenario editor of the R-C studio and conceded to be one of the most skilful scenario editors in motion pictures. Miss de Nevers for two years has acted as scenario editor at the R-C studio, and has assisted in the construction of many of the most notable F. B. O. successes.

The pictures will be known as the Golden-Gate Feature Productions and will be distributed by F. B. O. Both original and copyrighted stories will be utilized by the Golden-Gate Productions in making box-office winners for the exhibitors. In commenting on her production activities, Mrs. van Upp said: "My one thought during the production of the Golden-Gate pictures will be to make photoplays on which the exhibitor can make money."

RALPH LEWIS

Acclaimed by exhibitors the acting sensation of the year, Ralph Lewis, whose brilliant interpretation made possible the tremendous success of:

"In the Name of the Law"
(The Policeman)

"The Third Alarm"
(The Fireman)

"Westbound Limited"
(The Engineer)

is now submitting to the exhibitors everywhere the title role of the Mail Man in

"The Mail Man"

MARY BETH MILFORD

Mary Beth Milford, the exquisite little blonde, who was formerly a starlet in Irving Berlin's Music Box Revue in New York, now graces the cast of "Fighting Blood" with her charming presence.

Miss Milford has been on the stage since she was about four, and is a dancer of great ability.

She plays one of the leading feminine roles opposite George O'Hara in F. B. O.'s picturization of H. C. Witwer's stories of the prize ring, "Fighting Blood," which, according to more than seven thousand exhibitors, are now proving themselves the most popular series shown in years.

GEORGE O'HARA

STAR OF "FIGHTING BLOOD"

F. B. O.

A Three-Year-Old Doubles for Star

ANOTHER adolescent actress has made her debut. Little Dorothy Marion Brock, just three, toddled into her first scene on one of the big stages at the R-C studio in Hollywood while Chester Bennett, in a voice modulated to tenderly coercive tones, put her through her initial paces.

Little Dorothy makes her cinematic bow in "The Lullaby," Jane Novak's forthcoming F. B. O. offering. She is a typical California baby, sporting the rosy cheeks that so eloquently attest to a life in the open. Reared by the shimmering strand, where the straggling town of Venice stretches itself along the seashore, Dorothy's early tumbles as she essayed her first steps were made bumpless and bruiseless by the cushioning sands of the beach. The silver slope to the water's edge has been her playground ever since.

Little Dorothy starts her career before the camera as the "double" of a real star. She plays the role of Antoinette over a pinafore period. Then Miss Novak herself steps into the role, portraying Antoinette at an age where she is rapidly budding into womanhood.

It also might be said that little Dorothy is "mothered" in her artistic career by a real star, also the said Miss Novak. In the initial scenes of the play, Miss Novak plays the role of the little Antoinette's mother, as played by little Dorothy. In later scenes, she doubles the two roles.

At the age of one Dorothy was awarded first prize in a baby show at Phoenix, and immediately afterward took the prize for the best baby at Santa Monica, California, where the family moved.

Dorothy's ancestry is Scotch and French. She is an especially talented child, swimming, singing and dancing as well as any baby of her age. Her great accomplishment is a good memory—she rarely, if ever, forgets a name.

Little Dorothy's mimetic abilities and her intelligent interpretation of Director Chester Bennett's instructions indicate a brilliant future for her.

Realism Singles Beatrice Van

HAVING won distinction as a result of her unusually successful adaptations of the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" stories for Film Booking Offices, Miss Van reveals how, by keeping the spirit of youth always dominant, she invested these stories on the screen with a degree of realism that has made them popular the country over.

Miss Van established herself overnight as the only woman writing for the screen who has ever been able to catch accurately the real spirit of the prize ring. Her screen adaptations have been compared by critics to the newspaper reports of trained boxing writers.

Miss Van had no path of roses to fame in her profession. She began as an actress in 1912 to learn the technique of screen writing at first hand. Her first role was a Spanish senorita and yellow make-up obscured the pink tints of her pretty face. She continued playing bits and then leading roles, and finally in 1913 sold her first story, a drama titled "A Small Town Girl," which Allan Dwan directed.

Charles King a Versatile Actor

Charles King, the likeable Derry Kilpatrick in F. B. O.'s "Fighting Blood," is one of the handiest character actors in the motion pictures today. By handy we mean that his versatility in portraying contrasting roles makes him much sought after by discerning casting directors who desire a well-rounded stock organization. King handles a comedy impersonation with as much skill as he does a "heavy," and he can change characterizations as rapidly as any.

Miss Virginia Van Upp Is Student of Drama

One of the most enthusiastic workers of the F. B. O. organization is Miss Virginia van Upp, the scenario editor, who, although not yet twenty-three years of age, is considered to be one of the most efficient scenario editors in the film industry.

Miss van Upp, for two years was editor of the Palmer Photoplay Corporation, and passed on all the stories recommended by that organization. At the R-C studio Miss van Upp's chief duties are to read the material which comes into the organization for production, separate the wheat from the chaff, and recommend to the production department what she considers best from the exhibitors' angle.

Miss van Upp has a wide knowledge of literature, is a student of drama, and probably knows more about the construction of scenarios than most of the writers now engaged in preparing scenarios.

Cooke Started as a "Social Pest"

ALBERT COOKE, who plays one of the principal supporting roles in the H. C. Witwer "Fighting Blood" series of short stories adapted by Beatrice Van for Film Booking Offices, is one of the best known comedians in motion pictures. He was born in Los Angeles and received his education in Paris and Switzerland. He started on his screen career with Mack Sennett and made good from the start.

Cooke made his first screen appearance as the "social pest" in "By Golly" and later scored a noteworthy success in "A Small Town Idol." He was the King of France in Max Linder's "The Three Must Get Theres," a burlesque on "The Three Musketeers." He also supported Dorothy Dalton in "The Silent Call," Henry Walthall in "Drink" and appeared in numerous Universal comedies.

Cooke had a splendid bit of comedy work in "Captain Fly-by-Night, Johnnie Walker's first F. B. O. starring vehicle.

Cooke comes from one of the earliest of the pioneer families in Los Angeles.

Kelsey Shines in "Lights Out"

Fred Kelsey, long in Griffith productions, is one of the outstanding figures in the brilliant cast which presents "Lights Out," the crook mystery comedy drama recently completed for F. B. O. at the R-C studios by Al Santell.

Mr. Kelsey played the role of Decker, a detective in "Lights Out," and gave to the part just the note of distinction it required.

Printer's Devil to Matinee Idol

EDWARD HEARN

EDWARD HEARN, who has just signed a starring contract with Chester Bennett to appear in six outdoor photoplays to be released by F. B. O., was born in Dayton, Washington. He left home at the age of twelve and was swept, somehow, into the printing business. At the age of fifteen, he was recognized as the youngest journeyman pressman in the West.

While feeding press in Portland, Oregon, he noticed a sign which read: "Professor Rasmus, Elocution and Dramatic Art." The desire for things dramatic and theatrical came to the fore and he went to the "professor" and planked down ten bucks, out of his thirteen dollars weekly stipend, for a month's tuition.

He studied for three months and went to Everett, Washington, where he represented himself to be an experienced actor. He was given a job with the Acme stock company, made good and stayed with them for about eight months.

The first picture in which Hearn played was with Hobart Bosworth and was called "The White Star." Since that time he has had a most interesting and varied cinema career. Once he went to Tahiti in the South Sea Islands to make a picture called "The Firebride." He was with Helen Holmes and J. P. McGowan for a series of adventure pictures. In the Pathe release, "Daredevil Jack," he played the leading juvenile role.

Some of his best known pictures are "Keeping Up With Lizzie," "The Face of the World," "All Dolled Up," "Her Night of Nights," and "The Flirt." For F. B. O. he played an important role in "Daytime Wives."

Derelys Perdue Danced to Stardom

DERELYS PERDUE, playing the leading role of the Romani princess in "Beware the Woman," a Film Booking Office production directed by Emile Chautard, entered stage life as a professional dancer. A native of Kansas City, Mo., where she graduated from high school and a private girls' school, she began the study of dancing when only six years of age.

After attaining renown as a member of the famous Marion Morgan dancers, Miss Perdue came to Los Angeles, where she attained quite a vogue in staging numerous solo dances, ballets and terpsichorean features in leading theatres and picture studios.

She arranged, supervised, and danced in various episodes of Allan Holubar's "Man, Woman and Marriage"; Rex Ingram's "Conquering Power"; Mack Sennett's "A Small Town Idol"; three Olive Thomas Triangle productions, and Warner Brothers' serial, "The Jungle Adventuress."

DERELYS PERDUE

Her dancing led to the discovery of her dramatic talent, and she subsequently played parts in Victor Schertzinger's production, "The Kingdom Within" and "The Bishop of the Ozarks." Her work in the latter was her first really big opportunity, and on the strength of it she signed a long term contract with the Film Booking Offices.

Miss Perdue is five feet five inches tall, weighs one hundred and twenty-five pounds, and has a perfect figure. Her hair is rich dark brown and she has large brown eyes.

"Daytime Wives'" was her first picture under the F. B. O. banner, followed by "Blow Your Own Horn."

Kit Guard Has Had Varied Career

KIT GUARD, who plays one of the principal supporting roles in the F. B. O. "Fighting Blood" series, adapted by Beatrice Van from H. C. Witwer's well-known stories, was born in Denmark. He had a varied career before joining the ranks of the silent drama. Guard has been a sailor before the mast, a blacksmith, a life insurance agent, a professional pugilist, a plumber's assistant and a legitimate actor.

He made his stage debut at the Alcazar Stock Company in San Francisco. He appeared with Holbrook Blinn for two seasons and later appeared as Jimmy Logan in "Human Hearts." At the outbreak of the world war, Guard went to France and served with distinction throughout the war. His grandfather, Captain Christian Klitguard, was made a member of the Danish Flags by the King of Denmark.

Guard appeared in the recent Fox serial, "Bride 13," and also played one of the principal parts in "The Face in Your Window" serial that proved very successful. In his role of Kelly the pugilist in "Fighting Blood," Guard has a role for which he is ideally fitted.

Kit is an authority on good health and has a large following among the society people of Hollywood. He welcomes all questions on diet and good living. He is an expert boxer and gives George O'Hara, star of "Fighting Blood," some of his best work-outs.

The selection of Kit Guard for the role he portrays in F. B. O.'s "Fighting Blood" two-reel pictures, was an ideal one, as Kit, because of his stage experience coupled with his pugilistic experience, enabled him to give unusually convincing portrayals.

O'Hara Knows How to Save His Face

WHEN Film Booking Offices decided to put a series of H. C. Witwer prize-fighting stories on the screen and call them "Fighting Blood," they picked out young O'Hara to provide the fighting blood. They couldn't have a regular pug with a broken nose and an ear that looked as though it had been chewed by a calf doing love scenes with two such lovely girls as Mary Beth Milford and Louise Lorraine. They had to have an attractive, wholesome, handsome young actor who looked athletic.

As the Witwer stories are a serial, George has to fight all the time. While the terrific blows of Joe Rivers, Kid McCoy, George Lavigne, Ad Wolgast and other boxers in the champion class have been showered on George's face dangerously near that perfect Grecian nose, the young star has always been able to protect it. Under the training of Frankie Adams, veteran fighter, George has developed a defensive style of boxing designed especially to enable him to protect himself above his shoulders.

George is congratulating himself that his face is still intact as the second series, which marks the end of his strenuous work, draws to a close. The young star has repeatedly refused to wear a face guard during the film rehearsals.

If O'Hara intended to continue his moving picture career in fighting pictures, it might be entirely correct for him to collect a cauliflower ear or a flattened beak during the course of his highly exciting adventures. But critics tell him that there is a future awaiting him in the higher fields of drama, so George is doing his best to preserve the face that Nature gave him.

GEORGE O'HARA

Just Comes Natural for Mary

MARY BETH MILFORD, who plays the leading feminine role in the second series of H. C. Witwer's "Fighting Blood" stories, adapted for the screen by F. B. O., is a native of El Paso, Texas. She was brought up and educated in Los Angeles. Miss Milford comes by her talent naturally, being the daughter of a professional reader.

As a student of Ernest Belcher, she danced for several years in Los Angeles, where she appeared before the camera in "The Little Princess" with Mary Pickford, and "Pursuit of the Phantom." In 1918 she went East to fill an engagement with the Greenwich Village Follies. After that she appeared in Gus Edwards' 1920 Revue and the 1921 Music Box Revue of Irving Berlin.

During her career in the East, she took part in "The Virgin Paradise," with Pearl White; "Footlights," with Elsie Ferguson, and in "The Old Oaken Bucket." Beside acting and dancing,

MARY BETH MILFORD

Miss Milford plays the piano, rides horseback and is one of the best girl fencing artists on the stage.

Her grandfather, John Collier, who is thriving at the age of ninety, founded the first college in the State of Texas. Ex-Governor Cox of New York is her grand-uncle and Judge Adolphus Regan of New York is her uncle.

While thousands of moving picture fans are wondering which of the girls in the "Fighting Blood" two-reelers is going to marry George O'Hara—Louise Lorraine, the brunette, or Mary Beth Milford, the blonde, even those young ladies are in the dark as to the outcome of their double romance.

Beatrice Van, adaptor of H. C. Witwer's stories of the ring, refuses to divulge the secret, and Witwer is away in the High Sierras. Meantime, a spirit of unselfishness pervades the "Fighting Blood" company. In fact, each of the two girls is graciously trying to outdo the other in politely giving way to the other. There is a complete absence of professional jealousy.

From Convent to the Film Studios

JANE NOVAK, "old-fashioned girl" of the movies, whose latest starring picture for Film Booking Offices is "The Lullaby" entered on a motion picture career in 1914, when only fifteen years old.

Miss Novak arrived in Los Angeles fresh from Notre Dame convent, at St. Louis. Of Bohemian parentage, Miss Novak was born and educated in the Missouri metropolis. Her aunt, Ann Schaefer, a well-known Vitagraph actress of that day, persuaded her to go to California, to join Vitagraph's Western company.

Miss Novak broke into the movies with the old Kalem company, however. The afternoon after her arrival Miss Novak had gone visiting her aunt and met Ruth Roland, who immediately used her in a scene for a test, with the result that she was immediately engaged at the overwhelming salary of fifteen dollars a week.

Finally Miss Novak was selected as the ideal spirit of womanhood for the big Selig-Rork production of "The Rosary," and then came the opportunity for deserved stardom in Chester Bennett productions. "The Snow-Shoe Trail" was followed by "Colleen of the Pines"; her third starring picture was "Thelma"; and then came "Divorce," the first society drama in which she ever appeared.

THE GRIFFITH FIND

His most notable achievements include Mons. Cuckoo in D. W. Griffith's "Hearts of the World" and the male lead with Jane Novak in Chester Bennett's F. B. O. production, "The Lullaby."

While directing "Hearts of the World," the great master said of Anderson:

"He possesses the greatest essential attributes necessary for convincing screen acting—depth and sincerity. If understood and properly directed he is destined to become one of our very few great screen artists."

THAT'S the kind of addition and result some folks arrive at in figuring the cost of good printing.

Republic Laboratories don't figure that way. We believe that when the wise old Arabs originated numerals it was their intention to always have 2 plus 2 equal 4 in spite of the later day efficiency experts who try to put across the slippery idea that sometimes 2 plus 2 makes 6.

There is no magic about the production of fine motion picture prints. Good stock and expert workmanship always produce the same result —"GOOD PRINTS," the REPUBLIC QUALITY.

Every employee in the REPUBLIC LABORATORIES takes a personal pride in the high quality of work turned out in this institution.

Chicago Police Chief Vetoes Motion Picture Censors' Cut

Film censors here disagree once in a while. Recently when they made some cuts in the Roosevelt film of the expedition to the River of Doubt in Brazil, explorer Newman, who put on the show, went to Chief of Police Collins and got him to restore the missing parts of the film, which Mr. Newman says the Brazil government loaned to him for exhibition in this country.

Manager Henry Goldson of the Julian Theatre at 918 Belmont avenue is going after business hard these days and in addition to big movie programs is using a lot of printers ink to bring the patrons into his cosy house.

The Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation, whose main office is in this city, has taken over the Pantheon Theatre at Vincennes, Ind., from the Wilkerson Lyons Enterprises for a reported $228,000. E. O. Wagner will be the house manager. Other houses owned by the Wilkerson Lyons interests in Vincennes may be taken over later by Consolidated.

Clyde Wexom has resigned as manager of the Adams Theatre of Detroit and is now in this city for a short rest.

J. J. Jacobson has taken over the Olympic Theatre at Cedar Rapids, Iowa, and will improve the house.

George Buis, owner of the Knickerbocker Theatre at Holland, Ind., is remodeling the house and when completed will change the name to the Holland Theatre and play both pictures and vaudeville. The house will open about November 1.

P. J. St. Denis has resigned as assistant manager of the Randolph Theatre, under J. L. McCurdy, and has gone to New York to take up other work in that city. He is succeeded by Albert Bachman, who formerly was located at Detroit.

Among the exhibitors seen along Film Row last week were G. E. Johnson of the Lincoln Theatre at Sterling, R. C. Williams of Streator, G. C. Gridley of the Auditorium Theatre at Libertyville, and Ed Shibel of the Plumb Theatre at Streator. Ed, incidentally, took in the city series and went home happy.

When it comes to standouts, the Roosevelt Theatre last week had them every night and up to the last show at 9:45, and the crowds not only filled the standing room in the lobby of the theatre but overflowed and the street men lined them up four abreast for the whole front of the theatre. This goes to prove that if you give the public the right kind of pictures, with plenty of the right kind of publicity, you will get the crowds as this popular Balaban and Katz house does.

E. G. Newman of the Majestic Theatre of LaSalle, Ill., was a visitor here last week and reports business as good in his city.

The Dixon Theatre at Dixon, Ill., had a trade showing of "Ashes of Vengeance" last week and quite a few of the managers in that district took advantage of the opportunity to see this big feature before booking it.

The managers of the various Ascher theatres in the city were the guests of the company at a dinner held at the main offices of the circuit on South Wabash avenue, last Thursday.

A new movie theatre has been opened at Lombard, Ill., by E. L. Frum and M. L. Annis. They have named it the Parkside Theatre and will book feature movies, opening with "The Three Wise Fools."

The many friends of Arthur G. Brown in the trade will be sorry to hear of his death last week after a short illness at the Peoria Hospital.

Louis L. Gumbiner has bought the southwest corner of Michigan avenue and 11th street for $107,000. On the site is a two-story building and he may decide to build a movie house on this one of the best corners in the Roseland district.

One of the best bills of the season was on at the Chicago Theatre last week and the presentations, "A Music Room" and "The Rose," made a big hit with the patrons. Next week is the second anniversary and the management has prepared a wonderful program in honor of the event. The feature picture will be "The Bad Man," which has finally got by the local censor.

H. D. Pefley, who resigned as manager of the Palace Theatre at Watseka, Ill., is now connected with the National Screen Service here and will cover several states for the organization.

Norwood Park, Ill., one of the cosy suburbs nearby where the folks did not want a movie theatre, has taken to the Community Council plan of showing pictures and now they get to see the best in films.

John Waller has purchased the Lyric Theatre at Osceola, Iowa, from John T. Graham and will make improvements.

HARRY GREENMAN

Live-wire manager of the New Monroe Theatre, Chicago, who, because of a balky typewriter, has been written up in this department as "Greeman." Now we've cleaned the machine.

The new movie house now going up at Halsted and 79th street is rapidly nearing completion and will be one of the largest houses on the South Side. The National Theatres Corporation is the owner.

Balaban and Katz were hosts to the chorus girls playing the various musical shows of the city at a matinee of "The Gold Diggers" at the Chicago Theatre last week. The girls all proved good boosters for the film and enjoyed the afternoon immensely.

F. C. Harcourt, D. W. Lewis and J. J. Crealis have formed the World Amusement Association to buy, lease and own all kinds of amusement enterprises, with offices at 624 South Michigan avenue. The new company has a capital of $50,000 and will be interested in movie projects.

The Glickman Palace Theatre at 1141 Blue Island avenue has been transferred from the Public State Bank to Ellis F. Glickman, the manager of the theatre.

Paul Bushong will be manager of the new theatre now going up at Gladstone, Mich., for the Northwestern Company, whose old house was destroyed by fire about a year ago. The new house will be ready soon and will present feature pictures and good musical programs.

Manager Lester Murray reports that "Scaramouche" at the Woods Theatre is now in its fourth week and is pulling strong.

McVickers Theatre celebrated its first anniversary as an exclusive picture theatre and the big presentation was the huge birthday cake with Boris Petroff and Miss Linken and a ballet in a great stage picture in honor of the event. "The French Doll" was the feature picture and the house did a big business all week.

The Chopin Theatre on the northwest side has installed a new organ and is doing a good business at both afternoon and night shows. They have built up the matinee attendance by cutting prices to 5 and 10 cents.

One of the oldest movie theatres on the near north side is the Orchard Theatre on West North avenue. It still is doing a good neighborhood business and continues to feature popular programs.

A. R. Gallo, H. J. Rose and I. H. Censky, all well known to the trade here, have formed the Peacock Pictures Corporation with offices at 5550 North Broadway. They will manufacture and produce motion pictures. This makes the second company formed to produce pictures here during the past two weeks.

Alfred Hamburger, a pioneer in the picture business of this city and formerly manager of the Zeigfield Theatre, has forsaken the movies and gone into real estate.

Frisina and Fassero have purchased the Vandevecr building at Taylorville, Ill., which contains the Gem Theatre, and will remodel the structure and enlarge the theatre, so as to play both road shows and pictures.

Lon B. Ramsdell has resigned as manager of the New Palace Theatre at Moline, Ill., which opened recently, and will go to South Bend, Ind., where he will have charge of the Oliver Theatre.

Joe Hopp is at it again and in addition to big feature productions for the Fort Armstrong Theatre at Rock Island, Ill., he has signed up for some of the largest and best legitimate shows on tour for one stands at the house.

Maryland Censors Clothe Baltimore Poster Maidens

Without any warning whatsoever, an order was issued to the Century Theatre, Baltimore, Md., by the state censors to cover up the thirty-five 24-sheet posters that they had put up around Baltimore advertising Elinor Glyn's "Six Days." These posters showed six couples embracing and it is understood the objection to the posters was that there was no scene in the film like that depicted on the posters. The order to remove the posters came from Miss Marie W. Presstman, of the censor board, according to Thomas D. Soriero, general manager of the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century.

As a special added attraction to his program of pictures and music at the Rivoli Theatre, City Hall Plaza, Guy L. Wonders, the manager, booked Frank Silver, composer of "Yes, We Have No Bananas," and his Metropolitan orchestra of eleven pieces to play twice daily during the week beginning Monday, October 22. The members of the musical organization are all good musicians, having received their training in the orchestra of Paul Whiteman. Irving Cohn, who helped Mr. Silver in composing the banana song, is with the organization of musicians. Thirty thousand copies of the song were sold in Baltimore alone.

"The Gold Diggers" was held over for a second week at the Metropolitan Theatre, North avenue at Pennsylvania, by Bernard Depkin, Jr., the manager. "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" began its run at the Shubert Academy on Monday, October 22, following a four weeks' run of "Scaramouche" at that playhouse.

Always ready to aid in a worthy cause, the Exhibitors' League of Maryland, through its committee, including J. Louis Rome, Louis Schlichter, Frank Hornig and Charles E. Whitehurst, arranged a number of Sunday night performances given at several picture theatres to help raise funds to build the West Baltimore General Hospital. On Sunday night, October 21, the performances started at the following theatres at 7:30 o'clock: Garden, Capitol, Bridge, Broadway, Edmondson, Apollo, Horn and Rialto.

There is a great necessity at the present time for an additional hospital in Baltimore, it is said, to take care of the sick and injured of Baltimore, and a campaign is being waged to raise the money to build it. After the benefit performances at the Bridge and Edmondson theatres were over and the playhouses locked up for the night, thieves entered the office and stole $500, of which $154.80 belonged to the benefit fund.

Through the activities of Eugene M. Daly, manager of the New Theatre, Howard Jackson, mayor of Baltimore, has been enrolled as a member of the "Why Worry?" club, membership cards for which Mr. Daly got up and circulated at the New Theatre during the showing of the latest Harold Lloyd feature at that playhouse from October 15 to 27.

In connection with the showing of "Deserted at the Altar" at Loew's Hippodrome, Baltimore, which is under the management of E. A. Lake, a real wedding was held on the stage one night during the week beginning October 22. Gifts will be given to the couple by a number of Baltimore merchants.

A theatre seating 1,100 is to be built in Salisbury, N. C., by James Davis. The building will also have stores and offices.

Taking advantage of a full page feature story that appeared in the Baltimore Sunday Sun on Sunday, October 7, concerning Frederick Emmet Delaney, acclaimed as the "World's Champion Adventurer," Myer Perlin, manager of the Flaming Arrow Theatre, 1108 East Preston street, immediately got in touch with Mr. Delaney and got him to address his patrons on Wednesday and Thursday nights, October 10 and 11.

Judge Henry Duffy has issued a temporary injunction in the Circuit Court of Baltimore to restrain the Motion Picture Operators' Union, Local 181, from picketing the Cluster Theatre, 303 South Broadway, which is managed by Benjamin Cluster. According to Mr. Cluster, the picketing has been done because he employs a non-union operator, as there was a change made there a short time ago. The injunction also keeps the union from distributing handbills informing the public that union men are not employed by the theatre.

Rochester

The Regorson Corporation, operating the Regent and Piccadilly, has closed contracts with Henry E. Wilkinson, manager of the Dependable Pictures Corporation exchange, for the new Warner Brothers' pictures. Charles N. Johnson is now in Rochester as a representative of Dependable Pictures.

Manager William Fait, Jr., is showing "Rupert of Hentzau" this week at the Eastman, giving it an elaborate presentation. The Regent is offering "Zaza," while the Piccadilly has "Salomy Jane" for the first four days and "Brawn of the North" for the rear end of the week. At the Victoria the feature is "The Custard Cup." The Rialto has the Zev-Papyrus race pictures and "Shadows of the North." Norma Talmadge in "Ashes of Vengeance" opens at the Eastman on Sunday, October 28.

Atlanta's Initial Symphony Proves Brilliant Occasion

Upon the first public appearance of the new Atlanta Symphony Orchestra, made up of musicians from the various Atlanta theatres under the direction of Enrico Leide, director of the Howard Theatre Orchestra, the Howard Theatre was filled to capacity and hundreds were turned away unable to gain admittance. It was a brilliant affair and a great credit to Atlanta's picture industry. The orchestra has the backing of all the leading civic organizations of Atlanta.

Judge Henry Titus is to give Daytona, Fla., another beautiful playhouse which will represent an outlay of $50,000. It will be completed in January and will seat 750. Last year his company constructed the Vivian, Daytona's leading playhouse, at a cost of $110,000.

Dan Michalove, director of southern theatres for Famous Players, has made the move to New York, accompanied by F. L. Metzler, secretary and treasurer. Atlanta's large film and theatre colony is mourning the contemplated wholesale removal of F.-P. theatrical staff to the New York office, and there was none who did not regret deeply the going of Dan Michalove, who has for many years been identified with the industry in Atlanta in an influential capacity.

The Montgomery, Ala., "Advertiser" in a recent story paid signal tribute to H. C. Farley, director of Southern Enterprises theatres in Alabama, for his work in defeating Sunday closing bills and projected censorship bills in that state before the last sessions of the State Legislature.

For the first time since the closing law went into effect, Memphis theatres closed their doors the first Sunday in October. On the Sunday preceding they were protected by a restraining order, but they decided to close the following Sunday and remain tight until the matter is fought out.

Fort Lauderdale, Fla., is to have a new theatre to open about December. A new building, 50 by 130 feet, is nearing completion, a four-story structure with offices on the upper floors. The auditorium will be 42 feet high with sloping floor; the stage 33x22, equipped with adequate scenery and dressing rooms so that road attractions as well as pictures may be played. Mr. and Mrs. H. C. Beckner will be the managers.

Mr. Alverson, owner and manager of the Princess, Clinton, Tenn., is building an additional house in that little town. All new and modern equipment will be installed and he expects to open by Christmas.

LaFollette, Tenn., is soon to have a new theatre built by the present owners of the Palace Theatre there. Earl Hendron will be manager and it will open January 1, 1924.

The following exhibitors from the southeastern territory have been in Atlanta recently: B. H. Mooney, Birmingham, Ala.; Miss Margaret Luckel, Bijou Theatre, Mobile, Ala.; F. E. Williamson, Winter Haven, Fla.; Arthur J. Amm, Florida supervisor, Famous Players theatres; Manning and Wink, of Dalton, Marietta, Etowah and Athens, Ga.; E. R. Rogers, Alabama supervisor for Southern Enterprises; T. B. Grimes, Lyric, Gordon, Ga.; R. B. Wilby, Americus, Ga.; E. J. Sparks, Jacksonville, Fla.; J. C. Simpson, Millen, Ga.; Walter Blackin, Bainbridge, Ga.

Fred Sugare will open a new theatre in Birmingham about November 15. It will be called the "Sugare Theatre."

The Grand, Brunswick, Ga., has been reopened after complete renovation. J. B. Ashley, who was associated with F. B. Flourney at the Criterion, Macon, will be manager.

Washington, D. C.

Tom Moore has spread the golf germ in Washington. The latest recruits to the Scotch game, some of them Moore's own movie competitors, include Joseph P. Morgan, general manager of the Crandall theatre string; "Bob" Smeltzer, manager of the Associated First National Exchange, and R. Clinton Robins, manager of Pathe exchange. They have joined the Indian Spring Golf Club, of which Tom Moore was organizer and now president, and his brother "Bill" is secretary.

Washington's Hollywood is fast coming into existence. Since Harry M. Crandall began the building of a new home on exclusive Sixteenth street many other film men have been looking over sites and apartment houses in the vicinity, and so it has come to pass that Sixteenth street in the neighborhood of Allison and Buchanan streets is known as the local Hollywood. In this section are the home also of Joseph P. Morgan and John J. Payette, who are connected with the Crandall organization, and Edward Sherwood of the Exhibitors Co-operative Film Exchange.

Arrangements have been tentatively made for the entertainment and comfort of the exhibitors from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and Delaware, who are expected to visit Washington the end of this month to participate in the two-day get-together meeting. Headquarters will probably be established in the New Arlington Hotel, in which event the business meetings running over two days will be held there. The arrangements also contemplate two luncheons and a banquet at the Arlington and theatre parties on both evenings.

Special Musical Program at the Palace, Hartford, Conn.

Warde Johnston, general musical director of the S. Z. Poli Theatres, occupied the conductor's chair in the orchestra pit in the Palace Theatre, Hartford, the week of October 21, directing an augmented orchestra. The film program for the week consisted of "Going Up," Captain Kleinschmidt's Adventures in the Far North and the Zev-Papyrus race.

A final certificate of dissolution has been filed in the office of the secretary of state of the New Canaan Theatre Company, Inc., of New Canaan. All claims have been paid and the assets have been distributed in cash among the stockholders.

William B. Berry recently acquired the Strand Theatre Building in Hartford from John L. Talcott. The deal involved $800,000, the purchase price of the property.

"The Fifth Year," a nine-reel motion picture alleged to contain Soviet propaganda, and which was barred from showing in Providence, R. I., was presented in Poli's Hyperion Theatre, New Haven, on Sunday night, October 14. The chief of police stated that no complaints had been made against the picture and that no action could be taken unless such complaints were received by him.

In Bristol Daniel A. Peters, proprietor of the Palace Theatre, refused to grant permission to those presenting the picture to exhibit in the Palace. Leading citizens of the city formed a committee and supported Manager Peters's action.

In addition to being barred in Providence and Bristol, the police of other towns and cities in Connecticut have prevented its exhibition.

The directors of the Chamber of Commerce in New Britain have taken the first step toward acquisition of the Lyceum Theatre building for a municipal auditorium. An option has been obtained for the purchase of the site at a cost of $65,000. The directors of the chamber are to recommend that the city take over the building provided it can be purchased at a fair market price.

A special town meeting will be conducted in North Canaan on Friday, October 26, to decide whether or not the voters are in favor of the showing of motion pictures on Sunday during the hours specified under the state laws. Manager Blanchard of the Blanchard and Moseley theatres recently conferred with the selectmen of the town and it is said that those officials thought that there would be little opposition to the presentation of motion pictures on the Sabbath. Discussion of the project about the town, however, showed that there was considerable opposition.

The DeWitt Theatre in New Haven, the only picture theatre which the board of building examiners ordered closed, has had its alterations completed and was reopened on October 20.

All of the Poli theatres in Connecticut and Massachusetts showed the Pathe Zev-Papyrus pictures on Sunday night, October 21, the day after the race.

"What's wrong with the movies as a manager views them?" was the topic of a story in a recent issue of The Outlook, which was written by Courtenay Savage, picture theatre manager of Greenwich. He told of the "block booking" demand of certain companies and also of the uncertainty of pleasing the public. Mr. Savage declared that quality has superseded quantity, and of the future of the industry asserted that "it is not going backward—it is surely going forward. If they care to help, millions of men and women who make up audiences in this country will give the motion picture a square deal," were his concluding words in the article.

Cincinnati's Cox Theatre Swings Into Movie Column

The Cox Theatre, after having housed Shubert dramatic plays and a stock company, recently swung into the movie column, and it was believed that the house would in the future be devoted to pictures exclusively. It now develops, however, that pictures will be occasionally "sandwiched" in between regular attractions. The house has just finished a four weeks' run of "Scaramouche" and is being followed by "Shuffle Along," a musical play by colored performers, after which "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is booked for a screening.

Paul Honeyman, formerly connected with the Lyric and Gifts theatres, has been appointed manager of the Walnut Theatre to succeed Al Hyams, who has resigned to engage in other business.

Roy H. Beattie, manager of the Palace Theatre, has returned from Canada, whither he journeyed several weeks ago to recuperate after a long siege of illness at the Jewish hospital. Although greatly improved in health, he is assuming the managerial duties by degrees, and for the present is devoting but a few hours a day to the work.

There is a well authenticated report going the rounds that Gus Sun, head of the vaudeville booking office bearing his name, at Springfield, Ohio, is negotiating for the services of Frank Van Hoven, of vaudeville fame, to appear in pictures. It is likely that Sun may preface the movie enterprise with a Broadway revue, featuring Van Hoven, following which he will star him in a series of pictures.

Improvements costing $20,000 are being made at the Victoria Theatre, Steubenville, Ohio, by the La Belle Amusement Co., Inc., of which George Shafer is a leading figure. The work is expected to be completed early in November. Wm. Shafer, who managed the Herald Square Theatre prior to its destruction by fire, will look after the Victoria. It has been under the management of James Tallman for several years, prior to the expiration of his lease recently.

Manager I. Libson of the Lyric Theatre again has proven himself to be Johnny-on-the-spot by showing at the first performance Monday morning the Zev-Papyrus race, run at Belmont Park less than 48 hours previously. The race was shown in slow and normal motion.

Manager Libson is holding over "Why Worry" for a second week, while "The Common Law" is repeating at Gifts.

Jules Frankel, manager of Gifts Theatre, rode the goat at the October meeting of the Stage and Screen Scribes at Hotel Metropole this week.

Ed Bokius, who guides the destiny of the Valentine Theatre at Canton, Ohio, has returned from a vacation trip of several weeks to Cape May.

The Jefferson Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, is being given over to the American Legion for a part of this week, for the showing of "The Lost Battalion," the proceeds going to the ex-doughboys.

Canada

The Dominion Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, was reopened on October 15, after being dark for a considerable period, with a unique program consisting of a feature, "Legally Dead," two vaudeville acts and specialties, and a band concert by the Princess Patricia's Band, a famous Winnipeg organization, this bill being presented for the week. New prices range up to 35 cents.

Important developments have taken place in the organization of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Toronto, in the Manitoba and Saskatchewan territory. Arrangements have been made for the construction of a new theatre at Saskatoon, Sask., by Famous Players, it is announced, while the former Allen Theatre at Regina, a magnificent house, has been taken over by Paramount Enterprises, Ltd., a special subsidiary of Famous Players Canadian Corp.

Ed Renton, manager of the Lyric Theatre, Hamilton, Ontario, has acquired the Temple Theatre, Hamilton, which was reopened October 15, the Majestic Theatre, London, Ontario, and the Toledo Theatre, Toledo, Ohio. Jack Goodwin, formerly at the Lyric, is the manager of the Temple and J. J. Lindsay is leader of the Temple orchestra. Keith vaudeville and pictures have been booked into the Lyric, Hamilton. The Majestic of London has a combination policy.

Maurice Triller, formerly part owner of the Regent Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, has secured a long lease on the National Theatre, Winnipeg, and has drawn plans for the rebuilding of that house. An entirely new front is to be constructed and the whole theatre will be remodeled during the next six weeks.

The Royal Theatre, Vancouver, B. C., has been acquired by W. P. Nichols from George Nichols and extensive alterations are being made to the theatre. W. P. Nichols is the former owner of the Rialto Theatre, Winnipeg.

St. Louis

The Mid-West Productions Company launched about a year ago by Louis K. Ansell, Aaron A. Fineshriber and Leon de la Mothe has "blown up" and the stockholders are wondering whether they will ever get back any of the money they invested. The company never went into bankruptcy formally, but, to quote Ansell, who was its secretary, it "just petered out." He says that all of the money derived from the sale of stock, and more, went into the cost of promotion cost, such as printing, rent, etc.

Ansell and Fineshriber, owners of the Rainbow Theatre, 5 North Broadway, St. Louis, was induced by de la Mothe about a year ago to launch the Mid-West Productions Company. De la Mothe was made its director general. However, the company never actually did any producing in St. Louis and de la Mothe left the city several weeks ago.

Ansell says that he personally lost $2,500 in the enterprise while Fineshriber dropped $2,000. The company was capitalized for $150,000 and it was planned to sell $60,000 of stock to the public for $100 a share.

Mrs. Frances Peart of Gillespie, Ill., who owns the Pert Theatre, Gillespie, Ill., and a house at Wilsonville, Ill., has added the Grand Theatre, Carlinville, Ill., to her string. She obtained the management of the house from the Frazina and Fresaro interests, who conduct a string of houses in that vicinity.

Jules Laurent has sold the Lyric Theatre, Mounds, Ill., to S. E. Pertle of Jerseyville, Ill. Pertle operates a string of houses in Southern Illinois. The Lyric seats 400 persons. Pertle contemplates no immediate change in its policy.

Fall Festival Brings Crowds to Kansas City Film Houses

The final week of the Fall Festival, which has been in progress for a month, brought large crowds to Kansas City from out of town. The downtown section of the city was overflowing with humanity. This fact alone was good news to the theatre owner, for when there are crowds, there is business. The last week of the festival saw cooler weather, which also was a stimulant to business. Many of the downtown houses reported a larger patronage during the week and none of them complained of a slump.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas have set their stamp of approval on the Continental Screen Service and Artwin Service Corporation screen advertising plans. These were brought before the convention recently held at Wichita. The plans have been accepted as a means of additional revenue for the association.

Elinor Glyn's "Six Days" had a two weeks' run at Frank L. Newman's Royal Theatre of Kansas City. The picture drew much favorable comment from the press.

The Waldo district of Kansas City was assured of a suburban theatre of its own last week when excavation for the Westmoreland Theatre building was completed. The foundation got under way and work on the superstructure is scheduled to begin soon. The building will occupy a site 90x110 feet. It is designed to contain four ground floor shops. The seating capacity of the theatre will be 750 persons. The estimated cost of the structure is $50,000. The theatre will be ready for operation late in December, probably for a first showing on Christmas day.

The Newman Theatre of Kansas City and the Miller Theatre of Wichita recently inaugurated Paramount's "demonstration plan" with "The Spanish Dancer" as the feature attraction.

Three downtown theatres which have been closed for many months reopened here last week. There is much speculation among the trade as to the situation of the downtown theatres this season. The Empress, a large house, is showing musical comedy and pictures at 10-20-30 cent admissions. The Garden, another large house, has a civic comic opera company headed by De Wolf Hopper. The Grand Opera House is showing road shows of the popular priced type.

There has always been competition between the movie theatres and those showing pictures and vaudeville. But with the opening of three more theatres, it is a matter of speculation as to the amount of business each house will do. During the first week all reported exceptional business, but some think it might have been due to the Fall Festival. One can only wait for the season to become more advanced.

Ed Frazier of Pittsburgh, Kas., spent a week at the famous Excelsior Springs resort in Missouri recently. He was getting ready for a busy fall and winter season.

Ed Raymond, manager of the Orpheum Theatre at Wichita, Kas., was in town last week. He announced that the Orpheum was discontinuing the showing of feature pictures and would hereafter play vaudeville only.

Reinke and Hostettler, who operate a circuit of theatres, have opened an office in the Main Street Bank Building at 1822 Main street, Kansas City.

Among the out-of-town exhibitors seen last week were: J. J. Newcomb of Newk's Theatre at Burlington, Kas.; Bill Parson of the Pershing and Mr. Vleet of the Rex Theatre at Joplin, Mo.; Tom Magruder of the Elite Theatre, Iola, Kas., and Willard Frazier of Paola, Kas.

Louisville

The Brown Hotel Company, Louisville, which will open the $4,000,000 700-room Brown hotel on Oct. 25, in its articles filed on Oct. 18 includes the privilege of operating picture shows and theatres, drug stores and retail stores. The first floor of the big building is given over to stores, and the company will operate its own drug store from the start. J. G. Brown, who owns all of the capital other than a few shares held by directors to legalize the board, also owns the Ha-Wi-An Gardens, across the street from the hotel, which for a time were operated by L. J. Dittmar and Johnson Mussellman, picture men of Louisville. The gardens were unroofed by fire a few weeks ago, and no announcement has been made as yet concerning repairs.

Milwaukee

Blue Laws and "reformers who would substitute the policeman's club for the cross of Christ" were attacked by nationally known speakers at a recent session of the Seventh Day Adventists, now holding their national convention in Milwaukee. Among those who led the discussions on the matter were Prof. C. S. Longacre, secretary of the Religious Liberty Association of America; the Rev. W. F. Martin, California; the Rev. S. B. Horton, Chicago, and W. H. Thornton, Montana.

Theatrical men watching the developments of the convention were particularly interested in a warning sounded by these liberal leaders that reformers are planning to introduce a Sunday bill for the District of Columbia at the next session of Congress, hoping later to use this as a model for the entire country. The Adventists will, as a result, immediately begin organization of its forces to defeat this scheme, the leaders declared.

Picture shows in churches were condemned.

Peter G. Thielen, former manager of the Orpheum and Capitol theatres in Manitowoc, Wis., has obtained a lease on the New Opera House, a theatre in the northern section of the city. He will take charge Nov. 1. The house is one of the oldest in the city and heretofore has been used primarily for dances. Several years ago it was renovated, however, and a new stage built at that time should fill the present needs.

Fire which wiped out virtually the entire business section of the little village of Odanah, in northern Wisconsin, completely destroyed the Loyal Theatre, according to word received in Milwaukee. The loss to the proprietors of the show house is estimated at $30,000, which, it is believed, is covered by insurance. The cause of the blaze is unknown.

Wisconsin theatres performed another public service recently, when, during Fire Prevention Week, pictures of fire hazards and their remedies were flashed on the screen.

A welcome fit for a queen was accorded Mrs. Wallace Reid upon her arrival in Milwaukee recently for a personal appearance in connection with the showing of her picture, "Human Wreckage," at Leo A. Landau's Alhambra Theatre. Church women, judges, officers of the Wisconsin Anti-Narcotic Association, newspapermen, exhibitors, business men and officials of the new government hospital were among those on a reception committee at the depot as Mrs. Reid, her mother and Mrs. Reid's boy stepped from the train.

Purchase of the State Theatre of Hartford, Wis., one of the largest houses in Wisconsin outside of Milwaukee, has been announced by the firm of Leach and Christenson, owners of Hartford's Opera House. The State, completed two years ago at great expense, has been operated since its opening by H. A. LeVeille, a native of Bottineau, N. D.

The State has lately been operated on a three nights a week basis. This policy will be continued by the new owners, who will continue also to show at the Opera House.

Roy C. MacMullen, manager of Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, has obtained the services of the Ritz quartet, formerly with "Tangerine," a road show, for his house.

Leo A. Landau did so well with "Merry Go Round" when it played at his Alhambra Theatre in Milwaukee two weeks ago that he has brought the picture back to the Garden, his other downtown house.

"Seed Wheat Day" a Success

"Seed Wheat Day," sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, in order to help farmers in certain stricken areas buy seed wheat, was successfully put over with the help of the live-wire exhibitors of the State. October 9 was designated as "Seed Wheat Day," and the entire proceeds taken in that day were to be turned over to the Seed Wheat Pool.

The exhibitors who helped make the movement a success by setting aside this one day's receipts were: E. W. Egleston, Atwood; W. P. Bernfield, Wathena; S. A. Davidson, Neodesha; T. A. Davies, Cottonwood Falls; W. F. McDowell, Wellington; G. A. Kubach, Abilene; M. G. Kirkman, Hays; E. A. Dye, Logan; Mrs. B. Lock, Anthony; Robert Schell, Olsburg; W. H. Scheidel, Mulvane; Wm. Meyn, Kansas City; A. L. Chase, Wichita; Mrs. N. C. Perkins, Buffalo.

Wm. Schweisberger, Clearwater; E. R. Ruch, Claflin; W. G. Valerius, Arkansas City; H. R. Barker, Winfield; J. B. Tackett, Coffeyville; J. J. Newcomb, Burlington; R. H. Klock, Pittsburg; J. W. Somer, Wilson; Fees Bros., Parsons; J. T. Young, Fulton; E. Van Hyning, Iola; C. L. McVey, Herington; L. R. Ledou, Isabel; J. R. Pitts, Miltonvale; Chas. Bull, Wichita; Oscar Reinert, Humboldt; F. H. Ernest, Whiting; W. H. Hardman, Frankfort; W. H. Hardman, Blue Rapids; W. R. Dunagan, Douglas; C. Ernest Liggett, Madison; I. E. Runyan, Hutchinson; Harry McClure, Emporia.

T. N. Magruder, Iola; Raymond Gear, Florence; C. E. Welty & Son, Hill City; L. C. Snyder, Oakley; J. H. Tharp, Cherokee; I. S. Campbell, Winfield; Roy Bengston, Lindsborg; H. R. Dieter, Oak Hill; E. E. Frazier, Paola; T. L. Ricksecker, Kansas City; R. G. Liggett, Kansas City; W. H. Harpole, Dodge City; Chas. Barron, Wichita; Conrad Gabriel, Garden City; A. F. Baker, Kansas City, and G. L. Hooper, Topeka.

Buffalo Theatre Found Safe; Anonymous Letters Were Lies

Answering a flood of inquiries as to whether or not the new Lafayette Square Theatre in Buffalo, N. Y., is safe, Douglas Cornell, structural engineer of the Department of Parks and Public Buildings, has issued the following statement:

"The many anonymous letters and telephone messages calling the attention of the building department to the rumors as to unsafe and dangerous conditions of the Lafayette Square Theatre seem to demand some answer and therefore I submit the following statement:

"These rumors have been in circulation ever since the theatre was first opened, but none of them have ever pointed to any particular thing which would indicate a dangerous condition. The plans for this building were carefully checked by the engineers of this department and made to comply with the building ordinances before the building permit was issued. During construction the building was inspected at various times and the inspectors' reports indicate that it was constructed in conformity with the approved plans. Since said rumors have been in circulation an inspection has been made and not the slightest thing found to indicate an unsafe or dangerous condition."

The owners of the magnificent house hope that this will set at rest for all time the malicious reports which have been circulated from an unknown source for many months. Some reports even went so far as to say that there was a sign in the lobby declaring the house was condemned.

H. L. Levvy has resigned from the Select sales staff to assume the management of the Buffalo office of Associated Exhibitors, succeeding Harry Thompson, who has been transferred to the New Haven branch of the same company. Charles N. Johnson has resigned from the Paramount staff to accept a position with Dependable. Frank J. McCarthy has resigned as a Paramount salesman. Two men from Paramount's Peoria, Ill., exchange have come to join the local sales force. They are L. O'Connor and A. W. Friemel. Clayton Pfeiffer, former assistant booker at Paramount, has succeeded Frank Young at the booker's desk in the Vitagraph exchange. Mr. Young is now booking at Select, Al Barnett having gone on the road. Clarence Snyder has resigned as a Bond salesman. Bell Sterritt has resigned from F. B. O. to become a member of Eddie Hayes' Dempsey-Firpo fight picture sales staff. Izzy Cobe is now with Renown. Bob Harris having resigned. John Sitterly has left Select to join Charlie Gilmore in Syracuse. And so on and so forth.

Plans are practically complete for the new Shea Theatre in Buffalo. Mr. Shea has gone to New York to confer with architects on the proposition.

Benjamin H. Dittrich, manager of the Lyric, and S. Howard Ammerman of the Elvin, Endicott, N. Y., following a wave of criticism anent Sunday picture shows, have issued the following statement:

"We have received permission from the trustees to show pictures on Sunday and have never received any instructions to the contrary. We have the personal assurances of some of the trustees that they approve our action. We desire to observe the law and would be pleased to have the village board pass on the matter. The patrons of the moving picture theatres are almost unanimously in favor of Sunday pictures and they number several thousand. Sometimes between 4,000 and 5,000 persons attend the Washington avenue theatres on Sunday."

The world series brought joy to one A. C. Hayman of the Strand and Cataract theatres in Niagara Falls, N. Y. Charlie cleaned up about 500 iron men on the series. He claims this amount will be just enough to pay his fare to Europe, where he plans to go in February.

John J. Breslin has opened the New Grand Theatre in Auburn. The house, formerly the old Burtis Grand, has been remodeled and redecorated. Mr. Breslin represents the Schine interests who have leased the house.

Howard J. Smith this week is putting on a revival of "The Birth of a Nation" at the Palace Theatre, Buffalo, and packing 'em in like sardines. That one is still a box office attraction, it seems.

Moyer's Little Falls, N. Y., Theatre Opens Auspiciously

Under most auspicious conditions the Gateway Theatre in Little Falls, N. Y., owned by C. H. Moyer, who also runs a house in the neighboring city of Herkimer, was opened Monday night. The theatre has been under course of construction for nearly a year and adds another to the chain of theatres which now occupy the Mohawk valley. Many from Albany attended the opening, the exchanges being represented by several automobile loads which left for Little Falls during the early afternoon. Exhibitors were present from many places. The entire lobby of the house was banked with floral tributes.

There has been a change in Schenectady in opening the week, the State and the Albany opening on Saturdays, while the Strand, also under the management of the recently created Farash Corporation, starting its weeks on Friday. Week runs will prevail at the State, the only exception having been recently when "The Famous Mrs. Fair" was "pulled" after three days and "Cameo Kirby" substituted on short notice. Manager William Shirley of the operating company announces the booking of "Old Time Songs" at the State next week.

Mrs. Patrick Wallace, who runs the Grand in Whitehall, will close her house about November 21 and assume the management of the new Capitol, which is being erected by William Benton in Whitehall. Mr. Benton also conducts theatres in Ballston and Saratoga Springs.

On the policy that it pays to give one's patrons a bit more than they are paying for, Oscar Perrin, manager of the Leland in Albany, has just booked "Little Old New York," "Rupert of Hentzau," "Common Law" and "In the Palace of the King" for straight week runs, at a 25 cent admission.

According to rumor, the Cornhill Theatre in Utica, owned by Kelly and Burke, will change hands on January 1, but the new owners are not announced.

A priest is scheduled to run the theatre in Schroon Lake this winter, which has ordinarily been conducted by Arthur Richardson, who is planning to go south for the winter.

When it comes to odd names for picture theatres the "Two Bills" at Elizabethtown, N. Y., comes pretty near carrying off first prize in this part of the state. The house is run by Bill Knowlton and Bill Voschel.

Workmen are putting on the finishing touches this week at the Graylin in Gouverneur. The house ranks as one of the handsomest in all northern New York and has one of the Papayanakos brothers, who cleaned up a fortune in Watertown, as its owner.

According to all reports, picture theatres in the smaller towns in this state are holding their own these days and few complaints are being heard around here of poor business.

There is a showman by the name of Bill Perry in Rensselaer Falls who numbers everyone in the village as his friend. He is now operating his house twice a week and making money.

The many friends of "Nate" Robbins of Utica, head of one of the most powerful theatre chains in this state, extend their sympathy in the recent death of his brother Samuel, of Jamestown, N. Y.

Exhibitors in northern New York during the next week or two to come are due for a visit from Edgar B. Haynes, a salesman for Universal out of Albany, who knows the north country like a book.

After having had their machine overhauled, Jones and Jones, who run a cozy little theatre at Petersburgh, N. Y., have reopened their house, running two days a week, giving one day to a Universal program and the other to a Fox.

All because of the fact that he is unable to heat the parish hall, Father McCaffrey of New Lebanon, N. Y., will be unable this winter to entertain the good folks of that village with pictures, as in the past. The house closed Wednesday and will not open until spring brings warmer weather to New Lebanon valley.

There is a report current in this city that Charles Sesonske, well known in Oswego and Watertown as having managed houses there, may take over the Albany in Schenectady and run it as a vaudeville house. While the theatre is included in the combine, it is said that those at the head of the combination are rather anxious to get rid of it.

In Troy, the Griswold still remains closed, with no announcement as yet as to its reopening. While it is generally conceded that the house will run pictures only, it is a question whether they will be first or second runs. George Whelan will continue as manager.

"If Winter Comes" played to capacity business at the Lincoln in Troy during the past week, with waiting lines fully a block in length.

Sam Goldstein of Springfield, Mass., is having a fine organ installed at the State in Utica. Business continues good in that city. "The Midnight Alarm," running for four days, went over big at the State, Joe Raymond, house manager, being responsible for some excellent exploitation.

The many friends of Miss Sarah Sirit, an employee in the First National exchange here, extend their sympathy in the recent death of her mother.

The effects of the new Ford plant on Green Island is manifest these days in Watervliet. Business at the picture theatres is so good that John Christie, owner of the Third Avenue Theatre, is running six days to capacity, while George Tetrault is turning them away at the Grand, for seven days.

Floyd Tift of Berlin, N. Y., is once more back at his job as a mason, the picture theatre run by Tift and Derby having closed for the winter.

I. N. Charlton, head of the State Agricultural School at Morrisville, N. Y., plans to entertain his students during the winter with pictures. He paid a visit to Albany during the past week and booked a number of features. There are about 200 students at the school, which is located in a tiny village with a stage affording the only railroad connections.

West Coast Theatres Make Changes at San Francisco

A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, has placed Charles M. Pincus in charge of Loew's Warfield Theatre, succeeding Hal Neides, who has been in charge since the opening of this house. Mr. Pincus needs no introduction in this field, having for years been with the Herbert Rothchild Entertainment as manager of its leading houses and for a time director of publicity for the chain. He was with the Portola Theatre more than ten years ago and was transferred to the California Theatre when this house was opened under the direction of Eugene H. Roth. For the past few months he has been in charge of Loew's State Theatre at Los Angeles. Charles M. Thall, who has been director of publicity for West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, has been promoted to the position of assistant to General Manager Bowles, and in turn his former duties have been turned over to Frank Whitbeck.

D. M. Vandawalker, Jr., for a time connected with the San Francisco branch of Universal, has joined the staff of George M. Mann, who conducts a chain of theatres in the northern part of the State. He will make his headquarters in San Francisco.

M. H. Newman, western district manager of Universal theatres, has returned to San Francisco from a trip to the Northwest, where he arranged bookings for the theatres operated there. He will leave shortly for Los Angeles to meet Carl Laemmle, who has arrived on the Coast for a short stay. "Why Worry?" is in its fifth week at the new Cameo Theatre and the end is not in sight, there having been no signs of a falling off in patronage. For the next attraction Carl Laemmle has personally chosen "Thundering Dawn." Manager Jack Howard is working on a prologue that promises to be a winner.

Fred Decroteau, a recent arrival at San Francisco from Massachusetts, where he had charge of several houses for the New England Amusement Co., has been placed in charge of the Class "A" Theatre on Fillmore street, operated by Mrs. C. W. Muir. The house is being renovated and at the conclusion of this work Mrs. Muir will leave for an extended eastern and southern trip.

Walter Barusch, of the publicity department of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., is throwing an unusual lot of abandon into his work these days, the exuberance being occasioned by the arrival of a wee daughter to grace the Barusch home.

The Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., has temporarily suspended its policy of not advancing prices at the Imperial Theatre for any attraction and will increase prices for the forthcoming showing of "Little Old New York" and "Greed."

The Hyde Park band, of Hyde Park, Mass., an organization of disabled World War veterans financed by Marcus Loew, attended the fifth annual American Legion encampment at San Francisco and marched in the big parade with a banner inscribed: "Thanks to Marcus Loew." In compliment to their benefactor the visitors played at Loew's Warfield Theatre twice a day during their stay and also serenaded the Metro exchange.

The Alexandria Egyptian Theatre on Geary street, San Francisco, is rapidly nearing completion and will be opened late in November. Ben Black's Band has been engaged for a period of six months.

Clarence Brown, director of "The Acquittal," was a recent visitor at the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, and advised Manager Jack Howard that he was searching for locations for several forthcoming productions.

Preliminary construction work has been commenced on the picture theatre to be erected on Foothill Boulevard, Oakland, Cal., for Max Blumenfeld.

Mrs. A. J. Twilegar, whose theatre at Goldfield, Nev., was destroyed some time ago in the fire which razed that city, has erected a theatre building of stone and will open this within a short time. The seating equipment has been furnished by Walter Preddey, of San Francisco.

The Hotel Vendome at San Jose, Cal., has put in picture equipment to furnish entertainment for guests.

The Franklin Theatre, Oakland, Cal., is now being conducted under the management of L. B. Gross. Changes are being made in the lighting, seating and ventilating facilities. The program will be changed twice a week and prices have been reduced to 20 cents for matinees, except Sunday, and 30 cents for evenings and Sunday matinee, with 10 cents for children at all times.

Sam Dubois, of Dos Palos, Cal., is inspecting theatres in the San Francisco field with the idea of building a new house in his home town.

Efforts were made to wreck the Virginia Theatre, Virginia City, Nev., on the morning of October 11, use being made of a charge of dynamite. The full charge failed to explode, but the interior of the house was ruined.

A Receiving Station

Bessie Mack, who writes publicity for New York's Capitol when not besieged by newspapermen seeking smooth entrance, sends the following worth while tip to exhibitors:

"If there still are a few doubting souls who question the far-reaching benefits of radio, let them read and be convinced. The worldly goods of S. L. Rothafel, who puts the Capitol on the air every Sunday night, have been enriched by these tokens of esteem from radio fans:

"Fresh flowers, fresh fruit, fresh fish, 2 pairs of pink sleeve garters, 1 book of poetry with the compliments of the author, 1 oil painting with the comps of the artist, 141 ballads with the comps of the composers, 7 original cartoons, 1 Airedale dog, 1 Police dog, 238 souvenir postcards from radio fans on vacation, 17 ditto from honeymoon couples at Niagara Falls, 92 ditto from ditto at Washington, D. C., 1 hand-embroidered whisk-broom holder, 1 quart bottle of what-have-you."

The Circle Theatre has been opened on Market street, San Francisco, adjoining Loew's Warfield Theatre, under the direction of Aaron Goldberg. The opening attraction was "Down to the Sea in Ships."

The New Corning Theatre, at Corning, Cal., was recently damaged by fire, this being the second fire within a few months.

Hopkins of Harrisburg, Pa., Honored by Commerce Body

General Manager C. Floyd Hopkins, of the Wilmer and Vincent interests in Harrisburg, Pa., has been honored by the unanimous vote of the members of the Chamber of Commerce of the Capital City electing him to the presidency of that body.

Proprietor Samuel Blatt of the Owl Theatre, Twentieth and South street, has become associated with the Hodkinson exchange and will handle both short and feature subjects in the local territory in addition to conducting his theatre.

Kline Henderson, for many years associated with the Bennethum Circuit in its Philadelphia, York, Baltimore and Coatsville theatres, has severed his connection with that firm and is now in charge of the New Regent Theatre.

Although the Luna Theatre of Danville, Pa., has passed into the control of the Comerford interests, its management will remain in the hands of the former proprietor, Joseph Heim, who disposed of his equity in the property to the new owners. The management of the Columbia Theatre of Bloomburg, Pa., which also recently passed under the Comerford control, will be retained by Paul Hummell, who formerly supervised its business for Dr. G. W. Johns, the owner.

Manager John Newkirk of the Colonial Theatre, Allentown, was host to the children of Allentown on the third anniversary of the opening of the theatre, when the kiddies were treated to a free showing of "Daddy," on October 18.

Managers of the Wilmer and Vincent theatres in the Harrisburg section enjoyed the visit of Walter Vincent of the New York headquarters, who made the rounds of the various enterprises of which he is proprietor. While in the State capital he consulted with General Manager C. Floyd Hopkins as to new policies to be put into operation in the six theatres under the Wilmer and Vincent control in the city.

Under the building plans of the J. L. Chamberlain Amusement Company, there will be erected on the site of the old Kaier Opera House in Mahanoy City, Pa., a $300,000 picture house and business block. Demolition of the old structure has just begun and it is hoped to have the new theatre ready for opening in the spring.

While continuing to manage the Strand Theatre at Berwick, Pa., Oscar Althoff will also take over the duties of booking agent for the Family Theatre at Mahanoy City, which will under the new policy of its management be conducted as a vaudeville and picture theatre.

Burlesque has been added to the program of the picture theatre conducted by Al Gottesman of the Strand Theatre at Shenandoah, Pa.

It is the purpose of the Panther Creek Valley Amusement Company to complete the building operations of the theatre now in course of construction at Lansford, Pa., in time for the opening of its doors on Thanksgiving Day.

About the middle of November the new theatre which A. M. Pearlstine is erecting in Collegeville, Pa., will be ready for opening and this will be run in conjunction with a dance hall and hotel which adjoins the new structure and also owned by Mr. Pearlstine. The new theatre provides for seats for 300 and is the only movie house in the town.

Newspaper Films Hollywood For Cleveland Picture Fans

A most unusual trip to the West Coast by a newspaper editor is about complete, and Billy Leyser, photoplay editor of the Cleveland News, is on the way home with several cans of negatives—same being a photographic record of his visit to studioland. The News arranged to show them first run in Reade's Hippodrome upon Leyser's return, and thereafter in the neighborhood houses. They will and have received considerable publicity.

Famous Players is rapidly getting into shape for its new method of distributing its product in Cleveland and northern Ohio. This system, based upon percentage, will be in operation the latter part of October. In Cleveland either the State or the Allen Theatre will be the scene of the experiment. To introduce it, the film company and the theatre plans to run full-page ads.

The Stillman Theatre, in conjunction with the Cleveland Candy Club, gave a big orphans' party Saturday, October 13, the "Sweetest Day in the Year." It was one of the biggest affairs of the kind ever held in the city, almost 2,000 being in attendance. The picture program was "Why Worry?" and the Kleinschmidt Far North Adventure pictures. The entire orchestra was on hand.

Mrs. Wallace Reid will be in Cleveland the week of October 21, when her dope picture, "Human Wreckage," will be shown in the Circle Theatre, an east end house.

The girl at the piano, or the girl at the organ, whichever the case may be, again played the role of heroine in a film fire in Cleveland. This time it happened in the Fairyland Theatre on West 25th street. A film caught fire in the operating booth. The operator escaped from the booth through a window to a roof, while the pianist, Miss Selma Feneslaw, thumped the ivories louder than usual and kept the attention of the audience until firemen extinguished the blaze. The machines were badly damaged.

George Siebenoller, formerly owner of the Wind-a-meer Theatre, East Cleveland, has purchased the Boulevard Theatre, on the west side. He will redecorate the house and alter the policy.

Postpone Indiana Hearing on "Famous" Theatre Stock Issue

The hearing before the Indiana State Securities Commission of the petition of the Market-Circle Realty Company, which is the holding company for the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, for authority from the commission to issue $600,000 of preferred stock to finance construction of a new picture theatre on the northwest segment of Monument Circle, Indianapolis, has been postponed until October 26. The hearing was to have been held October 16, but two members of the commission were unable to be present on that date.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana has filed a protest with the securities commission against authorization of the stock issue, charging that Famous Players cannot provide an adequate financial guarantee for the preferred stock. The crowd that gathered at the state house for the hearing Tuesday afternoon was the largest that ever attended a hearing before the Indiana commission.

Baby Marie Osborne, diminutive 11-year-old star, was a guest in Goshen and Elkhart during the last week. She appeared in person at the Jefferson Theatre in Goshen and was well received. Baby Marie and her father, Leon Osborne, were in Indiana visiting relatives. They are on their way to New York and expect to sail for Europe in about three weeks.

Gustav G. Schmidt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana, will go to Chicago on Monday to confer with directors and officials of exhibitor organizations in the Middle West in regard to a date for a meeting at French Lick within the next few weeks to organize for opposing the admission tax. Mr. Schmidt said the meeting at French Lick will be much bigger and of far greater importance than at first believed. Exhibitor organizations in practically every Middle Western state will be represented, he said.

A mass meeting of all Frankfort residents has been called for next week to protest against the policy of the Conley Theatre in remaining open Sunday afternoons and evenings. The meeting has been called by the pastor of the Presbyterian church on behalf of the Ministerial Association. Mr. Conley recently announced his intention of operating the theatre on Sundays and so far has been very successful in carrying out his plans.

A branch office of the Consolidated Realty and Theatres Corporation is now in operation in Vincennes under the management of Herbert L. Swaggerty, formerly connected with the Indianapolis branch of the concern. The company has other branch offices in Fort Wayne, Terre Haute and Evansville.

Zev-Papyrus Race Films in Pittsburgh 36 Hours Later

The Grand and Davis theatres, Pittsburgh, were showing Pathe's Papyrus-Zev race films in Pittsburgh thirty-six hours after the race was run in New York.

Abraham Baltimore has purchased property on East Long avenue, New Castle, measuring 60x150 feet, on which he will erect a modern picture theatre. Mr. Baltimore operated the Strand Theatre at New Castle for a number of years, and only recently sold it.

The Margaret Theatre, new picture house with B. N. Johnson as manager, was opened on October 23 at Huntington, Pa. The theatre cost approximately $75,000. The building is 60x180 feet and two stories in height. Mr. Johnson formerly managed the It Theatre in the same town.

Arthur R. Doyle, theatre manager at Sistersville, W. Va., has enrolled in the hole-in-one club, making a No. 2 clean.

George Lasky, of the Strand Theatre, Brownsville, conducts a confectionery store in conjunction with his theatre. When film salesmen visit him, he lets them help wait on the candy trade while they are expounding to him the merits of their productions.

Ben Nadler has reopened his Prince Theatre at Ambridge, having completed remodeling and enlarging same. The house now seats 700, an increase of 250. New installations included a $10,000 pipe organ and ventilating plant.

J. George Schweitzer, of Titusville; Walter Silverberg, Greenville; and Jack Marks, Clarksburg, were recent Film Row visitors.

"A production that has universal appeal. . . Hal Roach has cut loose with a punch that registers. . . A picture that will appeal to everyone who likes a whiff of the open with a tang of the north. . . All the spirit of the London classic has been retained and it is a thoroughly interesting and novel production. . . Some remarkable photography. . . Action moves with a fine sweep and is animated with the utmost sincerity. . . Marvellous snow scenes, bleak wastes and wonderful silhouettes. Mr. Roach need have no fear for the success of his first dramatic effort. . . It should prove a money-maker for the exhibitor."—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"A very satisfactory adaptation of Jack London's novel. . . Provides fine entertainment. . . Should prove a satisfactory audience picture anywhere."—Film Daily.

"Pictorially beautiful with plenty of red-blooded action. . . All will find real enjoyment in this offering. Will undoubtedly prove a real box office magnet."—Atlanta Weekly Film Review.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

Associated Exhibitors

DESTROYING ANGEL. (6,000 feet). Star, Leah Baird. Did remarkable business for three days. Great picture. You can't make a mistake in booking this one. Used regular advertising. Attendance, 4,700. Draw best class in city of 18,000. R. Luis, Virginia Theatre, Fairmont, West Virginia.

WHEN HUSBANDS DECEIVE. (5,608 feet). Star, Leah Baird. These people are making some real features, and I can buy them right. I've never been disappointed yet in a picture with this star and my box-office is beginning to show it. Always hook something with them for the kids and you hit the whole family. Used slides and door knob hangers. Had extra good attendance. Draw middle class in town of 3,150. Steve Delandi, Joyland Theatre, Bethel, Pennsylvania.

F. B. O

BISHOP OF OZARKS. (4,852 feet). Star cast. We packed 'em in on this one. Everyone well pleased. A good picture. Book it and advertise it big. A story of the Ozark mountains. A picture you can boost to the limit. Went over big to a record-breaking house. Used ones, threes, sixes, newspaper. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had great attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

COLLEEN OF THE PINES. (4,738 feet). Star cast. This picture is one that will go over big if advertised right and you will satisfy ninety-five per cent. of the patrons. Don't be afraid to run it as a second-run picture. This idea of running first-run in small theatres is only putting the cash into the exchange's pocket. Run good pictures but buy them cheap and keep the cash yourself. Had capacity attendance. Admission ten cents. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

DESERT DRIVEN. (5,840 feet). Star, Harry Carey. A typical western that's bound to please. Patrons well pleased. Carey always pleases. Used ones, threes, photos. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had extra good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star cast. One of the best ever shown here; however, did not make any money on two day run, benefit for baseball team. Advertising slants, every known way. Attendance, one good house in two nights. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

First National

BRIGHT SHAWL. (7,500 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. This is a knockout. A wonderful production. Barthelmess and Miss Gish do splendid acting. Pleased one hundred per cent. Had a good house two nights. Costumes and photography wonderful. Made some money. Give us more like it. Has good moral tone. Good attendance. Draw country and small town class in town of 2,500. C. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David, Nebraska.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Excellent entertainment. Pleased all. Paid a little high, but made one of best net profit weeks. Had good attendance. Draw best class in city of 53,000. Admission 10, 15, 30. J. A. Flournoy, Criterion Theatre (569 seats), Macon, Georgia.

DADDY. (5,738 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Very good picture. Best he ever made. Had tent show as opposition. Used threes, photos, program, paper. Had fair attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood. Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star, Sylvia Breamer. A picture that pleased and although it did no very great business was acclaimed to be good entertainment by those who saw it. Usual advertising brought fairly good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star cast. An excellent picture, full of human interest from start to finish. No mistake can be made in booking this one. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MAN OF ACTION. (6,400 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Not so good as the "Hottentot" and the action is not so rapid as the title would have you believe; however, it was satisfactory for a Sunday showing, clean and fairly clever, but it lacked the movement and comedy that is expected of MacLean. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

ONE CLEAR CALL. (7,450 feet). Star cast. Good picture, pleased all who saw it. Had average attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

PENROD. (8,037 feet). Star, Wesley Barry. The kind of picture that draws well in a small town. Bought it right. Had fair crowd on a stormy night. Admission 10-25. Advertising slants, star, author. Had good attendance. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Benny Alexander. A Booth Tarkington picture that's very fine. Play it and go after it right and you can do some business if business there be in the town. You're going to give up for this. That's a way First National has, but you can get something out of this after the smoke has cleared away, if you don't mortgage the show house. A crackerjack. It's just that. Advertised with heralds and everything. Had excellent attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

R. S. V. P. (6 reels). Star, Charles Ray. This is the poorest one Charles ever made. If you've bought it you'd better hide after the show. Had fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A picture that everybody enjoyed. Plenty of action brings this picture high. Usual posters brought good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Star, Milton Sills. Splendid melodrama that pleased well here. Played it during convention of American Legion because of its especial appeal to Legionnaires. A picture that would please any time and ought to register well at the box office. Advertising slants, star, Ince, and the novel story. Good attendance, drawing all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand (600 seats), Liberty (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

SLANDER THE WOMAN. (6,400 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. Quite good. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

SLIPPY McGEE. (6,299 feet). Star cast. Will get by and that's all. Well acted but not a great story the way it is screened, not bad either. So it's worth a program price. Nothing more and at that figure will please you. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,034 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Good "crook" picture. Lew Cody and Eileen Percy good in supporting cast. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kreigh-baum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

WOMAN'S PLACE. (5,645 feet). Star, Constance Talmadge. Comedy drama of the highest class. Constance at her best. Pleased ninety per cent. or better. Although an old picture, it is well worth showing. Film was in good condition. Even the "blood and thunder" fans made favorable comments on this one. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance, drawing general class in town of about 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

Fox

FACE ON THE BARROOM FLOOR. (5,787 feet). Star cast. Pleased the audience. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

FOOTLIGHT RANGER. (4,729 feet). Star, William Russell. Nothing to rave about. Gets by if Russell is popular. Role doesn't suit Mr. Russell. We are accustomed to look for action from him. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

FOX SPECIALS. Have played "Over The Hill," "Queen of Sheba," "Connecticut Yankee," "Salome," "Fast Mail," and the "Town That Forgot God." Have made a nice profit on each of them and pleased my patrons. Have good moral tone and are suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

LOVEBOUND. (4,407 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Weak little program picture that gets by with star's friends. Advertising slants, star's name is all. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand & Liberty Theatre (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MAN'S SIZE. (4,316 feet). Star, William Russell. An average program picture. Some action, some nice scenery, nothing extra but will be liked by eighty percent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MIXED FACES. (4,400 feet). Star, William Russell. A program picture that will please but not enthuse. We re used to seeing Russell in a more vigorous role. Print in excellent shape. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

MOONSHINE VALLEY. (5,619 feet). Star, William Farnum. A very good outdoor drama. Will not stand close dissection but, as a whole, will satisfy lovers of the rugged type of story. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty Theatres (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

MY FRIEND THE DEVIL. (9,555 feet). Star cast. A good picture, but long way from a special. They won't go out and talk about this and they won't come back and see it second time. Draw rural class in town of 955. Admission 10-30. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre (250 seats), Nelson, Nebraska.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. A good program picture. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SECOND HAND LOVE. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. This latest star picture of "Buck" Jones is entirely out of the ordinary in story and action to those previously done by him. Much action and capable direction made a hit with everybody. Advertising slants, lithos. Had good attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabeth, Pennsylvania.

THREE JUMPS AHEAD. (4,854 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Some hard riding, good-sub-titles, an attractive leading lady Alma Bennett, a few thrills, and comedy make this a good western. Tom Mix always draws well for me. One person didn't care much for this but said that was probably due to the fact that he had seen Tom in "Soft Boiled" just a few days before. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

THREE WHO PAID. (4,800 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. A high class western that pleased everybody. This is the type of picture that is well suited to Dustin's acting. He never fails to please in an out-door picture. Moral tone fair. Good Saturday night picture. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. F. G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

TRUXTON KING. (5,613 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Here is a great picture sold at a program price. Could really be called a special only the title is too weak for that. But the picture is there. Usual allotment of posters, brought good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

VILLAGE BLACKSMITH. (8 reels). Star cast. Good story. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

WHO ARE MY PARENTS. Star cast. An exceptionally good picture that will please most any audience. William Noble, Orpheum Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Goldwyn

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). Star cast. Good, not big but good clear picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-40. L. S. Goolsby, Royal Theatre (245 seats), Marvell, Arkansas.

RAGGED EDGE. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Seven drawn out reels which could have been put in four. Good acting but no plot. direction very poor and a great disappointment. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw miners and railroad men in town of 3,000. Admission 35-10. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. One of the best pictures of last year. Raised admission on this one. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw tourists in town of 470. G. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barrymore. Very good picture, little too long to suit our crowds. Wonderful acting. Paid too much; lost money. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw mixed class in mining town. Admission 15-25. J. Ceva, Jr., Enterprise Theatre, Glenalum, West Virginia.

SHERLOCK HOLMES. (8,000 feet). Star, John Barymore. A little long for hot weather, but the attraction pleased. Acting very good, followed the stage play, showing all the high lights. It was a good attraction, thank the Lord. Not much moral tone, and is not suitable for me for Sunday showing. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

SOULS FOR SALE. (7,864 feet). Star, Barbara LaMarr. Picture good and pleased all seeing it. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Hodkinson

WHILE PARIS SLEEPS. (4,850 feet). Star cast. Short and snappy. A good light summer story. No chance for Chaney or Gilbert either in this picture. Photography good, print in good shape. Had poor attendance. Draw rural class in town of 955. Admission 10-30. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre (250 seats), Nelson, Nebraska.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet) Star cast. A thrilling sea story with a cast that is a treat to watch. The whaling expeditions are vividly realistic. The title isn't good enough for the picture. Has fair moral tone. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

FIGHTING MAD. (5,436 feet). Star, William Desmond. An older Metro feature that pleased Saturday night crowds. How the kids did yell. A good program picture for the "little feller," especially if you have shown "Three Musketeers." Used slide, billboards. Had good attendance. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

FORGOTTEN LAW. Star, Milton Sills. Boys, if any of you have passed this one up get it now. The cast is capable and the story is very effective. Left "good taste" with patronage. Has good moral tone and is as good as a sermon. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

NOISE IN NEWBORO. (5,300 feet). Star, Viola Dana. Here is a good one. My patrons thought this one was extra good and it

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

What would a producer say if an exhibitor told him, "I'm showing that big feature of yours tonight. I'm leaving out about six titles; probably there will be half a dozen big scenes cut short.

"Oh, yes—and the film will be stopped a few times at unexpected places. Besides, the climax of the whole picture will be chopped up."

Mr. Producer would go right up in the air!

Then why let his exchanges send to exhibitors prints that ARE IN THAT CONDITION?

VAN.

went over big. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

PEG 'O MY HEART. (7,900 feet). Star, Laurette Taylor. Good picture. Pleased. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

SHERLOCK BROWN. (4,800 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. Bert Lytell is popular with quite a few people here but this show no one liked. Impossible, foolish, silly, such were the comments. That's enough isn't it? Had poor attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

TOLL OF THE SEA. (4,600 feet). Star, Anna May Wong. The exhibitor who books this will coin money; an excellent production. One of the most beautiful pictures exhibited here for a long time. Should please all. Gasps of delight. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 15-25. Joseph L. Katz, Lyric Theatre, (350 seats), Woodbine, New Jersey.

WHERE THE PAVEMENT ENDS. (7,706 feet). Star cast. A picture that didn't mean anything much at this box office and the general verdict, the worst picture Rex Ingram has directed. Can't see much money in this for exhibitors. Used heralds, etc. Had fair attendance. Draw health seekers, and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Paramount

ADAM AND EVA. (7,153 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Now here you went and gave us eight of the longest reels we ever heard of in this little flimsy old story that could have been done in four reels. What did we tell you about this long drawn out stuff? Don't you know that people are tired of it? Take a tumble to yourself. Had worst attendance. Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. Absolutely too long. Personally I walked out on this one and had "oodles" of company. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,814 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. One of Meighan's best. Played this three days in middle of the week; business picked up each night. We need more like it. Used newspaper, twenty-fours, threes, ones, lobby and heralds. General patronage in town of 3,000. We get the best pictures and have no summer slump. W. B. Renfroe, Dream Theature, Sedro-Wooley, Washington.

BACK HOME AND BROKE. (7,817 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. We opened the house after being closed eight weeks with this and we got the "haha" for the title just fitted. Good picture, as you've heard before. Moral tone O. K. Suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance. Draw student and family class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The best thing this star has turned out to date, opened good but fell off on the end of the week due to heat. Local censors passed without cuts. Has spicey moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw high class in city of 75,000. Admission 28-40-55. W. H. Lusher, Strand Theatre (900 seats), Pasadena, California.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A good picture of its kind, but too many like this shown before. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. drawing family and student classes in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

BURNING SANDS. (6,909 feet). Star cast. This feature did more business for me than many specials. Played to full houses at regular admission, and pleased one hundred percent. Many liked it better than the "Sheik." Would advise all exhibitors to use this one. Used heralds, slide, boards, photos, window cards. Had capacity audiences. Draw farmers, summer visitors, townspeople in town of 800. Admission varies, usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A fair program picture. Should please, heard no kicks. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DAUGHTER OF LUXURY. (4,538 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A fair program picture. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

DICTATOR. (5,221 feet). Star, Wallace Reid. This is a very good picture with plenty of action and comedy. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Slow, long drawn out picture, with good cast of actors. Has its good points. Love drama, suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance, drawing middle and lower class, residential district of big city. Admission 15 matinee, 25 cents evenings. J. F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,260 seats), San Francisco, California.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Miles Minter. A truthful drama of woman's frailty and youth's glorious courage that will warm every heart. The story tells of a woman who loved once and married twice and then risked her honor and life to win back her first love. No mistake will be made in booking this one. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Liked by about fifty percent of our audience. A very, very ordinary program picture. Our first of the super thirty-nine from Paramount. Hope the rest are better. Had average attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star cast. Little entertainment value here and patrons voted it tedious. As to box office value would term it a lemon. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

EBB TIDE. Star cast. Pleased an average Wednesday crowd. Two reels too long. Film punk. Has good moral tone and is too rough for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25, 15-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

EXCITERS. (5,039 feet). Star cast. A very satisfactory and pleasing picture all the way. It seems to be the type the movie audiences of today like best. Miss Daniels is good and Antonio Moreno is particularly good, putting over a crook-detective role in a manner that pleased. Our people seemed to like it very much for three nights. Not exactly suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw general working class in city of 18,000. Admission 10-20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

FOR THE DEFENCE. Star, Ethel Clayton. Another old one. Just got by here. Star has quite a following due to her splendid personal reputation. This is just a good program picture. Not ideal for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

GO-GETTER. (7,771 feet). Star, Roy Barnes. In six reels this would have been a hundred per cent plus picture. Film fine. Has absolutely clean moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had below average attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25, 15-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

GREAT IMPERSONATION. (6,658 feet). Star cast. Fair program picture. Some liked it and some did not care for it. Will get by if you don't promise much. Used ones, slide. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

GRUMPY. (5,621 feet). Star Theodore Roberts. One of the most intelligently handled pictures I've seen. Roberts is great, balance of cast capable and the clever handling of the simple story will delight the better element. It pleased extra well for

MERRY GO ROUND (Universal). Here is a real good picture and one that is a real special; one of the most beautiful stories ever told upon the screen and the picture pleased everyone. I started to work on this one three weeks before I showed it. Giles Master, Strand Theatre, Gallup, New Mexico.

WHY WORRY? (Pathe). Pleased my patrons equally as well as Lloyd's previous successes. In my estimation as good as any of the Lloyds and it is certainly different. The giant will send everyone away wondering. Not worth an increase in film rental over "Safety Last" but I paid a third more. C. W. Cupp, Royal Theatre, Arkadelphia, Arkansas.

MERRY GO ROUND (Universal). This is one of the best pictures that ever adorned the screen. Really great. Something decidedly different. It is lavish. It is big. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HER DANGEROUS PATH (Pathe-Serial). A different type of serial. Attracts a different type of patrons, especially the ladies. I admitted all ladies free on opening night. M. J. Bradley, Airdome Theatre, Thornton, Arkansas.

FRENCH DOLL (Metro). While a very good picture, not up to Mae Murray's standard. Do not raise admission prices. It will please seventy-five per cent. but may disappoint Murray fans. Fair moral tone, not suitable for Sunday in small town. J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

CIRCUS DAYS (First National). Did not draw the adults as expected but more than pleased those who came. Made money at that; second night better than first. It's a very good picture and better than "Oliver Twist." J. A. Harvey, Strand Theatre, Vacaville, California.

as. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Two days is our usual maximum run but we gave this one four days at raised prices. Held up for good business all days. Created much discussion which brought business. Everyone satisfied. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Attendance better than usual. Draw all classes in town of 8,000. J. E. Madison, Idaho Theatre, Twin Falls, Idaho.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star cast. An exceedingly interesting picture and well worth seeing. It's a bracing yarn of the world of ships. Swift as a gale and as mighty as the sea. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JAVA HEAD. (7,365 feet). Star cast. A peculiar combination here. A beautiful production, intelligently staged, but the two leading feminine members of cast are entirely miscast. Leatrice Joy does not look well as the Manchu Princess and Jacqueline Logan cannot play the American girl. Costume paper kept them out. Why do they try to force costume stuff on us? Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had very poor attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star, Bert Lytell. An exceptionally good crook story that was admirably produced. Lytell shows to advantage in this type of a picture. Supporting cast good. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star cast. Good production. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. A program picture very similar to "The Sheik," possibly better. Lots of action, well produced but producers should realize that patrons are tired of oriental stuff. Advertising slant, state it is equal to "The Sheik" with the action of a serial. Good attendance, drawing farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Stood well and pleased the people. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Good picture that pleased my audience. Fast moving drama that ought to please anyone. Dalton is a good drawing card here. Good moral tone; suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing all classes in town of 2,500. Admission 10 to 55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (500 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

MAKING A MAN. (6 reels). Star, Jack Holt. Good picture but not as good as "While Satan Sleeps." It is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw tourists in town of 470. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

MISSION MILLIONS. (5,870 feet). Star, Alice Brady. Clever crook drama. Film fine. Has good moral tone. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw small town class in town of 1,200. Admission 10-25, 15-35. S. G. Harsh, Princess Theatre (250 seats), Mapleton, Iowa.

NTH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. A fair show of some human interest. Patrons commented favorably on it and several were quite enthusiastic in their praise. Al. C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

A Late Vitagraph

MAN NEXT DOOR (Vitagraph)). An entertaining picture with good comedy. Will not please the women, but the men will like it. Not the type a woman cares for, but they won't kick very much on it. Print good. Draw university students and better class. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star cast. Good cast; well acted and very pleasing. Did average business with regular advertising. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star cast. Corking good picture. Pleased most all of them. Story was new, keen, fine, and dandy. Play it boys and you will be pleased so will the congregation. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Good attendance. Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre, Guthrie, Oklahoma.

PARAMOUNT PICTURES. Prints tore all up. Leaders gone. Ends gone. All exhibitors in small towns should write them up. Good picture, bum prints. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

RACING HEARTS. (5,600 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. A splendid automobile story and a picture that most anyone should enjoy. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TO HAVE AND TO HOLD. (7,518 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Very, very good picture; pleased all. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,900. Admission 10-25. Strand Theatre (300 seats), Pierce, Nebraska.

TO THE LAST MAN. (6,965 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. A rousing romance of the early West with the tremendous sweep of action for which the author is noted. Produced under Zane Grey's personal supervision, and actually screened in the picturesque cattle and sheep country of Arizona. The picture is splendid. See it for yourself and be convinced. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. This picture with two very fine stars has more thrills and more action than any other picture therefore will please your audience. I am sure

YOU CAN'T FOOL YOUR WIFE. (5,703 feet). Stars, Leatrice Joy, Lewis Stone. Good picture of its class; too long, could have been in five reels. Miss Joy, Miss Naldi and Mr. Stone do good work. Paid too much for this so did not come out. It might pull in some sections of the country but didn't do much here. Pleased about sixty per cent. Fair moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance of all classes in town of 2,500. Admission 10 to 55. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre (500 seats), Silver City, New Mexico.

YOUNG RAJAH. (7,705 feet). Star, Rodolph Valentino. I was afraid of this feature, as I have read so many adverse criticisms, but I only wish all the pictures on the market were as good entertainment as this one. It pleased a greater percentage of the audience than "Blood and Sand." The price was right. Paramount has always been fair on film rentals with me, and they send along a print instead of an apology for your money. "The Young Rajah" will please any type of audience. I used slide, billboards and Paramount Week advertising. A very stormy night, so the attendance was poor. Used slide, heralds, billboards. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Pathe

SAFETY LAST. (6,400 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. Lloyd's comedies draw them in and please everyone. The kids went wild about it and some came the second time to see it. It is there. Had good attendance, S. R. O. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

Preferred

THORNS AND ORANGE BLOSSOMS. (6,971 feet). Star cast. Very fine picture. Direction, story, settings, photography all that could be asked for. Suitable for Sunday. Fair attendance of family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

Selznick

GRUB STAKE. (8,061 feet). Star, Nell Shipman. You find this a good one. In fine shape. Only thing have against this one it's too long and somewhat draggy. If you run it put a single reel comedy or news with it. We ran a two reel comedy with it and made too long a show of hot weather. Did fair business for two days. Bought the picture right. This one is better than "Quicksands," with the same star. Push on this one. It will stand it. Might say fine scenes and snow stuff. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

MARTIN JOHNSON'S JUNGLE ADVENTURES. Ran this early in the summer hoping to reap from big publicity that was being given "Trailing African Wild Animals." Was careful to advertise that there were pictures from Johnson's previous trip. Worked hard to put it across, but it threw me for the worst flop I've had in months. The production is good, although probably rather tame in comparison to Johnson's last production or Snow's. The titles are worthy of special mention. I consider the showing of this type of picture one of the loftiest missions of the industry. I am just starting advance work of Johnson's last picture. Am letting the schools in on this for a percentage. If we don't pack them in, I'm no showman. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 25-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A masterpiece and that's that, nothing more to say. It cost money to make. It will cost you money to get and if you do buy it, you've got to get busy every minute prior to opening, for you must get them in on the first show. My experience was at the price I could hardly afford to have an empty seat. A grand time was had by all my patrons, and ever since the exhibit I have been trying to figure how I came out. I said "out." Usual advertising brought great attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Universal

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,373 feet). Star Reginald Denny. Very good picture. Lots of action, good plot, splendid photography.

Pleasing comedy touches by Buddy Messenger. Heard nothing but praise from my patrons. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

CONFLICT. (6,205 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. This picture would have gone over strong if the exchange had shipped us a good print. The way it was it was terrible as half of the house walked out in the middle of the show. The same old stuff—a good picture, but Oh! what a print. Usual advertising gave good attendance. Draw loggers, farmers, fishermen in town of 400. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (300 seats), Skamokawa, Washington.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good, and will please most everybody. The horse racing scene is particularly good and creates lots of excitement with both adults and children. Condition of print good. Had good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A good program picture with plenty of action but should have been a little longer as some of the scenes are not exactly finished although the picture pleased very much. Moral tone o. k. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

KINDLED COURAGE. (4,418 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Edward does good in this. Don't know why they change from Hoot to Edward when they hop from two reels to five. The western fans want to know Hoot. Draw tourists in town of 470. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

KINDLED COURAGE. (8,400 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. About the best Hoot Gibson picture we ever ran. Not so much western as his others usually are, but good supporting cast, good story, and Gibson better than usual. Poor attendance. Fred J. Jones, Cozy Theatre, Rialto Theatre, Nelson, Nebraska.

NOBODY'S BRIDE. (4,861 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. A good clean entertainment. Pleased all. Rawlinson goes good here. Everybody seemed pleased. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

PAID BACK. Star cast. An extra good program production that seemed to please about eighty per cent of our patrons. While theme is rather daring, it is handled in a clean manner and will not give offence. Moral tone excellent: suitable for Sunday. Average attendance of family (mostly labor class) in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre, (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

POWER OF A LIE. (4,910 feet). Star cast. A very good picture but failed to draw Saturday crowd as they look for raw stuff here on that day. Suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in big city. Admission always ten cents. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

PRISONER. (4,795 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. This is not the usual type of picture for Rawlinson, but it will get by where he has a following. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

SECOND HAND ROSE. (5 reels). Star, Gladys Walton. A dandy little picture. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

SHOOTING FOR LOVE. (5,100 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. One of Hoot Gibson's pleasing action pictures. Ran it to a holiday crowd and they raved about it. For the western type of action stories this lad does the best of any we get. Has good moral tone. Not suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw working class in city of 18,000. Admission 10-20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Nothing to it, and unless they put him back in Westerns, I don't want any more Hoot Gibsons. My patrons don't care for him in this type picture. Attendance fair. Draw all classes in small town. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

TRAP. (5,481 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. They substituted this one for "Man To Man." Fair northern drama, but wouldn't class it as an extra special or Jewel. Has fair moral tone. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,407 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. Had some audience appeal, still did not mean anything above the average at the box office. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

UNDER TWO FLAGS. (7,407 feet). Star, Priscilla Dean. A good picture of its kind but does not appeal. My patrons don't like this kind and had several knocks on it. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

SIX DAYS (Goldwyn). This is one of the best pictures ever shown in Dallas; unanimous approval of everyone who saw it. Lighting is exquisite; settings are very beautiful. Direction of Charles Brabin faultless. Acting of stars and cast splendid. A 100% picture. S. Charninski & R. Stinnett, Capitol Theatre, Dallas, Texas.

RUGGLES OF RED GAP (Paramount). Here is the best picture of the year. It simply was a knockout; heard more good comments on this than any other picture I have run in many a day. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico. (Fuller report later, space prevents full use here.)

RUGGLES OF RED GAP (Paramount). Book it and boost it; it's different from other pictures and will please them all. Good print. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

PIONEER TRAILS (Vitagraph). A mighty, mighty satisfactory western with good cast. I haven't seen "Covered Wagon" but if it satisfies any better than this one it is some picture, and from what I hear from those of my patrons who have seen the run in Chicago, that is a great picture; but I am willing to bet that with the price this will be held at (and perhaps what it is worth) I will have more money from this "P. T." than I will from the "C. W." This is not a knock-'em-dead, drag-'em-out, but a real drama with some splendid acting and a story!—which most Westerns do not have. A worth while production that is worth the money and the effort to get them in, knowing that those who ordinarily do not like this type will be satisfied. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Vitagraph

BLACK BEAUTY. (7 reels). Star, Jean Paige. A splendid picture; better than the book. Pleased over ninety per cent. Fine photography, good film, although a few subtitles cut short. The trailer somewhat misleading to those unfamiliar with the book—too many thrills in it—gets them in all right but the thrills are not in such profusion as the trailer leads them to expect. Moral tone of picture excellent. Used ones, threes, twenty-fours, slides, dodgers. Had poor attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

FLOWERS OF THE NORTH. (7,130 feet). Star, Henry B. Walthall. A Curwood that I approached with some apprehension on account of the only moderate rating given in World review and consensus. However, I was completely satisfied. Futhermore it proved to be a drawing card and I believe pleased a large percentage. Had good attendance. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 25-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

GOD'S COUNTRY AND THE WOMAN. (8,000 feet). Star, William Duncan. This is a reissue and a new print. Everyone enjoyed the picture. Many had seen it before and glad to see it again. Did not play a big price but did big business. Pictures are like the styles: if a woman came down the street in a fig leaf she would be a big attraction, the same can be said of some old programs. Had capacity attendance. Admission ten cents. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

LOYAL LIVES. (5,950 feet). Star, Brandon Tynan. Melodrama from start to finish with a little comedy now and then. But if they like "meller" play it. It can be bought for a fair price and it pleased fairly well here; in the face of a tough storm I did pretty well. A picture that's a little better than program. Usual advertising brought pretty good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

LUCKY CARSON. (5 reels). Star, Earle Williams. Fair program picture that pleased about seventy per cent. Showed this with a round of the "Leather Pushers" and an "International News Reel" and got by with it O. K. Action very slow but Earle Williams plays his part fairly well. Photography poor in spots. Title led patrons to believe this would be action picture. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendace. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

MAN FROM DOWNING STREET. (4,950 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Quite a pleasing little program picture. Had a number of favorable comments. Earle Williams does some good acting in this mystery drama. Good week-day picture. Had fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Warner Bros.

BEAUTIFUL AND DAMNED. (7 reels). Star, Marie Prevost. Entertaining but hardly a special except in price and cast. Had good attendance. Town of 3,720. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

BRASS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Played this behind ourselves, second run, and excellent. Rich business. Most universally liked picture we have ever played. Work of Irene Rich wonderful. Story strong, and characters well drawn. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had capacity attendance. Draw best and middle classes in city of 200,000. Admission 10-20. N. L. Royster, Capitol Theatre (340 seats), Birmingham, Alabama.

BRASS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Very good production. Fine moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Mrs. J. B. Travelle, Elite Theatre, Placerville, California.

MAIN STREET. (8,000 feet). Star, Monte Blue. A Warner Brothers classic that is a classic. Cast headed by Monte Blue and Florence Vidor is well chosen and does excellent work throughout. The only disappointing thing about this feature is the length. Nine reels is too long for a picture that could have been done in seven at the most. Do not be afraid to book this and advertise it well. It is worth an increased admission. Many said it was more entertaining than the book which has been

Comedies

BLACKSMITH. (First National). Not Keaton's best, but pretty good. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

NEWLY RICH. (Pathe). Snub's stunts in this new two reeler are not as convincing as in some of his old single reelers. It is rough stuff and lacks the finer points that go to make a high class comedy. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 20-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

PEANUTS. (Universal). About the poorest one reel comedy we ever ran. Will someone tell the kid that he is not a comedian? Nothing wrong with moral tone. Not suitable for any day. Draw family class (mostly labor) in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

PUNCTURED PRINCE. (Metro). A good comedy with as many laughs as possible for 2,000 feet of film. First Montana comedy I ever used and if that's a fair sample, I'd say he's a good bet. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

THREE WEEKS OFF. (Universal). Star, Lee Moran. Some new fun; this is the best Lee Moran so far. Will get by if your audience isn't too critical. Good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

UNCLE BIM. (Universal-Gumps). This is the first of the Universal "Andy Gump" comedies and it seemed to please. Two freak characters such as Andy and Uncle Bim put the story over. They look considerably like the cartoon drawings. They are elaborately mounted and Universal has spent some money in producing them. Looks like they will make good anywhere. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

Short Subjects

COLUMBIA THE GEM & THE OCEAN. (Universal). One of the "Leather Pusher Series" that was not up to the standard. The prize fight pulled off in the water was so prolonged that a good many of the "regulars" kicked. Seems that the director slipped and tried to make a slapstick comedy out of this one. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. F. G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

FIGHTING BLOOD. Round 9. (F. B. O. This is a good one. You won't need any comedy when you run round No. 9. It has enough comedy and good comedy. "Fighting Blood" is getting better as it goes along. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

HARD TO BEAT. (Universal). Star, Roy Stewart. A fair program picture; nothing either good or bad in it. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PATHE REVIEW NO. 177. (Pathe). As usual good. Something worth while. Has good moral tone and is always suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

State Rights

BORDER BANDIT KILLER. (Enterprise Dist). An excellent picture, well executed and full of pep. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

CYCLONE JONES. (Progress). Star, Big Boy Williams. A lemon for me. Five thousand feet of absolutely nothing. Leave this one alone. Used ones, threes. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance and am glad of it. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

IMPULSE. (Arrow). Star, Neva Gerber. (4,505 feet). Only fair picture, nothing to rave about; will prove fair entertainment to the indiscriminating patrons. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

SADDLE GIRTH. (Jans Distributing Co.) Star, Tom Mix. Don't boost these old Mix pictures as they are sure rotten and will give the present day Mix a black eye. Steer clear, regardless of what the salesman may say. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

STREETS OF NEW YORK. (Arrow). Star cast. (7 reels). An excellent society melodrama adapted from the old stage play. Made a hit with our audiences and should do as well wherever the old "melo" is liked. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 44,000. Admission 10-17-20-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre (1,100 seats), Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Monogram Pictures Offers Six Westerns Featuring Fred Thomson

By ANDREW J. CALLAGHAN,
President Monogram Pictures Corporation

We have made a year and a half's careful survey of the State Right market, particularly that market that has again been revived and is becoming so popular —Western pictures. Today there is being offered five or six series, or more, of Western pictures, all of them more or less alike. It may be a new face as a featured player, but in the essential the same theme, with the same mountains and plains back of them.

To successfully conclude and know a subject thoroughly one must start with the foundation, whether it be in thinking or building. We, therefore, start with the assured successes that the screen recognizes as indisputable. In 1906 George M. Anderson, "Bronco Billy," offered two-reel Westerns wherein he was the hero in the morning and doubling, in the afternoon, as the heavy. His stories were turned out at the rate of two a week, which satisfied and soothed the public of that time.

In 1910 to 1912 we graduated into the five-reel Western picture, in which William Hart pleased the public with films that were satisfying for those days.

Douglas Fairbanks came into Western pictures with personality plus, at the same time introducing into those Westerns a few well-planted, well-played and well-delivered stunts. He left that field to be succeeded by Tom Mix, who today gives us Western atmosphere, an attractive horse, some rough-riding and a little bull-dogging.

In the interim, four or five of the lesser stars, taking advantage of these major stars, have furnished the none too exacting audiences with just "Westerns." If Fairbanks was a star and a success, because of the Western pictures, together with the athletic ability that the man has, and if Mix was a star in Western pictures, combined with the athletic stunts and Western dare-devil ideas he injected into his pictures, why not continue to give your audiences that which has made two stars?

The reason we have not heretofore continued with such pictures was because there was no one on the market, especially the independent market, who has been thus far able to compete with either of these gentlemen.

The attendance and gross that "The Covered Wagon" has brought—together with the success of "Salomy Jane," "The Girl of the Golden West" and "The Bad Man"—have reiterated tenfold that which we already know: That, irrespective of age, American men and women have inborn in them that patriotic feeling and respect for their forefathers, who blazed trails across the prairies, and they want to see the spirit of the West carried on. All this being so, to succeed in a field of keen competition one must offer the exhibitors and public more than they are getting today in that class of pictures.

We are, therefore, in a position to offer to the exhibitors a series of six Western pictures, featuring Fred Thomson, who, if you will recall, was champion all-around athlete of the world. He has had a great deal of picture experience with Mary Pickford in "The Love Light," Universal's "The Eagle's Talons," etc. He also has to offer to the screen athletic and stunt ability which we have injected into our pictures. We are giving the public the Western picture in Western atmosphere, together with big sets, exceptional cast and the stunts that made reputations for Fairbanks and Mix.

Miriam in Theatre

Miriam Battista, child star of "The Steadfast Heart," and known throughout the country for the success of her personal appearances, is giving a one-act performance in Pittsburgh this week, October 22, during the showing of "The Steadfast Heart," at the Blackstone Theatre.

Creative Films Has Finished Sea Story

Fred C. Kusse, Sr., president of the Creative Film Corporation, announces the completion of "Superstition," a thrilling story of the sea. The shooting of the film has been completed under the direction of John B. O'Brien and it is now being edited and titled at the Hollywood Studios. One of the greatest all star casts that could be assembled was gathered together to present "Superstition." These include John Bowers, Margaret De La Motte, Sheldon Lewis, Joseph Dowling, Edward Burns, Spottiswoode Aitken, Cesare Gravina, Claire McDowell, Martha Marshall and others. The story was adapted from I. W. Irving's story, "Trapped," by Frank Beresford.

According to the announcement no time, care or expense has been spared to make "Superstition" one of the really big feature productions of the year.

Many of the scenes were taken at sea and a big three-masted old-time sailing vessel was chartered for four weeks by W. H. Carr, production manager of the organization, for the film.

Martha Marshall and Edward Burns in Superstition, a Creative Super-Feature Directed by John B. O'Brien.

Company Preparing Its Activities

The Export & Import Film Company, Inc., of which Ben Blumenthal is president and Louis Auerbach vice-president, is now prepared to push its activities in all territories, and in order to do this will probably take over the world rights to a large number of American productions in the next few weeks. The company has its own branch offices in London, Paris, Berlin and Budapest and has agents in all the principal capitals of the world.

Yokel Is Named to Direct Publicity

L. Lawrence Weber, producer of "Little Jessie James," now playing at the Longacre Theatre, announces that he has appointed Alex Yokel general director of publicity of theatrical enterprises. Mr. Yokel is a former dramatic editor of the Chicago Examiner and of late has exploited a number of feature motion pictures which have played in the legitimate theatres.

Artclass Finishes New Production

Max Weiss, vice-president and general manager of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces the completion of their new production, "One Night," the production having been cut and titled by Katharine Hilliker, and is rumored as being a very big picture. The mode of release has not as yet been determined.

Two Players Added to Cast

Two interesting names have been added to the cast of Mildred Davis' first Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher, as yet untitled. They are Miles McCarthy, who plays a detective, and Margaret Cullington, doing an old maid role.

Beau Brummel Pretentious

The forthcoming Warner classic, "Beau Brummel," in which John Barrymore is starred, is declared by Jack Warner, production manager, to be the biggest and most pretentious production that has ever faced the camera for the Warner organization.

In points of cast, sets and elaborate costuming, the Barrymore production surpasses any of the eight productions that have already been completed by the Warners. Almost a thousand costumes typifying the periods of 1795, 1814 and 1821 have been assembled by the research and wardrobe departments for the filming.

Fadman Announces Organization Plans Completed for Red Seal

Edwin Miles Fadman announces that organization plans have been completed for the formation of the national distribution company known as the Red Seal Pictures Corporation. Offices have been opened on the tenth floor, 1600 Broadway.

Fadman is president and general manager. Harold Rodner is vice-president and Max Fleischer, treasurer.

Fadman will be remembered as the producer and distributor of the unusual "Einstein Theory of Relativity" film. The skepticism with which his idea was originally greeted of putting the Einstein theory on the screen was changed overnight into enthusiastic commendation, as the film successfully played circuit after circuit throughout the country following upon its phenomenal four weeks' run on Broadway.

Rodner is well known in the New York Metropolitan District for his successful distribution there of such novelties as "Out-of-the-Inkwell Comedies," "Felix the Cat Comedies," "Screen Snapshots," etc. Rodner was previously affiliated with the Stanley Company in Philadelphia for many years.

Max Fleischer needs no introduction to film men. The creator of the famous "Out-of-the-Inkwell Comedies" has been advertised from coast to coast by his mirth-provoking clown.

Fadman's idea in the formation of this company is based upon the fact that study of the present day film industry has convinced him that "expensive pictures" do not necessarily mean "better pictures," and it is "better pictures" that exhibitors and public want.

"The soaring costs of production will eventually bring about their own downfall," said Fadman. "The exhibitor pays and pays and pays, but there is a limit even to his ability to pay. As the producer's costs for "super-pictures" rise from one-half million to a million, to a million and a half and now the two million mark, signs of uneasiness on the part of the exhibitors become more and more pronounced.

"The time must inevitably come, in fact the time is here, when the value of a picture will be judged not by the number of dollars that it costs but by the amount of entertainment it gives. Applying this standard to most of our 'super-pictures' they flop miserably. The public is interested in seeing a good story spun out before them. They are not so much interested in knowing that the set they are looking at cost $100,000 to construct.

"The public further wants novelty pictures, pictures that have something of the unusual about them. America is the original home of novelty and through its very wide-awakeness, will continue to be that. Novelties in any line of industry receive a greater reward in America than in any other country in the world.

"I expect to place our company in the foreground in providing exchange men and the public with unusual and distinctive pictures."

The Red Seal Corporation promises some interesting announcements regarding distribution plans within the next few days. For the present the company will operate on a state-right basis.

Harlan Knight in Burr Picture

Harlan Knight, portrayer of rural types and who has often appeared on the same big time vaudeville bills with Charles "Chic" Sale, has been engaged by C. C. Burr to play in support of the star in his first feature picture under the Burr management.

Goulding Helping Prepare Script

Alf Goulding is assisting in the preparation of the script for Monty Banks first five-reel comedy feature which will shortly be started at the Grand Studio under Herman Raymaker's direction.

Shirk Is Writing Mystery Story

Adam Hull Shirk is now engaged upon a new mystery story for the screen which will probably be made into a picture later on. He wrote the story for "The Satin Girl" which Ben Wilson produced for Grand-Asher with Mabel Forrest starred and Norman Kerry featured.

Burr Productions in Big Deal

Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution of Mastodon Films, Inc., reports that the Michigan territory on the entire output of C. C. Burr productions for the season 1923-24, has been bought by William Hurlbut of the Favorite Film Company, Inc., Detroit.

Webb to Direct Burr Picture

When C. C. Burr signed Constance Binney for a starring series of features to be distributed on the Independent market, he recalled that "The Stolen Kiss," Miss Binney's great screen success, was directed by Kenneth Webb. Mr. Burr, therefore, engaged Webb to direct "Three o'Clock in the Morning," the star's first C. C. Burr production, written by Mann Page and scenarioized by Gerald C. Duffy.

Standard Laboratory to Remain on Coast

John M. Nickolaus, vice-president of the Standard Film Laboratories, is emphatic in his denial of rumors current in Hollywood that the flying visit of S. M. Tompkins, president of that concern, to New York in any way looks toward the establishment of a branch of the Standard in that territory.

"There is positively not a single reason why we should establish a plant in or around New York and every reason why we can function to greater advantage here," declared Nickolaus. "The talk of us entering the eastern field is ridiculous. On the other hand it is the eastern laboratory which must come to the west coast or be forced from business.

"I feel that I am being conservative when I point out that more than ninety per cent. of the motion pictures made in the United States today are being produced on the west coast. Since the Standard Film Laboratories first entered the field it has been our unceasing contention that the release prints should be made where the negative print is made, and more and more of the producers have come to see this our way, with the result that our business in this line has been steadily growing.

"Today, with practically every big producer abandoning their eastern studios, there is far greater reason for us ignoring the eastern territory than there was a year ago.

"Our contention has always been that, working in co-operation with the producer, director and cameraman through the making and the cutting of the picture, our laboratories are the only ones in the industry who can give to the releasing organization the best prints from the negatives we have made.

"We know the feeling and mood the producer has endeavored to put into his picture and give him our assistance in accurately presenting this to the public by making an absolutely honest release print from a negative in which the tints and densities have been painstakingly worked over and the timing is in keeping with the tempo of the picture.

"The Standard Film Laboratories, in less than three years, through quality work, have risen to the point where their volume of work is not exceeded by any laboratory in the United States."

"A Bride for a Knight" In an Important Deal

An important picture deal has just been consummated with the Syracuse Motion Picture Company whereby the Producers' Security Corporation will handle the general territorial distribution for a new five-reel comedy entitled "A Bride for a Knight," which is headed by a cast of well known players led by Henry Hull and Mary Thurman. The story and direction of this new comedy are by Hamilton Smith.

"A Bride for a Knight" was no sooner announced on the independent market than M. H. Hoffman, president of the Renown Exchanges bought it for his New York, Buffalo and Chicago exchanges. The Producers' Security Corporation is lining up many big city openings for "A Bride for a Knight" and has been flooded with inquiries for territorial rights, it is said. A special line of lithographs, cuts and press book are now in work and will be off the press within a week.

"A Bride for a Knight" is a typical story of the big city of today and was designed for laughing purposes only notwithstanding that the author-director, Hamilton Smith, gave the film some absorbing crook angles. The cast includes besides Henry Hull and Mary Thurman, Chas. Craig, William H. Tooker, Marcia Harris, Alyce Mills, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Tammany Young and Billy Quirk.

Export and Import Buys Twelve Chaplin Films

Export & Import Film Company, Inc., has just announced its purchase of the famous twelve Chaplin classics for the entire world with the exception of the United States and Canada. It will immediately reissue these comedy masterpieces and will have brand new prints made up for all territories.

The Chaplin pictures included in the list of twelve are: "The Count," "The Floorwalker," "The Rink," "The Fireman," "The Cure," "Easy Street," "The Pawnshop," "Behind the Screen," "The Immigrant," "The Adventurer," "One A. M." and "The Vagabond."

C. C. Burr a "Square Shooter" Say Many State Right Men

A short while ago, Samuel Moscow, of Moscow Films, Inc., Boston, Mass., conducted an extensive correspondence with leading state right men on the subject of Independent film product. The answers proved very interesting. Writing to Mr. C. C. Burr, Mr. Moscow said:

"I have learned first hand that the Independent distributor in the United States has the utmost confidence in your ability to produce the type of picture which goes to make up the big exchange, and when I say big, I mean the type of exchange with which exhibitors are glad to do business.

"Sometime ago, I took the liberty of writing many of the Independent men in the United States requesting from them an expression of opinion with reference to the condition of the Independent market. I was extremely gratified at the replies I received, which I am mailing you today."

Practically all the replies received by Mr. Moscow contained lines of praise for and confidence in C. C. Burr, as is shown by the following extracts picked at random from a score or more of letters.

"We feel that Mr. Burr is one of the squarest shooters in the Independent field," wrote James Alexander of the Columbia Film Service, Inc., Pittsburg, "and it is our intention to give him all the aid we possibly can. We sincerely hope that your letter has gone forward to a number of the Independent exchanges as we feel that Mr. Burr should be backed up to the utmost by Independent exchanges."

"My business dealings with Burr have always been of a most amicable nature and his product has proved a profitable investment," wrote Wm. Skirboll of Skirboll Gold Seal Productions, Inc., Cleveland.

"We are willing to co-operate with you in any way to keep C. C. Burr's output on the Independent market," wrote David Segal of Royal Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia. "We fully realize Mr. Burr's qualities as a producer."

"You can rest assured that I will go to great length in keeping Mr. Burr in the Independent field," wrote Si Greiver of Grievver Productions, Chicago. "Count on me for anything that will be of mutual benefit to keep Mr. Burr in this status."

"I had the pleasure of meeting Mr. Burr about a year ago, and I too, feel that he will be able to do a whole lot for we Independents," wrote E. A. Sherwood of the Exhibitor's Film Exchange, Washington, D. C.

"I quite agree that his name (Mr. Burr's) stands for that which is best among the Independent producers," wrote George N. Montgomery of the Supreme Film Company, Los Angeles. "His pictures have been generally good, having brought money to the box-office and some prestige and profit to the Exchange, but above all his organization has been fair and business-like throughout."

"As far as Mr. Burr's productions are concerned, I bought 100 per cent. this year and would be glad to do the same next year. You can rest assured that I will stand up when it comes to doing business with Chas. Burr." stated Robert Lynch of Metro Pictures, Inc., Philadelphia.

"Our past co-operation with Mr. Burr has demonstrated this fact (our support) and you might assure him that in the future we are one hundred percent ready to co-operate with him," stated Louis Hyman of All Star Features Distributors, Inc., San Francisco.

"I wish to say that we have bought every picture that Mr. Burr has offered so far," stated Floyd Brown of the Lieber Company, Indianapolis, "and fully intend to continue doing business with him. His pictures have been very satisfactory and if he continues to make pictures of the same calibre he can count on us and he knows this."

"Yesterday's Wife" Pleases Author

Evelyn Campbell, the author of "Yesterday's Wife" is now in New York to confer with C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation officials with regard to several stories that she has written and which she would like the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to produce.

Immediately upon Evelyn Campbell's arrival in New York, she went to see "Yesterday's Wife" at one of the largest theatres in New York and she was elated to see the manner in which the audience received this picture.

Miss Campbell was enthusiastic with regard to her opinion of "Yesterday's Wife." Miss Campbell is also the author of "The Marriage Market" which has just been completed at the Coast by the C. B. C. Film Sales Corp.

"Barefoot Boy" on Broadway

Sam Zierler of the Commonwealth Film Corporation, and the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation have entered into an arrangement whereby they will give a pre-view of "The Barefoot Boy" at one of the Broadway theatres.

C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation officials have in mind a similar pre-view of the picture in every big city of the United States where the women's clubs and various civic and teachers organizations will be invited so they may co-operate locally with the exhibitors in every city to make "The Barefoot Boy" a big success.

"The French Doll" Coast Premiere

Mae Murray and her director-husband, Robert Z. Leonard, attended the opening of "The French Doll," Miss Murray's latest Metro picture, at Loew's Warfield Theatre in San Francisco last week. A record audience was in attendance to greet the famous pair of the motion picture colony as they entered the theatre. "The French Doll" received enthusiastic ovations from the spectators.

Mabel Forrest and Washburn Welcomed

The Grand Studio has been renovated from top to bottom during the absence of the stars and others in New York and on their return to resume production around the first of the month everything will be in tip-top shape.

Glowing reports of the reception accorded Bryant Washburn, Elliott Dexter, Mabel Forrest and others in Albuquerque, Kansas City, Chicago and New York, have been received. A veritable ovation was accorded them in these cities, especially in Chicago where they had several hours between trains. This is Bryant Washburn's and Mabel Forrest's old stamping ground.

It is understood that new stories have been arranged for which will occupy the attention of the respective producing stars on their return, while Ben Wilson, who is in the party also, will arrange for further vehicles for Mabel Forrest.

In New York, according to newspaper reports, the movie party was informally received at the Astor where a party was held for newspaper and magazine representatives and prominent people in other branches of the industry.

A Warner Film Nearing Finish

Within the fortnight Ernst Lubitsch will have completed the filming of the major portion of his second American production, "The Marriage Circle," which he is making for the Warner Brothers.

While nothing of a definite nature is known regarding Lubitsch's next production for the Warners under the terms of the contract in which the director will produce two features annually, it is intimated that the story under consideration will be of a sensational nature.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Canadian Manager Puts Birthday Scheme Upon a New and Interesting Foundation

APPARENTLY it was Fred V. Greene, Jr., who started the birthday greeting scheme a year or so ago. At his suggestion managers obtained the birth dates of their patrons and sent a greeting card and a pass on these anniversaries.

For a time the idea created good will worth thousands of dollars for the picture theatres through the country, but lately it seems to have been dropped, else it has become such a matter of routine that it is no longer reported. It remained for the manager of the Royal Theatre, Dartmouth, Nova Scotia, to take the idea up again and give it a twist that offers a new aspect.

For the Children

He has formed the Royal Theatre Birthday Club, with a constitution and officers and a code of rules framed by the owner-manager. It may be that this idea will be permitted to drop, as other angles have lapsed, but the Royal offers a wholly new scheme so good that it can be run for a year or more without the interest dropping.

A membership application is printed in the local paper, with spaces for the name of the child, the age at the next birthday, the date by month and year, place of birth and present residence.

Admission to membership is without cost and is open to every juvenile in the Province, though it is to be presumed that only children in nearby towns will be interested. These are provided for in a clause in the rules of the club which reads: "Members living outside of Dartmouth will be given a complimentary pass on presentation of their membership cards. The pass may be for one or more shows or for a week or longer, in the discretion of the management.

This may sound like reckless generosity, yet few children will come alone, and those who accompany them will pay full prices for their admissions.

In addition to this courtesy to the non-resident members, there are frequent treats to the resident children. Each child will be given a party on its birthday and in addition there are special parties for boys, and for girls, and for individuals.

These treats are advertised in the local paper, (apparently with no cost to the theatre), and a current issue carries a number of announcements. Three children are advised that their membership cards will be good for free admission on specified dates, two are told to bring a friend, one boy is invited to bring his parents and two fortunates who have birthdays within the week are told to bring five friends each. There is also expression of regret that one of the members whose anniversary falls within the week has moved too far from the town to be invited, and a pleasant message is sent to him.

All of these messages are supplemented with letters from three out-of-town members of the club, along the familiar children's club lines, and the whole makes a good department for the paper, which explains the free space.

Such a scheme goes beyond the usual birthday idea and makes an improvement on the various clubs along the more familiar lines of the Jackie Coogan clubs in that it is a weekly feature and not useful only when a Coogan feature is in sight.

And for an ace in the hole the president of the club is elected by vote to hold office during the pleasure of the management. If things get dull they can always hold an election and jazz up a bit.

Taken by, large and sideways, this looks to be a whale of a business holder. Try it on your own patrons.

David Lloyd George Helped an Exploit

There seems to be nothing particularly slow about Oral D. Cloakley, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa. With the United States and Dominion of Canada talking about the visit of the former premier, he hooked David Lloyd George to a stunt on Why Worry with the consent of the brainy Welshman.

He was working a Don't Worry Club on the Harold Lloyd picture of that title, and following the English custom he made the visitor the "Honorary Secretary" of the club and received an acceptance of the nomination. The headquarters of the club was in a florist's store, but another merchant hunted Cloakley up and persuaded him to open a branch. The club idea is getting frayed at the edges since the original "Clarence" club, but the Honorary Secretary put a powerful kick into the revival.

All told Mr. Cloakley worked 34 stunts on the comedy, including the ambulance to carry away hysterical patrons, and a liberal tie-up to the title, not alone in a newspaper display but in windows and on taxicabs, the letter asking "Why worry about transportation?" He got a two-page newspaper hook-up with special hook-in's with banks on "Why Worry about the future" when you could start a savings account and provide for the coming rainy days.

There was a special showing to the Mayor and some invited guests, including Lord Birkenhead, who was in Ottawa on a visit, and who was also made a member of the club. He also sent a certificate to "Lord Renfrew," but the Prince sent no acceptance, though Cloakley got a press story out of the mailing.

Our own F. H. Richardson was also made a member.

He also worked a unique combination in advertising the Japanese earthquake with Why Worry. It was a jazzy campaign and got unusual attention—and receipts.

TWO OF THE THIRTY-FOUR STUNTS WORKED FOR WHY WORRY BY ORAL D. CLOAKEY

The Why Worry Club window made so much talk that a second merchant went over to the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, and persuaded Mr. Cloakey to give him a similar display. It must be good when they ask for a chance to come in. The other is the familiar ambulance stunt, but it was new in Ottawa, so it was brand new. They made Lloyd George Honorary Secretary and he took the nomination. Not so slow, what!

Lem Is Wenting

Lem Stewart, who developed the exploitation department of the former Southern Enterprises until his local managers did better work than most exploitation experts, and who has been connected with the theatres department of Famous Players-Lasky since the string was taken over, is leaving.

He came up to the New York offices to handle from here the same work he had been doing in the South, but he feels that the change has constricted his opportunities for keeping in touch with the resident managers to a point where his usefulness to Paramount is too reduced to make it possible to keep the exploitation work up to the old standard, and so he has presented his resignation.

He has no plans for the future other than to devote a few weeks of rest to the complete healing of an injury to his leg recently sustained while playing baseball, but this department sincerely hopes that he will presently be found in harness again, for his constructive work is of value to the entire business and not alone to his employers.

It is understood that William (Bill) Johnson, of the Texas offices, will take over his department.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

AMBER was the color note hit upon by Eddie Hyman to get his program under way and to thread its way through the show when "The Bad Man" was the attraction. There were four musical presentations in addition to the feature picture and a new Ben Turpin comedy, one presentation serving as atmospheric tie-up to "The Bad Man."

The Symphonized Jazz Overture starting the show was a special arrangement and orchestration of "Chansonette," "Love," "Steamboat Sal," "First, Last and Always" and "Louisiana." Two dome Mestrum floods, 150 amperes, covered the entire stage and orchestra with amber, as did also the Mestrum floods from the projection booth. The transparent windows at either side of the stage were amber from open box lamps behind, and two entrance spots crossed amber on the llama cloth canopy overhead the orchestra. This lighting was disclosed after the huge llama clath curtains at the proscenium arch were opened after being closed for the opening. The lighting on them was solid amber from the four Mestrum floods and both spots. The two transparent columns at the proscenium arch either side were amber spots from the base and light green from the top downward.

The most ambitious presentation of the week was the special thirty-minute version of "Pagliacci" in English by the Dornay Opera Company. This was done in the usual prologue and theatre scene, the first named being before the antique gold draw curtains, and the latter in front of the tent-theatre and inside it. The front lighting included two floods from the booth deep blue covering sides and orchestra. Two dome floods violet on orchestra. Light green transparent windows, blue borders, and transparent columns light green from the top. The stage lights at opening were amber foots and two amber spots from the sides to denote afternoon. After the tenor sang "Vesti la Gibba" the lights dimmed down for nightfall, and the foots came up light blue and the string of Chinese lanterns strung along the tent front were lighted. As the curtains of the "Pagliacci" stage parted for the evening show, disclosing a room interior with pictures, table set for dinner, and chairs, orange and magenta box lamps at either side lighted the scene and remained to the close. At the finish the transparent llama cloth draws were closed as the orchestra thundered out the finale, and were opened again coincidental with the closing note for one bow by the company. Then the antique gold draws were closed instead of the llama cloth.

For "Will She Come from the East," atmosphere number for "The Bad Man," the scene showed a sign-post center stage against a landscape back drop. Two runways from either side of the stage ran in toward the post, the runways hidden by a graduated neutral leg piece. Tenor came on center stage, under an amber spot, dressed in approved Western style. At the chorus a girl costumed for the East came slowly down the runway under a rose pink spot, walked to the singer and then exited. Girls for West, North and South followed alternately from either side, the West under amber spot, North under light blue and South under orange. At the finish of the chorus the girls, who had changed to party dress, came on as tenor exited and danced the chorus, and tenor came back for vocalizing the closing strains. This was under four orange spots from the sides and the magenta x-rays.

Soprano, singing "'Neath the Autumn Moon," appeared on the orchestra stage apron under a straw spot from the booth. The two booth Mestrum floods violet covered the silver draw curtains small stage; one dome flood deep blue also on draws and other dome flood same color over orchestra. Four amber arch spots on pleats of the draws. Blue foots, small stage; blue borders large stage. Columns light blue from top. Two entrance spot lights pink on sides.

Minted Money

George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., got a new angle on the often used distribution of mint candy samples. He had Lawful Larceny coming, so he put the samples in the lobby with a card reading: "Take one. This is Lawful Larceny." This was worked the week ahead of the showing and everyone remembered the title so cleverly put over.

LOG CABIN WORKS WELL FOR THE GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST

This was engineered by B. W. Bickert, of the Isis Theatre, Houston, Texas. It involved very little building and gave plenty of background for advertisements of the production. The girls are not ballyhoos but are the house ushers, just posing out front.

Enlarged Stills Without Expense

Getting enlargements of scene stills without cost is Charles Morrison's contribution to the Ways and Means Committee. Morrison is manager of the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla., and wanted to play up the fight stuff in The Spoilers.

A local photographer made enlargements of several of the spirited stills at no charge, but supplied a card advertising the fact that he specialized in these enlargements. Then a store window the photographer never could have broken into took the stills and his advertisement because they made an attractor. Morrison increased the pull by unrolling a couple of reels of old film, which was a real curiosity to most persons.

Two business firms were benefited as well as the theatre, and Mr. Morrison got his still enlargements for nothing.

Morrison also horned in on the returns on the Firpo-Dempsey fight by arrangement with the newspaper receiving the details. In between the rounds and before the fight began Mr. Morrison, with the largest megaphone he could borrow, told the crowds that the Wild Bull of the Pampas was not in it with the big fight in The Spoilers.

They must have believed him, for it took only $10 above the usual appropriation to run the box figures up $300.

HOW A BABY PEGGY CONTEST GAVE HER THE STAR PLACE

The Palace Theatre, Calgary, Alta., put on a resemblance contest and made the comedy the big attraction over Trifling With Honor, Universal's baseball story. This was a photographic contest and the entries may be seen on the posts.

In a Coop

For Bluebeard's Eighth Wife the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., built a latticed arbor for cutouts and three sheets of Gloria Swanson in the title role, using two threes and a cutout from a six or 24-sheet. The title was displayed in cutout letters on the face of the lattice.

BLUEBEARD'S CHAMBER

It is something of a departure from the usual style and may suggest a re-use of the abandoned lattice material. Use it once as a lattice and then drape in the back with some inexpensive material. You can work several changes; particularly if you wire for lights.

Packed the Theatre and Turned Them Out

Intensive work for two weeks before the opening got big crowds into the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife. George E. Brown took the marquise for a coming attraction for the first time in the history of the house. He did more than that. With 30 passes to each advertiser, he got a co-operative page in the face of the opposition of the Merchants' Association. They e against all extra advertising, but seven merchants welcomed a chance to tie up and Brown got a full page and paid for only a small proportion of the space.

The picture was liked and the second day business was better than the first. There was a sell-out for the evening show, and then an electrical storm put the power house out of business for an hour and forty minutes and Brown had to give out 1,200 rain checks as well as turning away his standout.

Saturday the sale was stopped between 8:30 and 9, but the break gave him a chance to resume selling. The crowd in the lobby was so dense that departing patrons had to use the emergency exits. Even with the lost night he was $700 better off on the three-day run.

Make a special scrap book of economy stunts. You'll find it comes in handy.

Found Own Plugger for Homeward Bound

Home Bound has no plugger song, but Harold Horne, of Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis, found a song "My Love Ship" that seemed to be what he wanted, so he took that and made it the basis of a hook to music and phonograph stores, which announced that it would be sung in the prologue to Homeward Bound at the Palace.

This particular title was selected because Mr. Horne appealed to women patrons with the love interest, feeling that they would be more interested in love than in a sea story. He ran such lines as "All Aboard for Romance Land" and "A Romance of the Moonlit Sea" in conjunction with Meighan's name. The receipts seem to prove the value of his idea.

For his trailer he ran a few feet of blank leader immediately following "Next week," and while the screen was dark the title was flashed out in red lamps just below the screen frame and held on while the remainder of the trailer ran through.

For the marquise a new scheme has been inaugurated. A new backing is provided each month, and the weekly change is designed to work in with this. For the Greater Movies season the backing was the Paramount trade mark. In front of this was run the star and title. This is supposed to do away with the cost of building a new display each week, but the scheme is too new to have proved its value.

Had to Hustle

Getting Strangers of the Night on very short notice, Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., had to work fast to make certain that this better-than-usual play was seen by those he most wanted to get in.

He kept the telephone working for three days to give personal notice and for a quick action stunt he ran a misspelled word contest which brought in 3,000 replies to the cooperating newspaper. Everywhere he tied to the personal recommendation.

In spite of the time handicap, he put it over to much better than usual business, getting in the discriminating patron who is the hardest to win.

ANOTHER CARTRIDGE CO-OPERATION WITH THE SNOW FILM

W. F. Brock, of the Strand Theatre, Knoxville, Tenn., hooked a whole raft of pictures on Hunting Big Game in Africa to a brand of ammunition with a dozen palm leaves to give enough of a suggestion of the jungles. Note the nice arrangement.

No Distinction with His Crackers

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., figured that if animal crackers appealed to the children as an advertisement for Hunting Big Game in Africa, it might also interest the adults, so he got several pounds of lions and tigers and bears, put each one into an envelope he got from the National Baking Company, without cost, and built an evergreen jungle. The chief figure of the jungle was a cutout of a tiger which had been saved from Jack Holt in The Tiger's Claw. He also used cutouts from the 24-sheet which were first placed in store windows before he pulled them over to his lobby display.

He had a tieup with a hardware store on guns and hunting knives and he had new slide copy every day for two weeks in advance. He also put out 700 throwaways stressing the fact that this was not a picture already shown, but the Martin Johnson picture had been there first and crimped things a little, though some people drove 20 miles to see the Snow production.

Mr. White has been taking things quietly through the summer, but he seems to be starting up again. Watch his smoke.

JACK HOLT'S TIGER GETS BACK TO THE AFRICAN JUNGLE

Oscar White put h.m in moth balls after The Tiger's Claw and dug him out for the lobby display on Hunting Big Game in Africa. It helped the Snow picture to a clean-up in Sumter, S. C., at the Rex Theatre, drawing patrons twenty miles.

Made Full Campaign in a Smaller Town

Jackson, Tenn., is not precisely a key city on any film concern's map, but A. R. Lynch, manager of theatres, treats it in a big town way and Jackson responds gratefully to such treatment. Here is the way Mr. Lynch put over the Greater Movie idea, and Hollywood, in the Lyric Theatre.

He started with a horseshoe in the lobby patterned after that in the Howard, Atlanta. This was all gold and purple with the titles of the greater movies lettered in. On Hollywood he did this outside advertising:

One hundred window cards as tack cards along the white way for five days ahead. All windows lithoed at the same time. Photo frames in all the drug stores and two special windows in department stores. Fifteen other stores permitted stills mounted on compo board to be tacked to their screen entrance doors.

One thousand rotos and two thousand heralds were put into homes, two restaurants surcharged their menus, and teaser slides told that "You do not need to go to Hollywood to see the stars. You can see them all here in one big picture, Hollywood."

All of which had a beneficial effect on the box office reports, which looked much better than they had through August.

Good Pass Stunt

Hollywood was used to open the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Ga., after it has been closed for renovation. J. G. Evins wanted to open to a good crowd, and matinee crowds are not easy to get in the south in September. People still prefer to stay in the cool.

To ensure an attendance that would go out and talk about the unusual play, Mr. Evins ran a series of nine advertisements, each with a thumbnail cut of a star and advertised that the presentation of the series would be good for one pass to the opening matinee.

About 300 sets were turned in. These were mostly from children, but Mr. Evins rightly figured that Mother, and perhaps Daddy, had helped to clip and paste the set, which advertised to them as well.

Shooting Fair Crowd Sold Souls for Sale

Getting the big crowds in town for the County Fair, all John C. Graham, Jr., of the Lyric Theatre, Butler, Pa., had to do was work the crowd.

He used 5000 accessory automobile tags on the farmers' cars, and this stunt was new to most of them. They sold an unusual proportion. But this was merely the prelude to the big stunt.

He bannered a truck telling that Souls for Sale took the spectator into the studios of Hollywood, and then he mounted a camera on the truck and took shots of the street crowds. He was also able to obtain permission to enter the grounds and drive around the track between heats of the races. He used an actual camera and the print was rushed through and shown the following day at the theatre, most of the first day crowd coming in to see if they could discover themselves on the screen.

They also used the fake casting director's questionnaire, which is not so good, even though it may bring a lot of newspaper space.

TWO EXAMPLES OF THE USE OF THE TRILBY CUTOUTS FROM PORTLAND, OREGON

One is hooked to the Trilby hose and the other to the Trilby dress, and these two merchants and a shoe store came in on a full page with the Rivoli Theatre. A CUTOUT EFFECT FROM THE MAJESTIC, AUSTIN, TEXAS

E. B. Roberts offered a somewhat different handling of the poster at his theatre, and filled in with broad bands of colored crepe papers. This merely served to supplement some novelty stunts that sold The Merry-Go-Round to a thirty per cent. increase.

Offered Free Taxis for Merry-Go-Round

Through the efforts of Universalist Jack Meredith, Manager E. B. Roberts, of the Majestic Theatre, Austin, Texas, took out rain insurance with a local concern on The Merry-Go-Round. This led to another and much more novel stunt. A local taxi company was induced to gamble on the weather and advertise that in case of rain on the closing Saturday, its fleet of cabs would bring anyone to the theatre free, the argument being that no one should miss this attraction.

But Mr. Roberts did not stop there. He pasted a 24-sheet to the lobby floor for advance work and them made a cutout of another for use as his chief display at the showing. The floor poster was spotted by overhead lights.

A special billing location was the top of a new hotel next door to the theatre. This fine structure is the pride of Austin and its erection is watched with interest. If they saw the hotel they had to see the posters.

Numerous window displays were arranged and 250 letters were sent the local Elks reminding them that Mary Philbin was the winner of the beauty contest at the Elks' convention and urging them to get behind the choice of the Order.

All it cost was $20 over the average and it ran business up nearly one third. That's a pretty neat profit.

Sparks Flew for Compson Feature

Making the tableau of Betty Compson about to open the safe in The Woman with Four Faces, C. A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Texas, arranged it so that the electric drill in Miss Compson's hands would spark when touched to the door of the safe. A buzzer was employed to imitate the whirl of the motor and give a sound attractor.

The ushers were masked as were the cashiers and doormen.

Pined for Kola

Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., hooked The Trail of the Lonesome Pine to a new Kola drink and gave a bottle to each patron, dispensing the samples from a special booth just outside the lobby. You could drink it there or take it into the theatre with you, the ushers collecting the empty bottles. He disposed of 1,500 bottles in two days and got an increase of business at no cost.

Large Souls

Getting a fence around a construction operation, the Vendome Theatre, Nashville, Tenn., covered nearly a city block with Souls for Sale in five-foot letters with house and date in smaller letters on either end. Practically all of the cars of the street railway system pass the block, and there was a heavy automobile traffic in addition, so it was difficult to overlook the sign.

Roses Made Business

A production which brought a lot of extra business for an entire week was lately tried out by George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C.

The previous week a baritone had been employed to help put over a picture for a full week in a three-change town, and he was kept on to sing "Love Brings a Little Gift of Roses."

At the chorus two little girls rose from their seats in the front row and slowly walked up the aisles of the darkened house, handing out roses from baskets to the women on the aisles. Flashlights in their baskets lighted their heads. During the week some 1,200 roses were passed out, the novelty being put on three times a day. The only cost was for the children, and the $10 apiece paid them went for the purchase of the dresses they wore. The flowers were donated.

The local papers carried several stories and the stunt helped to put over three different pictures.

On His Way

In addition to a showing of the new model of a make of automobiles with the suggestion that such a car would have been a luxury in the Klondike rush of the period of The Spoilers, the Rialto Theatre, Charleston, W. Va., used a good ballyhoo.

This was a miner with a pack burro. The donkey was hung with signs reading: "I have come a long way to see The Spoilers at the Rialto Theatre."

First in N. Z.

First National Publicity claims on behalf of O. N. Gillespie, head of its New Zealand exchange, credit as the first picture publicity promoter to use radio broadcasting for advertisement. He had a well known soloist sing Smilin' Though and then he horned in (literally) with a brief chat.

Three on One

That the people of Dallas might know of the coming of Main Street to the Palace Theatre, Bruce Fowler, City Manager, and Raymond Willie, the resident manager, posted street sides of the local flatiron building with huge signs telling the world it would miss something if it did not see Main Street. It made a nice flash at a small cost.

WHAT YOU CAN GET FROM PENROD WITHOUT HAVING TO PAY

The makers of the Penrod Suits are following the film in the eastern territory and have effected more than 150 hook-ups to date without cost to the houses. This showing was worked for the Playhouse, Passaic, N. J., the two boys being winners in suit contests.

Sold Anniversary on Twelve Dollar Flash

The ornate front of the Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ont., shown on this page, represents a cash outlay of only twelve dollars, and this includes an O. T. Taylor design that can be worked repeatedly on future attractions. With the exception of the actual painting was done by the projectionist, Charles D. MacGregor. The cost of the banner was $5 and of the centrepiece $7. Evidently Mr. McGregor has been saving up his papers, for this design was printed in December, 1921.

This was the first anniversary of the Princess, which is a unit of the Canadian Paramount Theatres, managed by J. A. Stewart, and what seems to be a hat just above the line "Anniversary week" is really a pink birthday cake with silver trimmings and one candle. You cannot see the candle, which has sunk into the print. The banner is airbrushed green with gilt lettering. The circles in the Taylor design are green, yellow and red.

Mr. McGregor also went out and hooked up a window to Hollywood. It had no merchandise connection, but it showed a lot of photographs, and the merchant figured that it helped sell the other things in the window, so he wants some more.

We hope that McGregor does not share the usual fate of projectionist-exploiteers, who are generally pulled off the exploitation work by their unions before experience qualifies them for the full exploitation job.

ADVERTISING AN ANNIVERSARY WITH AN O. T. TAYLOR IDEA

Charles D. MacGregor, of the Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ont., reproduced this Taylor design for an anniversary week. When he is not exploiting Mr. MacGregor is projecting the picture for the house, of which J. A. Stewart is local manager.

White Rose Nearly Broke House Record

Only rain prevented The White Rose from breaking the record for an opening day at the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., and at that George E. Brown came within $27 of equaling the best previous figures. Had not rain spoiled the matinee the figures would have been the top notch.

The best was a copy of the Memphis stunt which, it will be recalled, was a distribution of white roses to the shut-ins of the city, ostensibly at the request of Mae Marsh. A florist contributed 75 dozen flowers, mostly white roses, and a local paper worked up the scheme as a circulation stunt. It gave long stories and the call for automobiles for distribution still further spread the effect. It is a valuable idea and one almost any live paper will be glad to sponsor. The only cost to the house was the writing of the cards with the compliments of Miss Marsh. The cards and ribbons as well as the flowers, were supplied by the florist.

The florist also supplied flowers for the lobby without other return than a credit card.

A strong press campaign was worked, apart from the shut-in stunt.

The house came into luck when a sister house in the circuit sent over a 24-foot banner it had ordered, but which had come too late to be used. It sent it to the Imperial with no other charge than expressage. Mr. Brown figures that he did well even if he was $27 below the top notch.

He didn't write the weather.

Insurance Hook-up

J. G. Evins, of the Odeon Theatre, Savannah, Ga., is working hard to put the house over after its shut down, and he is working some pretty stuff.

One of his best was a hook to an insurance company which had a short advertising film it wanted run. Mr. Evins would no take any money for showing the print, bu offered to run it if the company instructe its collectors to mention Homeward Boun to each policy holder called upon.

As the company carries hundreds c policy holders who pay a weekly premiun Mr. Evins made a good deal, for it helpe to beat the record hung up by The Spoi ers by $148.

Fifty Better

Boosting receipts on Only 38 with a 38 cent sale was the big angle on the two da run of the picture at the Noble Theatre Anniston, Ala.

Roy Smart arranged with a leading stor for a 38 cent sale, as suggested by Der Stewart. The window was dressed for Sat urday and stayed in action through th opening day of the engagement, the follow ing Wednesday. Fifty tickets were given th store to help the sale along, and as the were singles, they brought in one or mor paid admissions.

This was about the only special wor done, but it brought one of the best ad vances since the hot weather set in.

HERE'S ANOTHER CLAIMANT FOR LONG DISTANCE HONORS

This sign is 125 feet long by fifteen high and was one of the sales stunts when "The White Rose" played for three weeks at the Strand Theatre, San Francisco. It does not show up well in the reproduction because the colors do not photograph well.

Cussen the Town

When he came to play The Town tha Forgot God, Clayton Tunstill, of the Rialt Theatre, Chickasha, Okla., used directio arrows with merely the title of the pla These were not only tacked to telegrap poles but were fixed to lath and posted o the roads leading into the place; which wa not very polite to the town, but Chickash was not insulted and the City Fathers gav a permit for the local tacking of the arrow

As they have no Sunday shows, the lobb was brightly lighted Sunday evening to g the attention of the churchgoers to a tit which might be supposed to appeal to then Mr. Tunstill did everything but get the min isters to preach about Sodom and Gomorra

For an expenditure of one dollar, Clayto Tunstill, of the Rialto Theatre, Chickash Okla., got a small increase on Lorna Doon The dollar was for cards placed in the pul lic library, but in addition he effected som window hooks and borrowed a phonograp which was decorated and placed in the lobb to play the Lorna Doone record with a re peater. The phonograph company also gav windows for advertising use and made a nic cleanup on the records.

DOC CLEMMER'S PERAMBULATOR FOR HOLLYWOOD

Adapted from the 24-sheet, this truck covered Spokane in the interests of the Clemmer Theatre and Hollywood pretty thoroughly. Just for a sign on the rear the company handling the truck gave the use of the machine, the driver and the gas.

Railroad Contributes Full Hollywood Lobby

Most lobby displays on Hollywood have been either the observation end or the concourse style, but J. B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla., used the Seaboard Air Line as his property room and worked out a station interior with time table racks, bulletin boards and all the rest of the familiar furnishings. The bulletin gave the leaving times of the Hollywood Special and worked in some wheezes about nearby towns on the road, while the ticket office was for "Tickets and Pullmans."

Covered Forty Miles

The Seaboard also sent six special half sheets and some window cards to every station within forty miles, instructing the agents to post the sheets and get the cards into store windows. And all it cost was a small distribution of passes and the printing of the material.

A local shoe store opened a sale of Hollywood Sandals two days ahead of the show, and took a quarter page display advertisement in addition to the window dressing. Fifty passes were given purchasers.

Instead of the usual screen work the slides were all reproductions of newspaper criticisms from southern towns where the picture has already shown.

Business was good and cost very little.

A Rich Effect

Figuring that richness of appeal would best harmonize with Daughters of the Rich, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., used a three sheet cutout against green draperies for the centrepiece of his lobby display. This was backed by compo board wings on either side of the lobby. Directly overhead was a 3 by 10 foot panel in the same shade of green with the title in white. If you have not used this combination, try it some time. Three foot circles flanked the banner carrying the names of the players.

The general effect was one of quiet elegance comporting with the title and selling better than more spectacular stuff.

Sells Roto Space

Selling off advertising spaces on the rotogravure section for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, the Des Moines theatre for a big flash at a cost of only $130, though the rotos, plus printing, cost $250. They had to be printed up with the house advertisement, so there was no real extra cost for the printing and with one space on the front and two on the back, the Des Moines Theatre Company got a drawback of $120 and still had two-thirds of a page for its two houses. At that we think that the space was sold rather cheaply. Probably the company can get a better price next time.

The stunt opens up interesting possibilities. John E. Kenebeck, Paramounteer, helped put the idea over.

Trade Hook-Ups Are Planned by Merchant

Only a couple of years ago it was felt that when an exploitation man succeeded in selling a merchant the idea of devoting a portion of his space to the current attraction at some theatre he was doing big things.

Today the merchant is running around for a chance to hook-in to a form of advertising that brings in more than he could get for his exclusive space and in New Haven an instalment house has created a "movie-plan" which is the same old instalment scheme worked in a new way.

THE NEW HAVEN IDEA

The instalments are on a sliding scale instead of the usual dollar-a-week idea, and to motivate the "movie-plan" angle the store has tied up to Enemies of Women with a four column scene cut and a panel telling that the attraction is to be seen at the Globe theatre.

This cut is the only part of the "plan" connected with the pictures.

AN EFFECTIVE BANNER ON DULCY FROM EUGENE, ORE.

Offered by the Castle Theatre and the only extra exploitation required to put over Miss Talmadge in this production. It was jazzy and carried the idea over far better than a straight lettered announcement could possibly have done.

Printed Own Inserts for Use on Enemies

Using 10,000 each of the bread and laundry inserts on Enemies of Women, Charles A. McFarland, of the Queen Theatre, Houston, Tex., printed up his own instead of using the accessory material.

Having established the enemies idea by this means, he sold two restaurants on large signs telling that cooking was one of the enemies of women and advising the reader to eat there. Book stores were sold on the read-the-book-and-then-see-the-picture idea, and the parking signs in front of the theatre told that Reckless Drivers were also enemies of women. It got so that the poor women began to feel that they had no friends left.

During the showing a 25 foot cutout was placed on top of the marquise to further add to the enmity.

Fake Camera Was a Hollywood Stunt

One of the ballyhoo stunts on Hollywood at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, was a fake cameraman who shot the audience as they entered the house.

J. P. Harrison made no promises about showing the picture and there was no "try-out" bunk. It was just a straight ballyhoo that gave good return and cost very little.

There was an automobile with a banner almost larger than the diminutive hood and with wheels painted vari-colored. Regularly it was used by a shoe polish concern, but it helped shine up the stars in Hollywood.

Stars were the lobby feature. There were lettered stars for the title, stars on the posters and a large star in front of the box office with one hole for tickets and another through which the cashier could see who was trying to hand her a Canadian dime.

Mindful of the need for press work, Mr. Harrison got up a hook-up page with identification of the stars, and this left the editor in a receptive frame of mind for a large cut and reader display for the opening. Mr. Harrison also had fine returns from Lem Stewart's scrap book contest.

AN EFFECTIVE DISPLAY ON CIRCUS DAYS FROM THE BRANFORD

The Newark house not only painted a special front, but it ran a Congress of Strange Peoples in the long corridor that was alone worth the price of admission, bearded lady, snake charmer, blue-skinned man and all the rest of the standbys.

Talked It

Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C. figured that Penrod and Sam should come pretty close to selling itself, but he was willing to help a little, so he got four boys to stand around the lobby and discuss the picture whenever anyone came into the lobby to see the stills. A surprisingly large number of persons appeared to be influenced into the purchase of tickets.

Profitable

Adapting the C. B. C. novelty recently written of in this department brought some $15,000 in back dues to a fraternal order lately. It was used as a reminder to members in arrears, and the novelty of the form got attention while the text was phrased to avoid goat getting, with the result that almost half of the replies added a "thank you."

A New Society of Enemies of Women

Securing the proper permission, D. Frisnia, of the Elks Theatre, Taylorville, Ill., constructed a small booth on an important corner. Before he began he posted a sign stating that when completed the structure would be used as a registration booth by a newly formed society, The Enemies of Women. At the same time letters signed by a mythical committee of women urged other women to do something about it.

The workmen took as long as they could to get the shack up, and by that time the title had been put over—so they pulled it down again, in the same leisurely fashion.

An adaptation of the out of town postcard idea was made through a special card showing the front of the Kings Theatre, St. Louis with the crowds attracted by this title. The message stated that the writer had seen the play in St. Louis and urged the recipient to see it in Taylorville.

THIS CAMERAMAN SHOT THE AUDIENCES BUT HE GOT NOTHING

The camera was a fake, but it helped make for interest at the Hippodrome Theatre, Waco, Texas, and J. P. Harrison did not promise that pictures would be made, so there was no comeback. Note the star through which tickets were sold.

Gorgeous Booklets

Supplementing the greater movies booklets supplied the Paramount theatres, the Paramount Publicity prepared an exceptionally handsome booklet for use by managers taking the Paramount output.

This carries a two-page calendar to July 1924 and 21 pages announcing coming Paramount productions. It is all cased in a brown grained cover printed in black and two colored bronze; an unusually ornate job yet in such excellent taste that the cover constitutes more than half the selling value of the offering.

It is as pretty a piece of printing as has ever been offered in quantity production for picture advertising.

Cheap Money

Twenty passes, used as prizes in the acrostic scheme suggested in the Goldwyn press book on Three Wise Fools brought a better business by seven hundred dollars to the Imperial Theatre, Jacksonville, Fla.

Charles Morrison did not require that the acrostic deal with photoplay matters and so widened the appeal of the idea while still keeping the attention of the contestants on the title. Two window hook-ups were the only other exploitation.

A First National Release

HERE IS A VARIANT TO THE PENROD AND SAM FENCE

This was planned by Harry Browne, of the T. & D. Theatre, San Jose, Calif. Only the box office was decorated with the piratical insigna which form but a minor incident in the play. It was cheap and it sold tickets, so it was capital exploitation.

Chamber of Horrors for Bluebeard Wives

Easily the best lobby display on Bluebeard's Eighth Wife comes from Augusta, Ga., where Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska and other theatres planned a striking effect.

Against a semi-circular platform he built seven panels of translucent cloth, back of each being a cutout of a woman hanging by her hair. Strong lights back of each threw these into such relief that enough light could be used in front to illuminate the cutout from the three sheet of Gloria Swanson as the eighth wife. The effect was purposely left a trifle sketchy rather than depict the horror.

The design of the structure is fantastic to suggest the idea of the title, and the general effect was so striking that business shot up a little above the $400 mark.

The only other special effect was the handling of 500 rotos, 1000 large heralds for store distribution and 2000 of the smaller ones in the mail.

Railroad Envelopes for Railroad Herald

Working together, City Manager Bruce Fowler and Raymond Willie, of the Palace Theatre, Dallas, put over a fine campaign for Hollywood, the outstanding feature of which was the distribution of 10,000 of the railroad ticket herald in envelopes such as are used by the Southern Pacific for purchased tickets. This gave a fine realism to the well-planned novelty. The cooperation of the Southern and Atlantic Coast lines has already been recorded from the Southeast, but the donation of 10,000 high grade manila envelopes is a more costly cooperation.

Cuts Used But Once

Fanfotos of the various stars were distributed from the theatre, about 2,500 being used, and thumbnail cuts of the stars were used in small teasers, no cut being used more than once. The title with each letter on a star, was strung from the roof to the marquise and more stars edged the canopy, while the rear of the house, which faces a traffic street, carried a large painted sign. Streamers eight feet high were placed on windows of stores and cafes, the banners being decorated with the fanfotos, fifteen stars being used.

It was a very thorough campaign and put over the picture in the big house of the Texas chain.

Exploited a Short

Feeling that the entire strength of the program does not lie in the feature picture, the Opera House, St. John, N. B., sent out a rube for First National's Gymnasium Gym.

This was a man in a suit of fleshings made of a dyed union suit. He had an inflated chest and enlarged biceps and in addition to advertising the comedy he told that some local gymnasium experts would give an exhibition of tumbling as a part of the program. The short length was one of the best sellers of the bill in consequence.

Among other stunts used by A. J. Phillips, of the Arcade Theatre, Canning, Mo., on First National's Money, Money, Money, was a contest in which he offered a few synonyms for money and prizes for the longest lists, accepted slang not barred.

Gloria the Goat in This Advance

Fred S. Meyer, of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, made Gloria Swanson his nominal copy writer in his advance work for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, using a three column cut over an appeal "To the people of Hamilton" in a 175 by 3.

No doubt you recall Prodigal Daughters, in which I made my last appearance at the Palace Theatre sometime ago. Excepting only one single reviewer, this last production met with instantaneous favor everywhere.

Beginning next Sunday, you will have the opportunity to see me in my newest picture, entitled Bluebeard's 8th Wife, the screen adaptation of the stage success by the same name.

When Managing Director Meyer of the Palace Theatre saw Bluebeard's 8th Wife in a private screening, he was so enthused that he immediately sent me the following telegram:

"Consider Bluebeard's 8th Wife not only your greatest success but by far the most noteworthy of current achievements. It should create a sensation wherever shown and create many new admirers for Gloria Swanson."

Theatre owners are a hard boiled lot; it takes a most unusual picture to get a word out of them. Therefore, I have every reason to believe that you will share Mr. Meyer's views as regards my forthcoming production, and urge you to see when it comes to the Palace Theatre next Sunday.

Sincerely yours,
GLORIA SWANSON.

The populace responded nobly to the appeal. Try it on some picture you are playing. It does not have to be Bluebeard. You can work up the idea for any star picture.

HERE'S THE BEST BET YET ON BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE

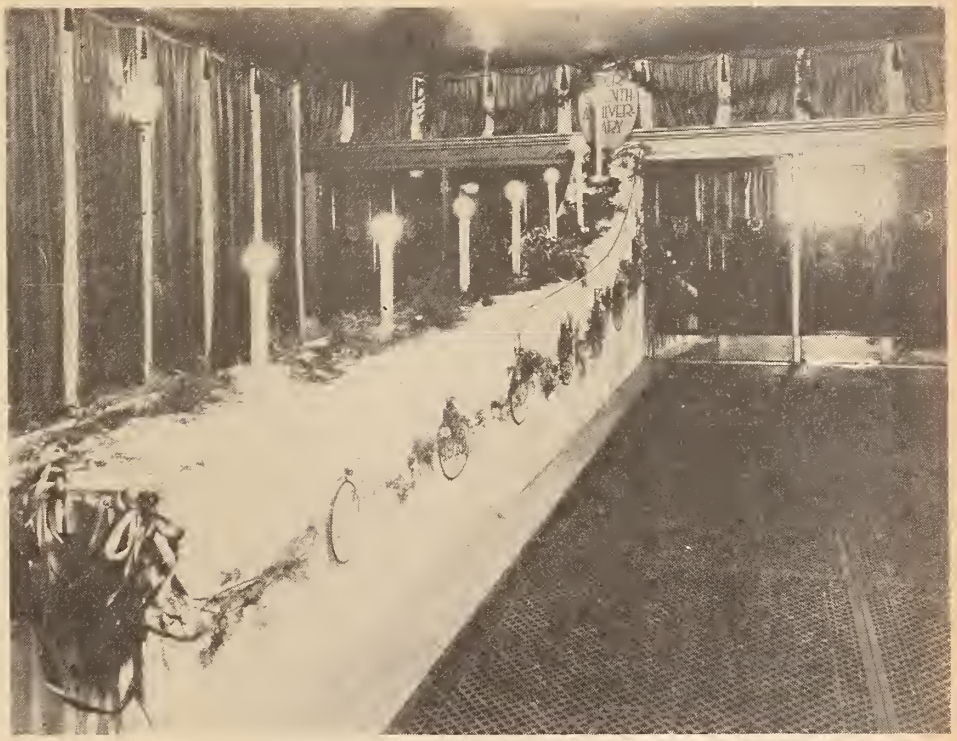
Planned by Frank J. Miller for the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga. The seven ex-wives are shown in silhouette with the cutout from the three-sheet going to meet her doom as Mrs. B— number eight. There is real selling to this idea.

Satin Draped Lobby for an Anniversary

Recently we spoke of the seventh anniversary of the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis. On this page is shown a detail of the lobby decoration with seven electrically lighted candles, each dated and growing in size with the progress of the years, on the barrier, which was draped to suggest a banquet table.

The entire lobby was done over in hangings of grey and gold satin; a scheme which was carried into the house, and special painted posters for Dulcy, the anniversary attraction, replaced the usual frames and posters.

The exterior carried the usual posters for Dulcy, but the space over the marquise was devoted to the anniversary announcement.



AN ORIGINAL BIRTHDAY DESIGN FROM THE CIRCLE THEATRE

The Indianapolis home of First National pictures used this unusual lobby dress for its seventh anniversary. The lobby was draped with grey and gold satin and the barrier was set as a table with seven electrically lighted candles, all dated.

One Sided Display Is Something New

Frank J. Miller, who is manager of theatres for Paramount in Augusta, Ga., seems to be giving more attention to lobby displays, though he has always been in the front row of lobby builders. Now he is going rapidly to the head of his class.

One of his new ideas was worked on When Knighthood Was in Flower and introduces the one-sided display. This is a decided innovation. Hitherto the lobby display has either been a centrepiece or a matched display on two sides. Mr. Miller has shattered tradition by building his display on Knighthood from one side of the lobby, a mountain rising to a castle on the eminence.

It was a fine idea, though spoiled somewhat through contrast with the large cutouts just back of it. At that we have an idea that Mr. Miller did not place these two figures back of the structure except when he moved them over to get everything in one photograph. Very possibly he used this cutout on the other side of the lobby to preserve the balance. But forget the figures and note the excellent effect Mr. Miller has gained, and remember that he built on the entrance and not the exit side of the lobby.

Don't overlook your short feature. Sometimes you can exploit your news reel for real money.

A NEW FORM OF LOBBY DISPLAY FROM FRANK J. MILLER

The manager of theatres in Augusta, Ga., got away from the usual centerpiece and built out from one side on When Knighthood Was in Flower, getting a different and decidedly good effect, though we think that the figure cutout does not help any.

Stirred Broadway with Red Lighting

One of the Eddie Bonns stunts for the opening of Red Lights at the Capitol Theatre, New York City, was to have an aviator fly over the theatre district about the time the scores of audiences were coming out. Red flares were burned constantly.

The stunt was planned for Saturday, the day before the opening, but rain prevented the flight and it was delayed until the following evening, when the aerial patrol excited much attention and the newspapers and police stations were asked to explain.

Helping to hook in to this display, the front of the Capitol was flooded with red lamps and spots, a dash of red in the famous White Lights district.

The same idea was used in Los Angeles, where the picture opened at the California Theatre. Here the story ran to the effect that the management, fearful that the print would not arrive in town in time, had arranged to have the reels come via airplane from Reno, the flares being the signal that the print was aboard. This was worked on the Wednesday prior to the opening, and got into the newspapers.

There was also a special Red Lights night at the Hotel Ambassador, where many of the scenes of the picture were made. Special cards on each table a week in advance announced the coming event. The dancer used in the production made several appearances and there was a prize cup presented the best amateur couple by June Mathis. Special menus carried the program and a scene from the play.

Matched a Herald

With a cutout from the three-sheet on Salomy Jane, the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., was able to approximate the front page of the herald and hook to this distributed matter. Thomas G. Coleman put out several thousand heralds, and the value of the hook-in is obvious.

ANOTHER GOOD RAILROAD STATION LOBBY ON HOLLYWOOD

This is almost a duplicate of the Fort Smith display, worked by Hugo Plath, but it is from Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Muskogee, and Ollie jazzed the signs up to match the railroad atmosphere of the general display.

This Railroad Has Clever Trick Signs

Ollie Brownlee, of the Palace Theatre, Mus ogee, Okla., practically duplicates the display of Hugo Plath, of Fort Smith. Perhaps one loaned the other the makings.

But the Brownlee box office boasts some trick signs, the one at the top reading with the prices for upper and lower berths, which correspond to the prices for orchestra and balcony while "staterooms" are understood to be the loge seats.

On the left of the window are the departing times, corresponding to the showings and the right urges the reader to "See the Agent About Rates to Hollywood."

Both top pieces above the gates are lettered "Ride the Paramount Express to Hollywood—See—" and the names of the stars, while the centre is "Muskogee to Hollywood on the Paramount express, via Palace Theatre." The cross arms have the "Slow down. Hollywood." One side if further letters "To trains" and the exit is "From trains." The railings are turned wood, painted black.

It all helped to put a boost in the box office sheet, and it cost only $20.

Hugo Plath Finds a Hollywood Line

Most of the semaphores for Hollywood have read "Look out for Hollywood" in copy of the usual look out for the locomotive. Hugo Plath, of the Palace Theatre, Ft. Smith, Ark., has dug out the right line. He uses the cross with "Slow down" and "Hollywood." That's better than looking out. You can generally trust Mr. Plath to dig it out right when he starts to dig. One of the best little diggers.

His general lobby design is shown on this page. As suggested in the caption, it looks as though he had pulled Gloria Swanson's Gilded Cage apart to make the railing of a railroad concourse, with the gates labeled for the "Paramount Express" and the "Amusement Special" both to Hollywood. It might help to use the changeable signs for the departing time, such as are used in railroad stations, and change for each show.. It's a little trouble but a big help.

The cutout engine has practical wheels geared to a motor, with sandpaper contacts to give the puff of the exhaust into the stack. In case you don't remember, this is a piece of sandpaper fixed to the back support where it will rub against a similar piece on one of the wheels, contact being made intermittently each time the wheel turns over. If you want more noise, use two pieces of paper on the wheel.

Boosted Records with Robin Hood

Beating the house attendance by 76 admissions and the cash record by something better than $300, Robin Hood has pride of place at the Noble Theatre, Anniston, Ala., chiefly through the intensive and sustained work of Roy Smart.

From the time the booking was made, he let no week go by without mention in the house organ, these growing in length and strength as the playing date came closer.

Ten days in advance a banner was thrown across the main street, and later this was backed by a castle front on the theatre. Three cards were gotten into the Public Library to reach adults and children, one going to the children's reading room.

Because of the training camp activities at Camp McClelland Mr. Smart offered a reduced admission to the men in uniform at the opening performance only. He could not get them marched down in a body, but the notice "To the Men of Camp McClelland" was on each company bulletin board and when the commanding officer came down to see the picture he was stood out forty minutes. The soldier attendance was good all through the run.

One Merry-Go-Round Was a Big Pinwheel

Blue and gold festoons and a lattice helped to turn the lobby of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., into an amusement park for The Merry-Go-Round. This was built up with cutouts and signs in ornamental shapes and various colored lights added to the carnival effect.

On the marquise was an eight foot pinwheel with arms each of a different color, with electric lamps at night. The wheel was kept in motion by a small motor. It was not a Merry-Go-Round, but it went around and around and kept in with the title.

Likes Book Rebate on Lorna Doone Run

Just to encourage the booksellers to offer Lorna Doone windows, the Queen Theatre, St. John, N. B., offered a rebate of five cents to everyone who bought a seat and showed a copy of the book. Some of the boo s presented came over in Evangeline's time, but the theatre was game and the old ones got the nickel off too.

That was an opening night stunt, but it worked so well that for the remainder of the run a new copy of the book was good for a rebate at any matinee.

It was a getaway from the pass-with-each-copy; but, if you want to help your cooperators, specify new books! If you want a novelty on an old timer, offer a special prize for the oldest copy presented.

The named cracker campaign also helped and the music stores kicked in, but the book idea proved the real winner.

Only one rebate was allowed on a book, but by the end of the run some of the books had turned up so often that they were calling the cashier by her first name.

WOULD YOU GIVE $35 FOR A DISPLAY PARADE LIKE THIS ON CIRCUS DAYS? THAT'S THE COST

Al Sobler, of First National, helped Doc Robinson, of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., put over a costume contest that turned into a two-block parade with a 30-piece band, at a cost of only $35 for the prizes. It's old stuff, but the Circus Days angle permitted a wider display of costumes and gave far more color to the turnout, and it saved up the newsboys for the next kid picture, which is something to think about.

Prizes Worth $35 Got a Big Parade

Sitting in with Dor. Robinson, of the Madison Theatre, Peoria, Ill., Al Sobler, Chicago First National exploiteer, staged a layout for Circus Days that brought hundreds of dollars worth of publicity at a cost of only $35 for cash prizes. The stunt included a parade that stretched two blocks and which was headed by a thirty piece brass band.

The band was a boys band sponsored by the Journal-Transcript, which was tied in to the stunt through being permitted to pose as the donor of the prizes for the best circus costumes. This got columns of publicity which cost nothing, and also won the services of the band. The paper also borrowed a camel, the property of Mohammed Temple of the Mystic Shrine, and some floats and tractors to pull them, on which the children rode.

Several hundred children appeared for the judging, and after the judges had made their decision and the band had played a few selections, the youngsters climbed aboard the floats and took a ride over a rather lengthy route. As the photographs show, there was a wide variety of costumes and no lack of banners.

A second paper, the Star, was permitted to use the name-in-the-classified-ads idea, fifty tickets being invested in this scheme. The space the Star gave the stunt would have cost several hundred dollars had it been paid for at card rates.

The ten cent store gave a picture of Jackie with each purchase of school supplies and took an entire window to announce that fact, and a book store was tied to copies of Toby Tyler while the chain tobacco stores were hooked to a brand mentioned in the production.

Not So Good

In the interests of The Girl of the Golden West, George J. Schade, of Sandusky, offered prizes to the first seven persons discovering misspelled words in the columns of a local classified ad department. The prizes of course were tickets to the Schade.

The hard part is that an ungrateful newspaper made George split the cost of the two fours used to make the announcement. Most papers are glad to give more space than that just for the tickets. That's no nice way to treat a theatre.

Passed it to George

Letting the manufacturers of the tied up cigarette do most of his work for him, Oscar White, of the Rex Theatre, Sumter, S. C., merely added the telephone stunt to collect additional revenue on The Spoilers. He didn't see the use of worrying when he had someone else to do the hustling and supply the advertising material free.

Had Floral Parade for Mrs. Bluebeard

When Walter Murphy, of the Crown Theatre, New London, Conn., asked Paramounteer Russell B. Moon for a stunt on Bluebeard's Eighth Wife, Moon remembered the scene where the husband sends innumerable baskets of flowers to Gloria Swanson.

A local florist donated five baskets and five boys and for two hours on Saturday afternoon the kids carried these into the theatre, through the lobby, slipping out the back way to make another circuit.

It not only brought a Sunday sell-out, but it helped the feature playing on Saturday as well.

Australian Smiles

Cabaret parties named after pictures have become a pest in Los Angeles, but in Australia it is a brand new idea and L. Scantelbury, of the Majestic Theatre, Brisbane made a pot of money through a Smilin Through night at a local cabaret. The feature was an advance screening of the picture and the stunt was worked up into a regular party.

There is a good idea here for this side, though we think it will work better with a light comedy. Smilin' Through is almost too delicate for a cabaret.

JOHNNY COULD BACK HIS HORSE UP AND STILL WIN

The Lotus Theatre, Sheridan, Wyo., used the old picket fence to frame a one-horse walkover for Little Johnny Jones. It's not a very big display, but it was more than enough to get in the business, and that was all the management was after.

Mr. Lovett's Idea Is Old, but Paying

J. Fred Lovett, of the Royal Theatre, Providence, read in a recent issue that he owed us an idea and he hastens to write that he sent it in but that evidently it miscarried in the mails, so he repeats.

The idea is simply that Mr. Lovett framed up a crack sandlots ball team, named it after the theatre, and turned them loose on the community. They have been cleaning up all summer and getting space on both the Olneyville and sporting pages of the papers. Practically every day there was one item at least about the Royals, and the idea of a winner was passed along to the house. Mr. Lovett says it gave him the best summer business he ever had, and likes the stunt so well that he has formed a football team for the more limited season and has arranged to continue baseball next year. The team finished third in the amateur league and he expects them to top the bunch next year.

It's a good idea, but not as new as Mr. Lovett thinks. We gather he has not a copy of Picture Theatre Advertising, but if he has, it might interest him to look on page 245 where the precise scheme is outlined in full. It's not new, but we are glad to have Mr. Lovett's testimony to the value of the idea.

Punched Letters to Help Posters

Here is an adaptation of the idea used by the Blackstone, Pittsburgh, to illuminate letters. The Blackstone used the idea for its lobby banners, but Moore's Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C., employed it for the outside special three sheets.

A Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Release

THE SPECIAL THREE SHEET

The letters forming the title, Red Lights, have been perforated with a drill, and show as minute black specks in the center of these letters, if all goes well with the cut. These holes were backed by red medium and lamps were set in back of the frame.

At a small cost for current and wiring the display value of the posters was greatly increased.

Gave a Party

Giving a party to the Strangers of the Night was Edwin D. Turner's idea for putting over the Metro production at the Imperial Theatre, Asheville, N. C.

Refreshments were donated by local merchants in return for credit cards and after the last showing the first night the patrons were invited to the rest room where the orchestra played while eight local girls in pirate costumes more or less after the cabin boy costume in the picture, handed out the refreshments.

As a side line there was a double truck in two local papers with a misspelled word contest that brought in more than 2,000 replies.

Got a Horse

Apparently the newsboys were on strike down in Louisville when Circus Days came to town, for instead of a newsboys' parade the management of the Mary Anderson Theatre hooked the Post to a resemblance contest, with a pony named Jackie Coogan as the prize for the child most nearly resembling the juvenile star.

Some 400 youngsters made entry, the majority of them presenting themselves in costume, though this was not required. The most likely contestants were presented on the stage, but the award was made in one of the parks where the entire town could look on without entrance fee and where a film of the event could be recorded.

According to the receipts, the pony was a good investment.

A CLASSY FLOAT ON THE VOICE FROM THE MINARET

This is a good example of the sort of thing they are doing over in England. This float was built by the Palace Theatre, Cheltenham, England. It is twelve feet long by six feet wide and sixteen feet in height, and was planned by Manager Shenton.

Gets New Wrinkles for Fashion Shows

Making a style show the big appeal for the opening of his Greater Movie Season, George A. McDermit, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon, Ga., had a number of new ideas.

In the first place, since he had no adequate stage room, he built a T stage in front of the orchestra with the tail down the center aisle and with steps leading up from either side. In the floor of the platform was set a glass light trap with a spot above, there were also spots on either side and in the balcony, which permitted the attainment of interesting light effects.

The program was varied for each night, each presenting some special feature, which drew the crowds back, and there was also a special tableau each evening. One night the tableau was "The most popular model" and while the recruiting officers of the Army and Navy marched down the aisles, the curtains parted to disclose a girl in a Red Cross uniform. The "best" model was a boy in scout uniform and the "sweetest" was a bride, while for the final nights the "most beloved" was a mother. This was shown on Friday with the mother alone on the stage while on Saturday the same tableau was repeated with a soldier and marine bringing gifts to the mother, one presenting flowers and the other candy.

There was also a special showing of children's models at a Saturday morning matinee.

The constant changes held business up for a record week with The Cheat and The Silent Partner, both good alibis for swagger dressing.

Free Rides

Although the home office campaign book writers no longer urge the use of stage coaches for western pictures, knowing that they cannot be had as a rule, Jack Hellman, Paramounteer, dug up an old station bus for E. G. Anderson, of the Princess Theatre, Aberdeen, S. D.

He had to go two miles out of town to find its last resting place, but he furbished it up a bit and sent it around town with a hand-made sign announcing that anyone could jump in and ride to the Princess to see To the Last Man. The ride was free. Shooting off blank cartridges was a helpful stunt until the police arrested the driver, and after that it at least brought in some press notice. Hellman also horned in on the A boards of the army recruiters, the only sidewalk signs permitted in town.

A MINIATURE MODEL DISPLAY FOR THE MAN NEXT DOOR

This striking display was framed by W. E. Paschall, of the Palace Theatre, El Paso, Texas, and his staff artist, Guiterrez. It is cleverly done and suggests a general scheme which may be followed for many other pictures as effectively as for this Vitagraph.

Socked 'Em

Infringing on the Trilby publicity, H. C. Clarke, of the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., gave silk stockings (donated by a local concern) to the women who wore the same size hose as Mae Murray in The French Doll.

Cards were given all women purchasers at the opening matinee. These were filled in with the name and stocking size of the recipient and handed the doorman. Before the conclusion of the performance the cards had been checked up and those entitled to stockings were asked to obtain orders on the store, and obtain their prizes on the way home.

The women nearly wrecked the lobby, but it made business for both store and house.

IT IS STILL POSSIBLE TO FIND A STAGE COACH IF YOU LOOK

A Paramounteer went two miles out of town to dig out this station bus, but it helped sell To the Last Man at the Princess Theatre, Aberdeen, to a point where it yielded a handsome profit on the investment. You could hop in and ride to the theatre.

Tagged Kisses Were an Atlanta Novelty

Selling The Cheat at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, Howard Price Kingsmore pinned his faith largely to an extensive distribution of a locally manufactured candy kiss.

The makers supplied 200,000 of these, tagged with a small card, which was fastened to each kiss by having the waxed paper of one end thrust through a punched hole. The copy read: "Pola Negri's $10,000 The Cheat Kiss. You'll thoroughly enjoy The Cheat at the Howard just as much as you enjoy Block's Aristocratic Kiss."

These were handed out in the lobby the week before the showing, with an occasional street distribution to use up the surplus. The distribution was made by girls and also through a help-yourself basket in the foyer.

The candy is handled by eighteen drug stores, each of which gave a window to a display of the kisses with cards stating that while the Pola Negri kiss cost $10,000, the candy kisses were only 49 cents a pound.

The car company used dashboard banners and a masked dancer, who looks not unlike the star, appeared at an Elks' entertainment a couple of days before the opening, getting the attention the mask seems always to obtain.

Railroaded Them In

A model locomotive with tender, about four feet long, displayed on a table at the curb line of the Jefferson Theatre, St. Augustine, Fla., was enough to pull a fancy business on The Westbound Limited. Crepe paper streamers were festooned from the top of the marquise, concentrating upon the display.

Verne E. Johnson writes that practically every passer-by came to a dead stop the first time the display was encountered.

Broke in the Bank

Arguing that a bank account, savings or otherwise, was the best Silent Partner, George R. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, N. C., got the run of a bank window for Paramount production of that name, and the bank liked the idea so well it went into the newspaper with it.

Ashes of Vengeance Cried to the Town

According to Walter Eberhardt, the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, was using a town crier for Ashes of Vengeance the same days a flock of town criers were offsetting the lack of newspaper notice in New York for Potash and Perlmutter, but there was only one Cleveland crier. Here he is.

A First National Release

ANOTHER TOWN CRIER

There was no newspaper strike in Cleveland. It just happened to hit Mr. Malaney as a good idea, so he tricked out a man in Colonial costume and put him on the streets to ring his bell, adding a poster to make certain the call could be heard.

Invited the Klan to Meet the Jews

While a fashion show probably brought the most money to the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio, the most talked of exploitation was an advertisement in the official organ of the Ku Klux Klan inviting the knights of the Invisible Empire to meet the two best known Jews in the world face to face. It was a daring stunt, but the gag worked, and it helped to fatten business for Jo Trunk.

Even before Mr. Trunk was advised that he could have the assistance of an exploitation man he started an arrangement for a fashion show with a local store, the theatre to pay for the models. He turned over the scheme to Irwin Franklin, when the latter breezed in from the Sam Goldwyn offices, and Franklin came back and announced that the store would pay for four models in addition to giving windows. Then he went out and tied up the nine other principal stores to window displays for the well-known clothing manufacturers, and made it unanimous. One of the two shown here is the shoe hook-up with a shop which shod the models.

Copying a stunt worked on the Dempsey-Firpo fight in New York, folders were gotten out announcing that a local pugilistic star would lose an impending battle because he would be weakened through laughing at Potash and Perlmutter, and Franklin gave a talk before the Advertising Club for the newspaper comment he knew the luncheon would receive. To prove that he was an advertiser himself, he threw out cards offering a prize for any member of the club who could sit through the show without laughing.

The whole thing cost under $500 and paid for itself many times over.

Sells the Feature on New York Report

Harry F. Storin, of the Leroy Theatre, Pawtucket, R. I., is not the first to try and sell a picture on the success of the New York run, but he seems to be the first to present the matter through a reproduction of a clipping from Variety's box office reports. This is infinitely better than the press criticisms, because there is a finality to the statement that Six Days did $53,000 the opening week that the most glowing criticism lacks. It is definite and convincing when it can be used so close to the release date as the Leroy took this picture. Storin writes that it brought an accession of business.

It's a good advertisement except for the line "The musical gems on the mighty organ will carry Six Days along its merry way." Does Mr. Storin think this is a Keystone comedy?

An Unusual Banner for Danish Theatre

One of the best banners on East is West comes from Copenhagen, where the Little Theatre built this unusually elaborate frame for the Constance Talmadge feature. The house has a very narrow entrance, and this is surmounted by a built up structure in the Chinese style supporting a cutout from the lithograph and a three line title below, which does not come out very well in the picture.

A DANISH DISPLAY

The foreign department of First National is supplying European exhibitors with the best ideas of American exploiteers, and this is one of the fruits of this endeavor. In many ways we think it passes the work of the Americans since it has been so carefully done. That grill work represents much more building labor than is usually invested in a display over here.

Suppose that you have tried exploitation and it did not bring you what you anticipated. That's no reason why you should quit. Give it a little longer trial. Get them used to it.

TWO OF A NUMBER OF WINDOWS GAINED FROM A POTASH AND PERLMUTTER FASHION SHOW

How Irwin Franklin helped Jo Trunk put over a fashion show for the Dome Theatre, Youngstown, Ohio. Only four models were employed, but they got ten window displays and packed the theatre throughout the showing, as fashion shows almost always do. This was only one of the stunts, but it had the most direct influence on the box office, though an advertisement in a K. K. K. paper helped not a little.

YOU NEVER CAN TELL UNTIL YOU TRY. NEW BEDFORD TRIED.

And having tried it dug out a wagon left in town years before by a stranded circus, and it made a fine ballyhoo for Circus Days. You can do almost as well with an old grocery cart and some compo-board by draping in the wheels with bunting.

Try These Figures on Your Local Bank

If you want something to help you put over a hook up with your local bank, now or later, cut this out. Cut it out anyway. You will need it sometime. When you argue for a stunt it is more convincing to cite facts than opinions, and these are the facts of a bank hook-up at the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, on behalf of The Silent Partner.

Working under Howard Price Kingsmore, Raymond B. Jones tied the Citizens-Southern Bank, one of the largest local institutions, to a check issue, good for one dollar, when accompanied by a deposit of $10, in the savings department for a new account on condition that the sum remain on deposit for one year. In other words, if the ten dollars are withdrawn before the expiration of a year the other dollar reverts to the bank. Thirty thousand checks were used, being given out with each ticket bought to witness the Paramount production, special checks being printed with the words "I am your Silent Partner" printed at the top. There was a six weeks' time limit on the offer.

Draw New Accounts

Two weeks after the checks had been distributed, the bank expressed its satisfaction with the campaign, more than 200 new accounts having been opened. The accounts were still coming in at the rate of seven or eight daily. The probabilities are that had the initial deposit required been the usual dollar, to match the check, the results would have been very much larger, but the bank wanted only the better class of accounts and purposely made the initial deposit larger than usual.

The stunt has been worked hundreds of times and always with success, but this is the first instance in which we have been able to give definite figures.

Almost any bank with a savings department is willing to spend fifty cents or a dollar for a new account, and the idea can be worked with an infinity of titles.

Held His Business Against State Fair

Having a minstrel show as well as a state fair to buck, Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, more than held his own with Why Worry, though he did not break the Safety Last record. He did play to more than 29,000 persons on the week. That would be a good record (though not the record), even without extraordinary opposition.

He made a very ingenious use of cutouts from the smaller sizes of paper, as is shown in the cut, mounting these against a pair of circles, and similar cutouts adorned the ledge in the foyer, making up what was practically a 24-sheet.

One of the unexpected helps was an unusual attendance at a concert on Sunday when most of the audience of 5,000 arrived before the doors were opened and had nothing to look at but the Lloyd advertising. They also received Why Worry heralds in their programs.

Ten thousand stickers with merely Why Worry in red and white, about 4x4 inches, were fastened to windshields and wherever they could be put, and 2,000 rotos were distributed. There were several tieups based on the useful title in store windows and on taxi spares and a three day teaser merely asked "Why Worry?" with "Harold Lloyd says Why Worry?" for the last day.

Mr. Kingsmore reports that Capt. Kleinschmidt's Trip Into the Far North made an excellent complement to the comedy and gave just the support needed. It was played up in the advertising as a feature in its own right, and made good for the distinction.

Tagged a Contest

Because the Merchants' Association was about to give away an automobile, J. H. Stelling, of the Rex Theatre, Spartanburg, S. C., sent a bannered truck through the crowds, the copy reading: "If you don't win a cigar, Why Worry? Laugh with Harold Lloyd at the Rex. Now playing."

One man got the car but several hundred got the message and cheered their disappointment with the antics of Lloyd and his tame giant.

Swiped a Circus

Ignoring property rights, when Circus Days came to Daffin's Theatre, Tallahassee, the manager promptly announced Daffin's Circus and got twice as much interest as the straight announcement of the Coogan feature could have gained, particularly before the announcement made it clear that the circus was on a film. It gave a local twist to the idea that got the patronage-winning laugh.

GOOD USE OF SMALL CUTOUTS ON THE MARQUISE OF THE HOWARD

Australia Obtains Exceptional Result

Rarely have we seen a better result from half tone work than this five column drop for the Globe Theatre, Sydney, Australia, on Smilin' Through. AN EXCEPTIONAL HALFTONE

The drawing is signed by Wynne W. Davies and we do not blame him for wanting to sign, for he has done an exceptional bit of work and has planned it so that it will reproduce. It is seldom that a cut serves as more than an attention attractor, but this fine work sells through the suggestion of excellence it creates and which it transfers to the feature. His handling of the lights and shades is wonderfully well done and his shadow mass, while simple, is carefully planned. There is good copy to back the drawing, but good copy is far less infrequent than such wash work in newspaper displays. It is a liberal education in showing what can be done for newspaper illustration.

Orderly Display Very Attractive

As a change from the freak styles, we think this six nine and a halfs from the Alhambra Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind., is better than usual. Based on a single line cut that is pressman proof, the type arrangement is orderly and well considered and makes for a very striking display. As a set-up we do not think it can be much improved. The star and title show well, and the panel helps to clinch the sale if it has not been made through the announcement of Miss Talmadge in a notable play. The chief strength of the display comes from the use of white space. Extending the lines to get larger letters, and running them over to the cut would have spoiled the entire effect. It is the spacing as much as the choice of types and copy which go to make this an appeal very much out of the ordinary. There is available on this feature an unusual amount of cut material, and some of this could have been dumped into this space to the utter ruination of the entire layout. Even a thumbnail cut in addition would have spoiled the charm.

A Muddy Halftone Spoils a Display

Routing out the half tone on this display and setting the title larger in the space thus gained would have given a better play-up for the title and have removed an eyesore from the space, for the press work is poor and even the line cuts do not fare as well as they should. The advertisement is from the Capitol Theatre, Montreal, and shows a good use of copy even if the half tone spoils the general effect. Since the half tone result was probably foreordained, we think that the use of the router would have helped very considerably. Even the line cut is not well printed though we have seen this same cut come up nicely under better press work. Here it looks as though too cheap an ink were at fault.

THE UNNECESSARY HALFTONE

opportunity to throw in the halftone just because you happen to have it. In this display from the Luna Theatre, Lafayette, Ind., on The Huntress, the cut of Colleen Moore is strictly non-essential. It is a good looking cut, with the proper screen to reproduce fairly well with careful printing, but it is a bust when compared with the greater selling value of line cut in conjunction with the six point fact that she abducted the man she wanted to marry. A twelve or eighteen point, "When she wanted a husband she abducted him," working with the line cut of the pursuit would get many times the attention and would have brought the innocent bystander to a reading with his mind more than half made up that he wanted to see the play. Not many will be particularly interested in the portrait. They will be interested in the cavewoman stunt, and this will back up the clever cartoon cut, which is one of the best First National has offered in some time for selling quality.

All Type Display a Capital Seller

Few cut-decorated spaces offer as much strength as this six fours framed by the K. of P. Theatre, Greensburg, Ind. No one can read around a space like that. They must see it. Cuts would only clog this space. With a four letter title to be put over there is no chance to get it tangled with selling lines and the best of it that could be had would not have the display or selling value of this space. The exhibitor who complained lately that we did not show a sufficient number of good type displays should look at this with interest. It is larger than the average space—equivalent to a four sixes or a three eighths, but for a smash it will work more effectively than a "pretty" advertisement with an entire art gallery of illustration. It is seldom that the cut sells tickets in other sense than it gets attention for the space, and this type layout does not require the aid of illustration. It is far more emphatic just as it stands and any attempt at illustration would probably ruin it. It's smashing good.

Makes Two Col. Cut Four Column Space

Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, one of the Paramount Canadian chain, made a two-column advertisement the basis of a four column display. In the plan book this was intended to be made complete with the addition of the signature and the small features, but Mr. Cloakey set it into a four thirteens and it looks as though it might have been made for the space. We think this might have been improved by routing out that reverse and resetting the title in a larger letter to extend across the space for The Cheat has some pulling power left from its last production which could be better applied in a larger letter, but perhaps Mr. Cloakey did not have the time to arrange for trimming the cut. We do not like the typographical display on this. There is too much all capitals where the same copy could have been carried in a twelve point bold, upper and lower, with a much better result. More, we think we would have carried the copy to the left of Holt's head across the space to the right, so that it would read completely: "At last—Pola Negri as you've always wanted to see her; as a lovable heroine in a strictly modern romantic drama." This could have been extended on the second line and then dropped down the space at the right to complete the message. A change from all caps to upper and lower following "see her" would have given additional emphasis. It is good as it stands, but an intelligent compositor could have built up on Mr. Cloakey's work.

Not Just Talking; They Are Shouting

We like the top line from this display from the Alhambra Theatre, Shelbyville, Ind. It carries the suggestion of something even more than town talk, and if you can get this idea over, you should be able to

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

IS it the distributors' fault that short subjects are not advertised as they and their share of the program deserve?

The question arises through the remarks of Chris Behrens, who runs the Family Theatre, Davenport, Iowa, and who told Danny, of Film Daily, a few things while the latter was en route to the W. and W. West.

HERE'S what Mr. Behrens had to say:

"Many exhibitors would probably be much pleased to advertise their short added subjects to their regular features if the producing companies would have their advertising departments supply suitable mats, as well as reading matter that could be used by the exhibitor in his regular newspaper advertising. The facts are that one can request press sheets and mats even on the better comedies and the usual reply is that 'we do not supply them.'

"When the exhibitor is making up his regular feature ad., if he was also supplied with the attractive one-column cuts, or even smaller, that he could use in his ad. without using an unnecessary lot of space, he would greatly advertise his short subjects. But we can't get away from the fact that in the regular picture houses the feature is the thing and the comedy, news reel or special subject is just that much added to the attraction.

"In taking up a campaign to get the exhibitor to advertise short subjects, the first requisite would be to supply him with subjects and material from which he could prepare copy."

ONE of the Baby Peggy ad. cuts. This and the subject below could be used in advertising any one of the releases of the diminutive star.

THE illustrations show the cuts in a size of two inches deep. They are also available in a size one inch deep, in both cut and mat form.

Mr. Exhibitor Read This

We want to hear from every exhibitor who has anything to say regarding advertising aids. And by that we mean we want to hear from the little fellow to whom a couple of hundred heralds constitute a complete campaign, as well as from the key-city man who goes in a comprehensive plan of promotion on each picture. No item is too small to be of importance; no subject too big for discussion. Let us know if the advertising aids you are getting are satisfactory. Tell us what you like in slides, trailers, lobby displays, posters, heralds—anything. Tell us what you want for your own particular locality.

It is our earnest desire to be instrumental in getting for you exactly what you need in the line of advertising aids. We know we can do it if YOU will take the time and trouble to tell us. The advertising men are only too willing—anxious, in fact—to give you what you want. So if you (yes, YOU, not the other fellow) will write us we'll see that the advertising men get the information. If you've got a kick—shoot; if you've got a boost, let's hear it! Do it NOW!

CONSIDERING Mr. Behrens' last statement first, we register the opinion that not only is it important to supply the exhibitor with suitable advertising material, but just as important is it for the maker of the feature advertisement to see to it that there is enough room left in the feature ad. in which to place the short subject material. Or so to construct the ad. that it is flexible enough to permit of lengthening without losing its unity or effectiveness.

We know of no distributor—and that includes distributors of both features and short subjects—who makes provisions for any elasticity of feature ads. Virtually every press book ad. we have seen on features has been so "tight" that even another credit line could not be squeezed in anywhere.

AND as to Mr. Behrens' claim that producers do not issue suitable material, let some of the bigger producers answer for themselves.

ON every two-reel comedy released by Educational a press sheet is issued. This press sheet includes synopsis and cast, publicity stories, short program paragraphs, reviews, catch lines and suggestions for exploitation.

One of the big features about the aid given exhibitors by Educational is that the exchange furnishes, free of charge, a mat of the one-column, one-inch-deep advertisement prepared for each release. Cuts are also available of these ads., and are sold at a very nominal price. The cuts, samples of which are reproduced elsewhere, are of such size, shape and form that they can be used as an entire ad. or as a part of a bigger ad. They permit of being used at the bottom of a bigger one-column ads. and are, in our opinion, just what exhibitors need, and the sort of stuff that Mr. Behrens asks for.

Besides the foregoing there are prepared a one-column publicity halftone star cut and a one-column publicity scene cut. Mats on these cuts are furnished free; cuts are sold for a very small amount.

Four-color three-sheets and four-color one-sheets are also available, as well as colored slide, duo-tone 11 x 14 lobby cards (eight to set) and, according to the press sheet, "The fullest co-operation from your exchange."

The aids outlined are issued on Mermaid Comedies, Christie Comedies, Hamilton Comedies, Juvenile Comedies and Tuxedo Comedies.

PATHE already has issued a press sheet on Hal Roach's "Our Gang" Comedies, and it seems to us that the advertising material available on these releases is more than adequate to the needs of any exhibitor. The press sheet at hand contains nine reading notices of various lengths. The posters available on each release include one three-sheet and one one-sheet. There is a stock twenty-four on the series.

Each subject brings eight 11 x 14 sepia lobby display cards; also five black and whites. A special slide is issued and a special trailer is available from the National Screen Service. There are a two-column stock halftone cut and a two-column current halftone cut, as well as a one-column stock ad. line cut. Mats on these cuts are also to be had.

A paper hat novelty is also included in the aids.

Stock cut on Hal Roach's "Our Gang" copies. Reproduced same size. Mats also are available.

FROM Fox we learn that on Sunshine Comedies, Al. St. John Comedies, Imperial Comedies and Clyde Cook Comedies there are supplied a three-sheet and one-sheet, a set of 11 x 14 lobby cards and a set of 8 x 10 stills. Cut-outs are supplied with some of the Al. St. John and Clyde Cook Comedies.

A one-sheet is prepared for each issue of Fox News, as is also done for each of the Fox Educational Entertainments.

On special short subjects, such as "The Japanese Earthquake," "Red Russia Revealed" and "The Land of Tut-Ankh-Amen," special press sheets are issued, in addition to two styles of one-sheets.

CENTURY COMEDIES also are backed with a good line of aids. The press book issued on a series of six Baby Peggy Comedies is a good example. Here we again find an assortment of reading notices and catchlines on the various releases; not to forget exploitation suggestions.

Star cut of Baby Peggy which is issued in both two-inch and one-inch wide sizes. This can be reproduced in any size desired—especially good as part of a bigger ad.

The accessories seem to be much the same in quantity as issued by other producers—posters, slides, lobby displays, etc. This applies to the Buddy Messinger Comedies also, and to other Century Comedies.

In the Baby Peggy book is a sample of a four-page herald, with illustrations, that could be used in pushing any of her releases. It carries plenty of illustrations, a selling talk, and enough room for a theatre imprint. In point of variety we believe there are a greater number of cuts to select from in the Baby Peggy book than on any other short subjects. Besides this, there are suggestions for advertising, with copy and the manner of display shown in the book. There are three different line cuts, each made in one-inch and two-inch sizes. They are illustrated in these columns.

ALL in all, we believe that the exhibitor who really wants to advertise his short stuff will find more than enough material to do so at his local exchange. If he cannot we'd be glad to hear of it and, hearing of it, you can rest assured that the matter will be remedied at once.

HERE are samples of the cuts designed for exhibitor use by Educational. They are reproduced exact size—just right to fit any newspaper column in the country. Mats are furnished free. Cuts may be obtained at a nominal cost.

An Important Message to Theatre Managers

Many of you have heard the expression, "Lens Chart."

But how many of you really know just what it means and just what its importance is to you?

Briefly, the new Lens Chart is a chart which will enable your projectionist to give you the very best screen result possible with the lens and carbon arc equipment you are using.

You know, it isn't always the equipment that's at fault. Very often it's just improper adjustment of the lens, carbon crater, working distance and other important factors involved.

This new Lens Chart is the product of John Griffiths, projection optical expert. In it he has concentrated the results of years of experiment, the "know how" which is so important—yet which so few men can supply.

If you are using carbon arc equipment, by all means spend one dollar and get this invaluable chart. For with it YOU CAN CHECK UP AND SATISFY YOURSELF THAT YOU ARE GETTING MAXIMUM SCREEN RESULTS WITH THE EQUIPMENT YOU ARE USING.

ISN'T THAT WORTH A DOLLAR?

If your dealer doesn't have Griffiths' new Lens Chart, we will supply you direct.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Lachmann Sails for London

Marc Lachmann, of Universal, sailed on the Aquitania Tuesday for London, where he will take charge of the presentation and exploitation campaign for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," which makes its London debut the latter part of November at the Empire Theatre, where it will show for an indefinite period.

Up to the time of his sailing for the other side Lachmann had been piloting the exploitation end of the Astor Theatre's, New York, engagement of "Hunchback" for Universal. In his absence Paul Perez, of the Universal home office publicity department, will assume exploitation duties for the Universal special.

De Grasse to Direct "Flowing Gold"

Richard Walton Tully's production of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" is to be directed by Joseph De Grasse. The Tully offices announce that De Grasse has been signed to direct this epic of the oil fields of Texas.

De Grasse is at present enjoying a short vacation at Wellington, pending the return from New York of Tully, and actual production will start within a couple of weeks.

Photoplay Edition of Song

Dan Fish, English representative for Preferred Pictures Corporation, has concluded an arrangement with Chappell and Company, London music publishers, for a special photoplay edition of the song "April Showers," to tie up with Tom Forman's production of that name which is ready for early release both here and abroad. One hundred thousand copies will be printed.

"Cupid's Fireman" to Be Jones Film

Richard Harding Davis' story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl," which is being produced at the William Fox West Coast Studios with Charles Jones as the star, will be released under the title, "Cupid's Fireman." William Wellman is directing. Marion Nixon has the leading feminine role.

Photoplay Editions of Two Novels

Photoplay editions of the two popular novels, "Poisoned Paradise" and "White Man" which are under production by B. P. Schulberg as Preferred Pictures, are now being published.

"Flaming Youth" Among First National Films

"Flaming Youth," a current best seller in the world of fiction, a daring and sensational story of present-day society life, which combines strength of plot and dramatic action with delicate tracings of flapper psychology, is announced by Associated First National Pictures, Inc., as one of four pictures which will be issued by it during the month of November.

The company's schedule for the month is completed by "Jealous Husbands," a Maurice Tourneur drama prescnted by M. C. Levee; "The Dangerous Maid," Constance Talmadge's first contribution to the field of romantic comedy-drama, and "The Wanters," a society drama which John M. Stahl has made.

In "Flaming Youth" Colleen Moore has the featured role. John Francis Dillon directed. "The Dangerous Maid," Constance Talmadge, was directed by Victor Heerman. "Jealous Husbands" affords Ben Alexander, the boy hero of "Penrod and Sam, an important part. Earle Williams plays the husband and Jane Novak the wife. "The Wanters" is presented by Louis B. Mayer. The story is interpreted by Marie Prevost and Robert Ellis in the featured roles.

Songs on the Screen Prove a Big Success

Patrons of motion picture theatres are now having provided for them a unique form of screen entertainment, one in which much of the enjoyment comes from the fact that the spectators themselves contribute quite a little to their own enjoyment. This effect is achieved through the showing of the "Sing Them Again" series of single reelers which Educational is distributing.

These little gems are produced by Norman Jeffries of Philadelphia. They represent the working out of Mr. Jeffries' own ideas and owe their success largely to his skill in visualizing the underlying ideas in connection with favorite sons.

In each of these reels Mr. Jeffries in the space of about three hundred feet tells the story of a song which the orchestra plays and then the chorus is thrown on the screen and the audience, having caught the spirit, joins in singing it. There are three of these songs to each reel.

As an example of how this is handled, take for instance "When You and I Were Young, Maggie." Mr. Jeffries shows an old, happily married couple talking over their youthful experiences and visualizes some of the happy moments of their youth, then the words of the song are projected on the screen.

The "Sing Them Again" series is already enjoying great success in a number of theatres. In filming these little gems, Mr. Jeffries is ably assisted by Mr. Van Avery who selects the locations, directs the characters and supervises the photography.

London Critics Laud "A Woman of Paris"

Reviews of Charles Chaplin's first serious dramatic film production, "A Woman of Paris," dominated first-page space in several London newspapers recently. Chaplin's directorial ability as revealed in this United Artists Corporation release was considered by the British editors as having international significance, so much so that it was given exceptional display on the first page of the London Daily Express of October 3.

The Express said: "The new methods adopted by Charles Chaplin as producer were first described in the Daily Express cinema correspondent on September 20. The photoplay has been produced with extreme simplicity, naturalness and sincerity. The situations are abnormal, but the people in them are severely normal. Settings, lightings and photography follow the same plan. Everything is regulated as it would appear to an eavesdropper and an unseen prompter."

Distinctive's "The Green Goddess" grossed $53,942.75 in its first week at New York's Capitol Theatre. It was decided early in the week that a holdover would be necessary. The second Sunday's crowds equalled those of the first Sunday, with the ticket lines extending to Fiftieth street and around the corner into Fifty-first street. A fine break in the house about 8:30 o'clock brought in a lot of new money.

"The Green Goddess" in its run at Shea's Hippodrome, Toronto, did the biggest business of any photoplay attraction at that house this season. In Vancouver and in Montreal also it was a clean-up.

Clift Will Direct "Loyalties"

Denison Clift, who directed "This Freedom," the William Fox special from the story of A. S. M. Hutchinson, has been put under contract by Fox. His first assignment will be to direct the screen version of "Loyalties," the John Galsworthy stage play which had a long run at the Gaiety Theatre in New York. Mr. Clift will report to the Fox West Coast studios at once.

Great First Week in Chicago

Cosmopolitan's "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, had a tremendous first week at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago. It played to bigger business than did Miss Davies' previous spectacular production, "When Knighthood Was in Flower," or "Enemies of Women."

"Little Old New York" is still running at the Empire Theatre, London, where it is among the outstanding film successes of the year. Los Angeles is still flocking to the California Theatre to see it.

"The Signal Tower" Cast Selected

The cast has been selected for the forthcoming Universal-Jewel, "The Signal Tower," being adapted from Wadsworth Camp's short story. It will be directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Virginia Valli will be featured. With her are Rockcliffe Fellowes, Wallace Beery, J. Farrell MacDonald, Dot Farley, Frankie Darrow an James O. Barrows.

Metro Hollywood Studios Working Full Speed on 1923-24 Schedule

There is no lull at the Metro studios in Hollywood. Production on the big Metro 1923-1924 program of major pictures is forging rapidly and steadily ahead. Part of the big schedule has already been completed and the productions, beginning this month, will be released steadily at short intervals. Constant additions are being made to the program, increasing the number of pictures which Metro announced several months back at the time of the national convention in New York of the Metro sales organization. New stories by well known authors have been secured, and, as is customary with Metro, they will be filmed with casts of noted players, whose box-office value is well known, and under the charge of directors whose reputation for turning out successes are by-words in the industry.

Though Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" will not be released with the productions listed below it is one of the first of the new Metro pictures to be completed. "Scaramouche" is now in its fourth week at the big legitimate Forty-fourth Street Theatre on Broadway. It is definitely set for a long, continuous Broadway engagement.

The first release, early in September, was Mae Murray's Metro starring picture, "The French Doll," which had a highly successful engagement at the Capitol Theatre several weeks ago. Taken from Irene Bordoni's great New York stage success, "The French Doll" has already had a series of record-breaking engagements in various cities throughout the country. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions.

September also saw the release of the following new-season productions: Fred Niblo's production, "Strangers of the Night," a Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction adapted from the great international stage success, "Captain Applejack." "Strangers of the Night" also had an engagement at the Capitol Theatre, New York, to its credit, and numerous successful runs in other cities.

"Rouged Lips," Viola Dana's first starring Metro picture of the series of five which Metro announced, with possibly a sixth, a dramatic production; "Three Ages," Buster Keaton's first feature length Metro comedy, which has already enjoyed a run at the Rivoli Theatre, New York, a brilliant triumph in London, and similar triumphs in San Francisco and other cities:

"Desire," a Louis Burston presentation which forms one of the series of Metro Premier Feature productions of the 1923-1924 program; "The Eternal Struggle," a Reginald Barker production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces. This picture played last week at the Rivoli Theatre, New York; "The Eagle's Feather," another Metro Premier Feature production with James Kirkwood and Mary Alden among other noted players in the cast; "The Social Code," Viola Dana's second Metro starring picture.

Four important productions will be released by Metro during the month of November. These are: "Pleasure Mad," Reginald Barker's second production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. It will be released November 5; "Held to Answer," with House Peters in the leading role. It will be released November 12; "Hospitality," Buster Keaton's second feature length Metro comedy. It is a Joseph M. Schenck presentation through Metro. It will be released November 19.

And last, Jackie Coogan's long-heralded Metro picture, "Long Live the King," to be released November 26. This is a nine reel production recently completed on the west coast under the direction of Victor Schertzinger from the novel by Mary Roberts Rinehart. It was produced under the personal supervision of Jack Coogan, Senior. It will be released November 26.

Friedman to Handle Preferred in Chicago

In a deal involving a quarter of a million dollars, J. L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, in Chicago, has taken over the distribution of Preferred Pictures in the Chicago territory. Mr. Friedman left for Chicago on Saturday after completing negotiations with B. P. Schulberg and J. G. Bachmann of Preferred Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Friedman will immediately enlarge his organization to handle adequately this new product. Among the new members of his sales force will be many from the former Preferred staff in Chicago.

The new contract gives Mr. Friedman the new Preferred Fifteen in addition to the Preferred Eight, and he will at once begin an extensive sales and exploitation for Preferred Pictures in Chicago.

Riesenfeld Praises Paramount Film

Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto, Rivoli and Criterion theatres in New York, is the latest to accord to Cecil B. DeMille's Paramount production, "The Ten Commandments," the enthusiastic praise of an expert viewer of pictures. In a telegram to Adolph Zukor, Mr. Riesenfeld says in part: "Have viewed 'The Ten Commandments' twice. It is the greatest picture I have ever seen."

"Grandma's Boy" Makes This Township Grow

A new record has just been set by Harold Lloyd in his Associated Exhibitors super-attraction, "Grandma's Boy."

In Torrance, Cal., a town of 1,500 inhabitants, it played on September 25th and 26th to 1,510 paid admissions. The figures indicate either that every man, woman and child living in Torrance attended, or that every stranger within its gate was present on one day or the other.

Those who attended on the opening day of the run apparently advertised the attraction well, for whereas the paid admissions that day were 659, these swelled to 851 the second day.

In "The Mirage"

It is announced by Joseph M. Schenck that Constance Talmadge will appear in "The Mirage," a screen production of the play by Edgar Selwyn.

Changes Title

Metro announces that the new title of "The Living Past," which Harold Shaw is now directing at the Metro Hollywood studios, will be "The Fool's Awakening."

November Exodus for Next Coogan Film

According to an announcement made on the west coast by Jack Coogan, Sr., Victor Schertzinger, film director, has been retained to direct Jackie's second Metro picture, production on which will begin within the next several weeks.

"Long Live the King" will be released in the latter part of November.

MAE MARSH IN PADDY-THE-NEXT-BEST-THING, A UNITED ARTISTS' PICTURE

Sanger Co. Books Preferred Films

The first four Preferred Pictures released this fall have been booked by the Sanger Amusement Company for exhibition in their entire circuit of theatres throughout the south. The productions included in this contract are "The Broken Wing," "Mothers-in-Law," "April Showers," and "The Virginian."

"Fashion Row" Completed

Mae Murray has completed "Fashion Row," her second Metro starring picture, which together with "The French Doll," her current release, and another production, form one of the important units of the Metro 1923-1924 program of major production. "Fashion Row" is scheduled for December release.

Those in the cast of "Fashion Row" with Miss Murray are Elmo Lincoln, Freeman Wood, Earle Fox and Mathilde Brundage.

"The Way of a Man" Made by Pathe as Feature and Serial

In view of the virile, dramatic character of the story unfolded in Emerson Hough's novel, "The Way of a Man," throbbing with the indomitable spirit of the hardy pioneers of the early West and aglow with all the rugged vigor and color of its great open spaces, Pathe has had prepared both a feature and serial version of the famous story.

Both versions were produced at the same time under the direction of George Seitz, in pursuance of well-defined plans laid down last June preliminary to the start of production work. The feature version of this splendid story by the author of "The Covered Wagon" and "North of 36" will be released by Pathe December 16 in advance of the release of the serial production.

Like his "Covered Wagon," Emerson Hough's "The Way of a Man" is vibrant with the perils and hardships that beset the pioneers of our Middle and Far West in their hazardous advance across the great sweeping plains and arid desert wastes of the little-known regions west of the Mississippi. Throughout all the stages of production work on both feature and serial, Mr. Seitz has labored unceasingly to reproduce with unerring accuracy and thrilling realism the spirit of heroic adventure, which the author breathed into his world-famous story of this epochal chapter in the nation's history.

The fast action and outdoor atmosphere of "The Way of a Man," abetted by the tremendous success on the screen of "The Covered Wagon" by the same author, will in the opinion of Pathe officials strongly recommend the feature version to first-run theatres, which because of their transient patronage are not usually in the market for serials. The universal interest extending to this colorful and eventful period of the country's development is also expected to prove an important factor in making "The Way of a Man" a box-office attraction of the first magnitude.

Allene Ray and Harold Miller head an eminently capable cast, which includes in the principal roles "Bud" Osborne, Kathryn Appleton, Chet Ryan, Whitehorse, and Lillian Gale. Mr. Seitz took his cast of principals, accompanied by a great company of extras, Indians from the reservations, droves of horses and a train of the historic "covered wagons" of the plains, into the Arizona desert, where over six weeks were spent in the filming of exteriors.

Universal Lines Up Strong List of Stories for Early Production

Universal has lined up an unusual selection of literary material for adaptation to the screen, it has just been learned from the Universal home office. The list includes powerful stories by world-known authors, and promises a series of high grade pictures for Universal release in the coming months.

Upon Mr. Carl Laemmle's arrival from Europe, the Universal scenario forces held a long series of conferences with him over the stories for next spring's Jewels, and other pictures. The Universal chief in outlining his picture policy, made it known that Universal will stop at no limits in obtaining high grade stories for the screen.

The list selected under Mr. Laemmle's supervision by Robert F. Roden, Universal's eastern scenario head, and Raymond L. Schrool, Universal's coast scenario chief, includes the following well-known stories: "The Inheritors," a novel by Miss I. A. R. Wylie; "Love Insurance," a novel by Earl Derr Biggers; "Wine," a story by William MacHarg; "Courtin' Calamity," by William Dudley Pelley; "Judgments of West Paradise," by Valma Clark, and "The Free Trader," by Kathrene and Robert Pinkerton.

Some of the stories are due for early production. Scenarists already have been engaged to whip them into film form. Following the liberal purchase policy of Mr. Laemmle, Universal has obtained the services of some of the best scenarists in the business to make over these stories for the screen.

Among the recent purchases, one is for serial adaptation. Sevis William McLeod Raine's "Ridgeral other well-known stories are in the process of production.

Following completion of "Clay of Ca'lina," starring Herbert Rawlinson and directed by Robert Hill, work will be started on "Jack of Clubs," as a Rawlinson story. Work on the adaptation of "The Tornado," Lincoln Carter's celebrated melodrama, is also under way. George W. Ogden's "Claim Number One" is in process of scenarization for Jack Hoxie, as way of Montana."

"Souls That Pass in the Night," the remarkable mystery story written by former chief William Flynn, of the United States Secret Service, has also been purchased by Universal and is being adapted for an all star cast and is to be produced in the near future. Perhaps one of the most important pictures under way in the entire industry is "Damned," the world celebrated anonymous novel, now being filmed at Universal City.

Simplicity Is Keynote of Fairbanks Film

A striking example of the simplicity and purity of composition adhered to in filming Douglas Fairbanks' "Thief of Bagdad" was seen in the shooting of the great throne room scene, one of the most imposing interiors in the picture. Here only fifty persons represent the retinues of five powerful Asiatic princes. Ordinarily such a scene would be crowded with some 600 gaudily garbed extras.

"The Broken Wing" Lauded by Critics

B. P. Schulberg's Preferred Picture, "The Broken Wing," from the play by Paul Dickey and Charles W. Goddard, has concluded a successful first showing at the California in San Francisco.

San Francisco Call-Post said: "The production sparkles with high dramatic qualities and a brand of humor of the first caliber." San Francisco Journal: "An amusing story with many bright lines."

Story of "Black Oxen" Is Widely Distributed

That newspaper serialization of a photoplay story has been attained to an extent hitherto unrealized is the claim of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in announcing the full details of its "Black Oxen" serialization plan.

"Black Oxen," a Gertrude Atherton novel, which is among the year's best sellers, is to be offered by First National as a Frank Lloyd production. In laying out its campaign for newspaper serialization, the company aimed at obtaining the maximum value to the exhibitor. The serialization rights were released so that upon completion of the novel, which was issued in full, the picture would be ready for release in the local theatre. In addition to this every installment in the newspaper carried an announcement of the forthcoming Frank Lloyd production which features Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle.

At the present time one hundred and thirty daily newspapers are carrying the serialization.

"The Call of the Wild" Undergoing Big Booking

Following its premieres on the West Coast at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, and on the East Coast at the Cameo Theatre, Broadway, New York, Pathe's picturization of Jack London's famous dog story, "The Call of the Wild," is playing to capacity audiences in prominent first-run theatres throughout the country.

The volume of bookings on this subject, which was released generally on Sept. 23, is mounting steadily, and during the last ten days some of the most important theatres and circuits of the country have closed for engagements on the production. Among these houses and theatre chains are: The I. H. Libson Circuit, closing for the Strand, Cincinnati, the Colonial in Columbus, and the Strand in Dayton; the Rothchild group, signing for the Granada, San Francisco; the A. H. Blank chain, for the Palace Theatre in Des Moines; the Midwest Theatre Company, including the Midway of Rockford, the Lincoln Square of Decatur, the Rialto in Bloomington, and the Rialto at Elgin, Ill.; the Capitol Theatre Circuit of Kansas City, Mo., including its theatres in Independence, Eldoredo, Manhattan, Chanute in the state of Kansas, Excelsior Springs and Carthage, in the state of Missouri, and the following theatres in Kansas City, Mo.: the Lyndwood, Gladstone, Summit, Admiral, Benton, and Elsworth; the State Theatre, Oakland, Cal.; the Liberty, Fresno, Cal.; Fox, Aurora, Ill.; Gem, Gary, Ind.; Palace, Tulsa, Okla.; Capitol, Charleston, W. Va., and the Hippodrome, Lancaster, O.

Big Exploitation for "The Drivin' Fool"

Following intensive exploitation and publicity campaigns the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation on Saturday, October 20, launched a two weeks' engagement of its latest comedy feature, "The Drivin' Fool," at the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, Mo. The advance campaign was in charge of Charles Geigerich, of the Hodkinson exploitation department, who spent more than a week in the mid-west city preparing and executing the drive.

The Hodkinson picture set new attendance records for both Saturday and Sunday performances, it is said, and by Monday was well under way to establish a new mark for the downtown playhouse.

The exploitation campaign as carried out was followed exactly as laid out in the press and exploitation book on "The Drivin' Fool," prepared by the Hodkinson offices for the guidance of exhibitors throughout the land.

Tie-up Race with Warner Film

Live-wire exhibitors in all sections are losing no time in taking advantage of the recent international race between Zev and Papyrus, and are tying up the Warner Classic, "Little Johnny Jones," starring Johnny Hines, with the big sporting event, it is reported.

The story of the picture is almost a direct parallel with the international race, Warner Bros. state, except that Johnny Jones and his famous horse, Yankee Doodle, traveled to England to race the English champion at E[illegible]n Downs, instead of the English horse coming to [illegible] countr[illegible] Papyrus.

Chaplin Makes a Personal Appearance

"Charlie Chaplin, wag of the world and droll picture-maker, wha has made a million sides to shake and a million eyes to run with tears of laughter, owned Detroit Monday."

Thus the Detroit Free Press, expressed itself on Monday, October 16, when Charles Chaplin broke a long-standing rule of his own and cut loose with public personal appearance stuff that kept that city in a turmoil of delight from eight o'clock in the morning till midnight.

The unusual sight of Charles Chaplin overcoming his reluctance to appear in public was in response to an official invitation from Detroit's great commercial body, the Board of Commerce, to be the city's guest.

Big Audience Welcomes Cosmopolitan Picture

"Unseeing Eyes," the latest production from the Cosmopolitan Studios, starts its career armed with evidence of the high approval of capacity Broadway audiences and the newspaper reviewers. The premiere of the picture at the Cosmopolitan Theatre on Sunday evening attracted a big and typical Broadway audience, which welcomed the picture warmly.

New York newspaper reviewers plainly shared in the welcome which the audience gave to Lionel Barrymore, hero of Arthur Stringer's tale of perilous adventure in the Canadian Rockies. Seena Owen is the heroine, and Louis Wolheim has the "heavy" part. Victor Herbert and his orchestra, of course, topped off the whole occasion.

Following are expressions from some newspaper reviews: Daily News: "'Unseeing Eyes,' tale of north, has thrill for every second." New York Times: "Lionel Barrymore gives a good account of himself as Dean. Miss Owen is sympathetic as Miriam, and if you want a super-villain, Wolheim fills the bill." Evening Telegram: "Go up to the handsome theatre on Columbus Circle and enjoy the many thrills in this story of the frozen North."

Telegraph: "If the success of the film is measured by its appeal to the motion picture public then we must say that 'Unseeing Eyes' occupies an enviable position. It has everything the public loves." Evening Mail: "'Unseeing Eyes' also differs from other films of the great outdoors in its careful direction and beautiful and effective staging."

Warner Says Showmen Want Variety in Films

"Exhibitors want a wide variety of motion picture productions," declares Sam Warner, "rather than the occasional big production for the coming season. The conditions imposed on exhibitors by companies producing photoplays of a stupendous nature and presenting them in legitimate theatres at high prices is frightening off the exhibitor who formerly looked on the big picture as an out-of-the-ordinary photoplay for his theatre. Naturally, showmen are booking these bigger features, even though their box-office record shows a loss now and then, but they depend a great deal on the simpler production that lends itself to unusual exploitation methods just as much as the photoplay containing million dollar names, massive sets and super direction."

Mr. Warner made this declaration after conferring with important exhibitors in New England and live-wire showmen that he has come in contact with during his visit to the Warner office in New York.

"It has been this organization's policy to make every variety of a production so that each exhibitor will have a wide choice to select from in his dealings with us. So far this season we have placed productions before the camera that involve large sums of money and we have undertaken productions that have not been so costly but contain a certain amount of an appeal that an exhibitor cannot overlook.

"In our schedule for the season of 1923-24 we have included productions with the finest stories and stars available, and we have also undertaken productions that have not called for such an outlay of money but which will appeal to the exhibitor because of their universal theme, treatment and box-office drawing power."

Thompson in New York

David H. Thompson, First National production manager, is in New York for a conference with First National executives relative to future activities at the West Coast studios. He brought with him the master print and negative of "Flaming Youth."

Cruze Will Direct "North of 36"

"North of 36," Emerson Hough's epic of the stirring and colorful pioneer days that bridged the gap between Indian warfare and America's industrial birth, is to be filmed at once as the result of a decision reached after months of planning and deliberation by executives of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Jesse L. Lasky announced in Hollywood recently. James Cruze will direct.

M. H. Hoffman Resigns

Milton H. Hoffman, Metro production manager for the last two years, has announced his resignation to take effect next month, when he will leave for an extended ocean voyage. Mr. Hoffman has been in ill health for several months.

Goldwyn Grooming "Dark Horse;" High Hopes for Seastrom Pictures

Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, it appears, has been holding an ace up its sleeve. While producing or distributing and publicising and bragging about such big successes as Cosmopolitan's "Enemies of Women," its own "Three Wise Fools," "The Spoilers," "Six Days," Distinctive's "The Green Goddess" and others, it has been quietly grooming another picture to capture motion picture sweepstakes for the year. It will be released sometime around December 1.

The dark horse is "Name the Man!" the first American-made picture by the noted Swedish actor-director, Victor Seastrom. It is an adaptation from Sir Hall Caine's latest novel, "The Master of Man." Report has been made from the Goldwyn studios, from time to time, regarding the selection of members of the cast and progress on photography, but there has been a curious silence regarding the quality and the magnitude of the production.

It now develops that there has been a purpose in the sparingness of the advance publicity regarding "Name the Man!" Goldwyn wished to have its first Seastrom picture almost on the point of release before beginning its publicity campaign, so that it could approach the task of telling the trade the quality of the picture with fresh material and fresh impressions.

Mr. Seastrom now is putting the finishing touches on the editing and titling of the production at the Goldwyn studios. The continuity was prepared by Paul Bern, one time editor-in-chief for Goldwyn and one of the most gifted of scenarists, in consultation with June Mathis, editorial director for Goldwyn, and with Mr. Seastrom.

Reports from production executives at the studios are that "Name the Man!" is a picture astouding in its humanity and its realism; one that will make its appeal straight to the heart of every person seeing it. The noted director has imbued the actors playing the important roles with his own peculiar gift of making real life in the screen's shadow picturing of life. Each player, answering to the director's appeal to avoid excess in portraying the highly wrought emotions of the characters, while at the same time keeping them keyed up to dramatic tenseness, has achieved, Goldwyn says, a naturalness seldom attained on the screen.

Hall Caine's novel, "The Master of Man" was the one story out of all the material available at the Goldwyn studios, and from all of the outside material that he had read and considered, that Mr. Seastrom selected as the story he wanted to present to the American public as his first production made in this country. It held the qualities that appealed to the Swedish director and in the expression of which he won world-wide honor as one of the greatest screen directorial geniuses of the world, before Goldwyn induced him to come to America and make a series of productions for it.

The cast which Goldwyn gave Mr. Seastrom to work with is without question one to delight the heart of any director. Mae Busch has the best part she has essayed in the films. Patsy Ruth Miller has the role of the good woman who is really loved by Victor Stowell, while Bessie Collister, the role which Mae Busch plays, is the girl he has wronged in a moment of passion. Conrad Nagel is the Victor Stowell.

Boston Papers Praise Vitagraph Production

The metropolitan premiere of "Pioneer Trails" in Boston called forth high commendation from the critics of newspapers in that city. Not only is the story praised for its dramatic entertainment but the splendid photography is emphasized in the critical reviews.

The Boston Advertiser said: "One bit of photography showing an Indian scout signalling to his fellow killers upon a cliff is a beautiful sample of camera painting at its best." Boston Telegram: "Atmosphere and beautiful scenes abound in 'Pioneer Trails' showing at the Park Theatre. All in all 'Pioneer Trails' is an instructive and well portrayed picture of American life and American people when our country was young."

Boston Herald: "Incidentally there is a very pretty beroine in crinolines, played by Alice Calhoun." Boston American: "Mr. (Culien) Landis as the young hero gives a characterization always pleasing and virile. Particular mention should be made of the picturesque scenes in mountains and plains." Boston Post: "It is a thrilling and romantic drama done in a large manner with a big cast headed by Alice Calhoun and Cullen Landis."

"The Spanish Dancer" Reported Making Hit

Reports received at the Paramount home office on the initial showings of the Herbert Brenon production, "The Spanish Dancer," starring Pola Negri, in New York, Los Angeles, Salt Lake City and Sandusky, indicate that the picture is destined to score one of the greatest box-office records of recent years, Paramount says.

"The Spanish Dancer" is the first of the new Paramounts to be released under the policy of demonstration showings by which prices to exhibitors are to be ultimately determined.

Total admissions and receipts for the picture during its first week in New York at the Rivoli, Paramount states, lifted it immediately into the class of "Blood and Sand," "The Sheik," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" and "Manslaughter," all of which had their New York premieres at the same theatre. Approximately 9,000 people paid admission on the opening day. At Grauman's Rialto in Los Angeles the picture is now in its second week of capacity business. In the first seven days it played to 20,397 people.

Fairbanks Film Awarded High Honor in Mexico

Douglas Fairbanks' screen version of the famous Robin Hood has been awarded first place as the best motion picture exhibited in the Republic of Mexico during the year 1923.

This signal honor for "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood" came as the result of a voting contest conducted recently by El Universal, one of the leading newspapers of Mexico City.

In honor of the award those in charge of the contest arranged an impressive fiesta at one of the big theatres in Mexico City. One of the principal features was the presentation to Harvey Sheehan, general manager of United Artists in Mexico, of a diploma from El Universal, stating that the diploma was for Douglas Fairbanks for his "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

Warners Enthusiastic About "Tiger Rose"

News comes from the Warner Bros. West Coast Studios that Sidney A. Franklin has completed the editing, titling and cutting of the screen version of the famous Belasco stage play, "Tiger Rose," in which Lenore Ulric is starred, and that the finished print has been shipped East for the approval of the Warner officials in the city of New York.

Before the print left the Warner Studios it was shown to H. M. Warner and Jack Warner, who were highly enthusiastic over the new production, and who predicted that it would take its place among the finest motion picture productions of the new season.

Educator Forecasts Success for Picture

"Every lover of Dickens is certain to be pleased with the new photoplay, 'David Copperfield,'" declared Dr. C. E. Meleney, associate superintendent of the New York City public schools, following a special showing of the Associated Exhibitors feature, which he attended recently. "And if it pleases the students of Dickens it is certain to make a deep appeal to every one who appreciates good, wholesome entertainment. I consider the production splendidly done and well worthy of popular support."

John S. Woody, Associated's general manager, has announced also the booking of "David Copperfield" for an indefinite run in Tremont Temple, Boston.

Announcement of the official release of this feature has been the signal for a veritable rush of bookings, Mr. Woody stated.

"Six Days" Gets Good National Advertising

Twenty-five of the big key cities of the country have either already carried, or will carry just prior to the first booking of "Six Days," a large number of the striking and artistic 24-sheet posters designed for the production. The posting remains on the boards for several weeks in advance of the showings.

The bill posting campaign was arranged and put across by Howard Dietz, director of advertising and publicity for Goldwyn. Among the towns where the poster campaign has already been put through are New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, St. Louis, Cleveland, Detroit, Milwaukee and Salt Lake City.

In connection with the national bill posting campaign, Mr. Dietz also arranged a tie-up with the nineteen Hearst newspapers in the largest cities of the country by which a serial version of "Six Days" would be run in the Hearst newspaper in every city where they are published at the time the picture was shown in first run.

The receipts at the Capitol, New York, for the first week's screening of the picture were in excess of $53,000, which is very close to the record week's business for the Capitol. The picture was retained for a second week, doing a business almost as great as the first week.

When "Six Days" was put on at their Chicago Theatre by Balaban & Katz, the week following its screening for them, the serialization of the story was published in Hearst's Herald-Examiner. In Los Angeles, where "Six Days" is now in its second week, the Examiner published the story serially.

Pilgrim Film Successful in New York Premiere

New York newspaper critics expressed their praise of "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's stage play, "The Scarecrow," now being given its premiere engagement at the Cameo Theatre, New York City.

The New York Times said: "'Puritan Passions' is a picture that has enlisted careful study and unlimited pains." The Daily News: "Not only have we Percy Mackaye's best but Glenn Hunter's finest and Mary Astor's most charming personality." "A singularly fine, graceful performance by Glenn Hunter," declared the New York Herald. The Evening World avers: "To us, 'Puritan Passions' was a movie treat."

The New York Tribune: "'Puritan Passions' seems to us one of the most interesting pictures of the year." The New York Evening Telegram says: "You will find in 'Puritan Passions' a vanished phase of life brought back vividly and dramatically."

Hart Congratulated on New Paramount Picture

William S. Hart, who recently completed "Wild Bill Hickok," the first of the series of pictures which is to be released under the star's new contract with Paramount, is receiving congratulations from many film people in Hollywood on the excellence of the production which he has made to serve as his first starring vehicle since his temporary retirement from the screen two years ago.

Among those who have seen "Wild Bill Hickok" in its finished state is Jesse L. Lasky, who sent Hart the following telegram: "My dear Bill: I have just finished looking at 'Wild Bill Hickok' and seldom have I spent a more fascinating hour and a half. The picture is truly the best Bill Hart picture thus far produced and unquestionably will prove popular and successful."

"A Lady of Quality" Received in New York

The Universal home office has received from the West Coast the advance print of one of the biggest pictures in that company's 1923-1924 schedule, "A Lady of Quality." It is a Super-Jewel Production, and is expected to take its place beside "Merry Go Round" as a big box-office bet.

Hobart Henley directed the picture, from a screen adaptation of Frances Hodgson Burnett's popular novel. Virginia Valli is the star, and as the first production in which she is starred alone, Universal has gone to extremes to make "A Lady of Quality" an outstanding picture. The production is due to reach the screen around the first of the year. Its appearance will be preceded by an elaborate exploitation campaign, already under way.

Baylies' Campaign for Pathe Film "Columbus"

The campaign conducted by T. B. Baylies, managing director of the State Theatre, New Bedford, Mass., for the engagement of Pathe's "Columbus" at that house serves admirably as a model, it is said, for the presentation of this and the forthcoming productions, belonging to the "Chronicles of America" series to be released through Pathe.

Capitalizing the extraordinary appeal of the subject to the school authorities, Mr. Baylies concentrated his efforts on the local teaching staff, the City Librarian, and prominent clergymen and newspaper editors, who by virtue of their professions would be expected to be particularly interested in anything pertaining to the educational welfare of the city's juvenile population.

"The Temple of Venus" to Have N. Y. Premiere

The fourth Broadway presentation of the William Fox specials for the season of 1923-24 is scheduled for Monday night, October 29 when "The Temple of Venus" will be given its World's premiere at the Central Theatre. "Monna Vanna," which is now at this house will continue its run until Sunday, October 28.

This is a Henry Otto production. It was filmed on Santa Cruz Island off the coast of California. Mary Philbin is in the leading feminine role. She is supported by David Butler and Phyllis Haver and also by one thousand bathing beauties.

With the final editing of the picture the following cast is announced in support of the three featured players: William Waling, Micky McBain, Alice Day, William Boyd, Leon Barry, Celecte Lee, Senorita Consuella, Robert Cline, Marilynn Boyd, Frank Keller, Lorraine Easton and Helen Virgil.

Suggests Exploitation for Warner Production

"Back-Home-to-the-Farm-Week," says Warner Bros., is an idea which should appeal to all exhibitors who have booked the latest Warner classic, "The Country Kid," starring Wesley Barry. Live-wire showmen can cash in on this idea by co-operating with different stores and obtaining full page ads from merchants who handle goods of a rural nature. A combined full page ad with the exhibitor's in the center calling attention to the showing of "The Country Kid" should stimulate a great amount of interest.

An endless number of stunts can help the box-office in connection with "Back-to-the-Farm-Week" in each city where the picture is booked. Tie-ups can be made with dance halls, giving nights for a Country Kid Barn Dance with rube costumes; amateur nights can be staged in each theatre with a prize given to the best rube dancer; a country store on the stage of the theatre at each performance should also stimulate interest.

The exploitation and publicity department of the Warner organization have created an unusual amount of ideas which are included in the campaign book for the exhibitor's benefit.

"Virginian" Praised by Dayton Newspaper

Owen Wister's story, "The Virginian," which has been filmed for Preferred by Tom Forman, was given its first public exhibition this week at the Columbia Theatre, Dayton, Ohio.

The Dayton Journal says: "Owen Wister's story 'The Virginian,' in its screen form was presented for the first time on a commercial screen Sunday at the Columbia before a packed house. To our mind, it is one of the very superior cinemas of the season—or for two seasons. By dint of deft handling, it succeeded in forcing its point. Kenneth Harlan who portrays the name role, seems to be the embodiment of the popular notion of his part."

"Pioneer Trails" Liked in Boston

The Park Theatre in Boston held "Pioneer Trails," produced by Vitagraph under the direction of David Smith, over for a second week.

Bookers in New England are striving eagerly to obtain play dates following the success of this super feature in Boston.

Detective Praises Vitagraph Film

The ingenuity with which "The Leavenworth Case" the second Whitman Bennett production for Vitagraph sustains the mystery of the murder of Ira Leavenworth was highly praised by Henry Forbes, a retired detective sargeant in charge of a homicide squad of New York City, after a showing of this mystery photoplay at the Bennett Studios in Yonkers. The old detective declared the mystery story to be one of the best pictures he had ever seen.

Tourneur Hits on Timely Theme

That Maurice Tourneur hit upon an ever timely theme when he made "Jealous Husbands," was pointed out by M. C. Levee, the producer, last week. Through a clipping service the Tourneur organization in one week received four thousand clippings from newspapers in which the word "jealousy" appeared in the headlines, many of which were front page stories. The picture is for First National release.

Lloyd to Direct "The Sea Hawk"

With "Black Oxen" in the cutting room, Frank Lloyd will start work within a week on the production of Rafael Sabatini's "The Sea Hawk," which will be produced for Associated First National Pictures, Inc. In "Black Oxen" Lloyd has brought to the screen Gertrude Atherton's most successful novel.

Cast of Stahl Film Is Selected

John M. Stahl has completed his cast for his picturization of the stage play, "Why Men Leave Home." This First National picture will be interpreted by Lewis Stone in the principal role, Helene Chadwick, Mary Carr, William V. Mong, Alma Bennett, Hedda Hopper, Lile Leslie, Sidney Bracey and E. H. Calvert.

More Circuits Sign

Pathe continues to report the signing by circuits of theatres for the entire Pathe two-reel comedy output. The latest are the W. P. Gray circuit of fifty-five houses in the New England states and the Sam Goldstein chain, located in Springfield, Holyoke, Pittsfield, Northampton, Westfield, Ware and Palmer, Mass.

Hodkinson Novelty

The Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an interesting novelty for "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow." A card, postal size, shows Glenn Hunter as Lord Ravensbane looking into the mirror of truth. When the card is held to the light the image of the writes appears in the glass.

Cast of Vitagraph Picture Announced

J. Stuart Blackton announced the complete cast of "Let Not Man Put Asunder," the indictment of the divorce evil, adapted from the novel by Basil King, at the Vitagraph studios last week. Mr. Blackton began shooting on his new super feature last Monday.

In the cast are Pauline Frederick, Lou Tellegen, Effie Shannon, Leslie Austen, Maurice Costello, Helen D'Algy, Gladys Frazin, Clifton Webb and Homer Lynn.

"'Let Not Man Put Asunder' will be one of the great significant photoplays of the year," Mr. Blackton said. "The divorce evil is growing throughout the world. How to avoid unhappiness in marriage is one of the gravest problems in America today. In my coming production the cause of an unhappy marriage is presented frankly. Those who see this picture will learn what a terrifying evil discontent in the home may become and to what disaster it may lead."

"Going Up" Sold to 2 Cities Via Air Wave

Science scored heavily this week when Jensen & Von Herberg, the big west coast exhibitors, traveling Europewards aboard the Mauretania, booked Douglas MacLean's "Going Up" for their theatres in Seattle and Portland, Ore. With John S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, sitting at the New York or receiving end of the ethereal connection, the entire negotiations were conducted and the deals closed by radio messages.

What science accomplished was this: Radiograms from Mr. Woody's office, station JSW, overtook a speedy ocean liner, two passengers on which, disregarding the ocean waves, used air waves to flash the desire to serve patrons at home with the picture.

The Mauretania was three days out when Mr. Woody got into communication with Claude Jensen.

"Warrens of Virginia" Being Filmed by Fox

"The Warrens of Virginia," the famous stage play produced by David Belasco and written by William C. deMille, is the only production now in progress at the William Fox New York Studios. Elmer Clifton, who made "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "Six Cylinder Love," is directing the picture.

Martha Mansfield, whose last work was in the Fox special, "The Silent Command," has the role of Agatha, the feminine lead. The others in the cast include Robert Andrews, Harlan Knight, James Turfler, J. Barney Sherry, Helen Ray Kyle, Wilfred Lytell and Rosemary Hill.

The original stage production ranked as one of the leading dramatic achievements.

"Columbus" Is Feature of Dedication Program

"Columbus," the first release of Pathe's colorful and dramatic "Chronicles of America" series, was a feature of a special gala program arranged by the Indianapolis chapter of the Knights of Columbus for the dedication of their new building on last Friday evening, October 12.

An enthusiastic audience, which included representatives of the city and state governments, the Speaker of the Lower House of the Canadian Parliament, and more than five hundred members of the order, received the picture with prolonged and hearty applause. Following the showing of the picture, Mr. Pagani, chairman of the meeting, spoke of the production in highly laudatory terms.

"Madame Sans Gene" Is Pola's Next

According to an announcement issued by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president in charge of production of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, Miss Negri's next starring picture will be made from Victorien Sardou's play "Madame Sans Gene."

De Mille Adds La Rocque

William de Mille has announced that Rod La Rocque has been added to the cast of his current Paramount production, "Everyday Love."

The featured members are Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Nita Naldi, Theodore Kosloff.

"Pleasure Mad" for November Release

With the hurried preparations going on for the new Reginald Barker production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces, "Women Who Wait," it is apparent that Mr. Barker is rapidly completing his second Metro-Louis B. Mayer attraction of the new season, "Pleasure Mad," upon which the noted director has been engaged for many months.

"Pleasure Mad" is scheduled for release early in November. It is a film version of Blanche Upright's novel, "The Valley of Content." A. P. Younger made the screen adaptation and it was photographed by Norbert Brodin.

Spearing Prepares Scenario

The latest scenario work of James O. Spearing, former New York newspaper critic, now associated with the Universal Pictures Corporation, has been the preparation of "The Signal Tower" for screening. "The Signal Tower" is Wadsworth Camp's short story included in O'Brien's "Best Short Stories of 1921" and is to be a Universal-Jewel special. Clarence L. Brown will direct it.

Tulsa Welcomes "Going Up"

John S. Woody, general manager of Associated, has just received this telegram from Harry Castle, manager of the Palace Theatre, Tulsa:

"We opened with your production, 'Going Up,' Friday, and packed them at every show, despite a continual downpour of rain. The laughter and criticism from my audiences indicate that it is one of the best ever shown. Congratulations, and may you have many more like it."

Big Campaign Book for Vitagraph Film

Vitagraph is compiling a campaign book for "The Man from Brodney's," the picturization of George Barr McCutcheon's novel, prints of which will soon go forward to branches from the Brooklyn laboratories.

The new exploitation book will be eight columns wide, full newspaper size and printed on heavy stock.

Fairbanks Works with Tigers

Douglas Fairbanks worked with a group of Bengal tigers every night last week. These animals are required in the forthcoming Fairbanks' feature, "The Thief of Bagdad." These beasts have become the chief residents of the ancient city of Bagdad, which stands on the Pickford-Fairbanks lot, and are kept within their city limits by a wire fence twelve feet high.

"The Spanish Dancer" Scores Hit at the Demonstration Theatres

Additional reports from Paramount demonstration theatres, received at the home office of the company, bear proof of the box-office power of "The Spanish Dancer," the first picture to be released under the new policy of test showings. The reports include not only figures on attendance and box-office revenue but press criticisms and opinions of the theatre managers.

The four-day run of the picture at the Plaza Theatre, Sandusky, O., was terminated Wednesday, October 17, when Manager A. C. Himmelein reported as follows: "Just finished a remarkable four-day run on 'The Spanish Dancer' —a few dollars less than 'Manslaughter,' which holds the house record. I honestly believe that 'The Spanish Dancer' will prove to be one of the season's sensations."

Last Sunday night, following the opening in Chicago, the McVicker's management sent the following telegram: "'The Spanish Dancer' drew record box-office line and there was a stampede for seats when McVicker's opened today. Chicago acclaims 'The Spanish Dancer' Pola Negri's best picture. Big business sustained all day."

At the Grand Theatre in Columbus the Brenon production broke all house records on its opening day, Sunday, October 14, and the Olympic in Pittsburgh, where the opening was Monday, the 15th, reported a never-ending box-office line for the first time in many weeks. At both these houses the week's business approached the house records.

Pola Negri took Kansas City by storm when the picture had its local premiere at the Newman. The Star critic said: "'The Spanish Dancer' is an exceptionally good picture, well acted, well directed. And, running through it all, vivid as a flame, is the characterization Pola Negri gives of the gypsy girl. She talks with her eyes, her hands, her whole body, and there is fire and buoyancy in her work. We take off our hats to her."

From George E. Carpenter, manager of the Paramount-Empress in Salt Lake City, came the following wire: "The public has welcomed Paramount's new policy with open arms. With admission prices advanced they jammed the Paramount-Empress day and night. Forced to stop ticket sales three times Sunday."

"There is not a moment's drag in the picture," said the Herald of Grand Rapids, where "The Spanish Dancer" played to capacity throughout its engagement at the Majestic. "The simple story of love and adventure among the most romantic circumstances sweeps simply through with fighting, exaltation, humor, despair and a happy ending. The capable cast and glittering sets are, after all, used for their rightful purpose of emphasizing a thrilling romance."

The Republican-Gazette, of Lima, O., where the picture played to turn-away business throughout the week of the 14th at the Quilna Theatre, said: "The first 'demonstration' audiences to view 'The Spanish Dancer' at the Quilna Sunday gave this new photoplay the stamp of their unqualified approval. The theatre was crowded at every performance and every one of the many telling points in the engaging romance was roundly applauded. As hundreds were turned away Sunday, unable to gain admittance, the engagement will evidently be as big a success financially as it is artistically."

Reports from the Madison, at Madison, Wis., and the Appleton, at Appleton, are similar in import. At the Madison the business averaged $500 a day, as against a daily average of $125 for several months previous, while at the Appleton the average was $460.80 as against $150. The Daily Cardinal, of Madison, said: "We don't have a twinge of conscience when we say that 'The Spanish Dancer' is one of the best pictures we have seen in Madison."

A new house record was set up at the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, last Sunday, when "The Spanish Dancer" played to $6,220. The picture opened Saturday to $4,000 and present indications are that a new week's record will be established.

At the Princess Theatre, Springfield, Ill., the opening was last Saturday and Manager Harry Thornton wired: "Congratulations on this greatest of Negri productions. She has undoubtedly created a masterpiece for Paramount. National advertising and your exploitation campaign gave us a splendid opening."

Reports from the Crown Theatre, New London, Conn., are to the effect that big crowds were turned away Sunday and it is expected that all records will be broken. The New London Evening Day said Monday: "The production is more than a spectacle —it tells a real story. Pola Negri's interpretation of the lawless, laughing, impetuous dancing girl is superbly done. Nothing she did in 'Passion' surpassed her dueling scene. It was a splendid piece of work. And speaking of Moreno—at last Tony has come into his own."

Opens at Central

The fourth Broadway presentation of the William Fox specials for the season of 1923-24 is scheduled for Monday night, October 29, when "The Temple of Venus" will be given its world's premiere at the Central Theatre. "Monna Vanna," which is now at this house, will continue its run until Sunday, October 28.

"The Temple of Venus," says Fox, combines drama, allegory and a beauty extravaganza and has been called the "Ziegfeld Follies" of the screen. It is a Henry Otto production.

N. Y. Critics Praise United Artists Film

Broadway critics had much of praise for "Richard, the Lion-Hearted," initial production of Associated Authors, Inc., which had its New York premiere at the Mark Strand Theatre Sunday, October 21, under an Allied Producers and Distributors Corporation release. The New York public also greeted the picture warmly.

"Richard, the Lion-Hearted," a Frank Woods production, is an adaptation of Scott's "The Talisman," and is the first release turned out by the film triumvirate of Messrs. Woods, Thompson Buchanan and Elmer Harris. Later this trio, so well-known in the motion picture world, added Clark W. Thomas to its strength.

The picture stars Wallace Beery in the role of King Richard, the same role he so successfully created in "Douglas Fairbanks in Robin Hood."

"If you like romantic adventure skilfully done into a movie, then by all means see 'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,'" said the reviewer for the Sun and Globe. "'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,' is a good picture," said Robert E. Sherwood in the New York Herald. "In the role of King Richard Wallace Beery is the same splendid, forceful, vital, engaging King that he was in 'Robin Hood.'"

"Associated Authors struck home in their initial production," said F. W. M. Hall in the New York Times. "The settings are splendid, as also are the costumes."

"'Richard, the Lion-Hearted,' is exactly the thing as a photoplay for Associated Authors, Wallace Beery, the leading actor, the Mark Strand Theatre, and, by far the most important of all, the movie-going populace," said Robert G. Welsh in the Evening Telegram.

"Wallace Beery gives a convincing and vital performance as King Richard," said the critic for the Morning Telegraph. "Wallace Beery gives an interpretation of England's Crusading King which is human to the Nth degree," said the critic for the Evening Mail.

Glenn Hunter Ends Work on Film

Glenn Hunter has completed his first Paramount picture, "West of the Water Tower," at the company's Long Island studio, and is now in Chicago playing "Merton of the Movies," at the Blackstone Theatre. The production is finished with the exception of an atmospheric shot of Maryville, Mo., the town which Homer Croy wrote about in the novel from which the picture was made. Rollin Sturgeon, the director, and Harry Harris, cameraman, will stop off at Maryville on their way to Hollywood to secure the necessary scenes.

A cast of exceptional merit supported Hunter in this production. Headed by May McAvoy, Ernest Torrence and George Fawcett, it included ZaSu Pitts, Anne Schaefer, Joe Burke, Riley Hatch, Gladys Feldman, Alice Mann, Allen Parker and Jack Terry.

Doris Schroeder wrote the scenario, and the camera work was done by Harry Harris and George Hinners. W. J. Scully acted as Director Sturgeon's assistant.

Dwan Completes "Big Brother"

Allan Dwan has completed "Big Brother," the Paramount screen version of the novel of the same name by Rex Beach. The production was made at the eastern studio at Long Island City.

Heading the list of players is Tom Moore in the role of Jimmy Donovan, the leader of the car-barn gang on New York's lower East Side. Edith Roberts has the role of a dope fiend, and others who have prominent parts are Mickey Bennett, the talented seven-year-old player; Charles Henderson, Joe King, Paul Panzer, Neill Kelley, William Black, Milton Herman, Florence Ashbrook and Yvonne Hughes.

Three Stars in "Stranger"

Betty Compson will play the leading feminine role in the forthcoming Joseph Henabery production, "The Stranger," according to an announcement made by Jesse L. Lasky.

Richard Dix and Lewis Stone will play the principal masculine roles, and all three players will be co-featured, according to the same announcement.

"The Stranger" is an adaptation by Edfrid Bingham of John Galsworthy's "The First and the Last."

Signs for Preferred

Reported from the contract department of Preferred Pictures Corp. this week are the following houses which have signed for the fifteen features constituting the Preferred output for the season: the Garden, Princeton, N. J.; Strand, Owasso, Mich.; Virginia, Somerset, Kentucky; Imperial, Alliance, Neb.; the Castle, Irvington, N. J.; Colonial, East [illegible], Pa.; Strand and Rialto, Allentown, Pa.; Hippodrome, Sioux [illegible], Iowa; and the Rialto, [illegible], N. J.

"The Midnight Alarm" Does Get Them Inside

The box-office pull of "The Midnight Alarm," Vitagraph's story dealing with the life of a fireman, is attested by J. J. Harwood, manager of the Lexington Theatre, Cleveland. Mr. Harwood in a letter to Vitagraph says:

"I am very much pleased to advise you that we opened yesterday to the greatest business the house has ever done, the attraction being your latest release, 'The Midnight Alarm.' It was impossible to get the crowds into the theatre and we did a real turn-away business, the feature pleasing every one that was fortunate enough to get in."

Its appeal to audiences in Canada is demonstrated by the following telegram from Manager Brandon of the Imperial Theatre at Cornwall, Ontario:

"'Midnight Alarm' over the top with flying colors. Never in all my experience saw anything like the crowd in front of our theatre. Ran two shows, both houses jammed to outside doors. Good old Vitagraph."

Fox Films for Release Week of Oct. 21

"Cameo Kirby," the William Fox special production adapted from the great stage success by Booth Tarkington and Harry Leon Wilson, and the Sunshine Comedy, "The Roaring Lion," are scheduled for release October 21 by Fox Film Corporation. "The Governor's Lady" another of the specials announced for the 1923-24 season will follow "Cameo Kirby" in one week.

Few stage plays achieved a record on the road such as "Cameo Kirby." The story centers about a picturesque Mississippi River gambler of a former generation, who shoots straight and deals squarely, eventually winning when hearts are trumps.

John Gilbert will be seen in the role of the swanking, cynical soldier-of-fortune type of gambler. Gertrude Olmsted will have the feminine lead. "Cameo Kirby" is a John Ford production.

Precedent Broken at Metropolitan Theatre

Thomas H. Ince has been paid a remarkable tribute by Sid Grauman, of Los Angeles, by the booking of Ince's "Her Reputation," a big newspaper drama, for Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre. This is the first "outside" picture ever shown at the Metropolitan, which heretofore has run only Paramount-Lasky offerings. "Her Reputation" stars May McAvoy, with an all-star supporting cast headed by Lloyd Hughes.

Newspaper critics throughout the country have given praise to the picture. "The events in 'Her Reputation' are set forth convincingly and the fine acting, especially that of May McAvoy, gives the play an atmosphere of realism rare in such an exciting feature.

The Portland Oregonian says: "The flood and fire scenes in 'Her Reputation' are convincing and marked with a genuineness in their enactment seldom attained in similar screen efforts."

"Angel Face Molly," a Dramatic Picture

Viola Dana, Metro star, is now at work on her fourth Metro starring picture of the new Metro season, "Angel Face Molly" This is an original story for the screen by Fred Kennedy Myton adapted by Thomas J. Hopkins and being produced at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Ocar Apfel who also directed Miss Dana in her two previous pictures, "The Social Code" and "In Search of a Thrill."

"Angel Face Molly" is a dramatic story.

In the cast with Miss Dana, is Milton Sills. This marks his second appearance opposite the Metro star, his earlier being several years ago in the Metro pictures, "Dangerous to Men." Other players in the cast are Gertrude Claire, Wallace MacDonald, Betram Grassby, DeWitt Jennings, Nelson McDowell, Matthew Betts and Edward Wade.

Palmer Audience Now 35,000,000

A ready-made audience of over 35,000,000 people! Over 35,000,000 hearts have beaten a little quicker; over 35,000,000 imaginations have been stirred a little deeper through the vast advance advertising campaign now being carried on by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation in no less than twenty-five of the most popular national magazines; a campaign making a home and heart appeal to 20,062,079 people, by telling them how Mrs. Ethel Middleton, wife of a factory foreman, wrote the prize scenario of their first production, "Judgment of the Storm."

The campaign was not and is not being limited to small ads in a few issues, but consists of full pages in twenty-five magazines; and this advertising has been going on consistently, month after month, since September, 1922, hammering home the message to 20,062,079 fans.

The names of these magazines alone tell their own story of the magnitude of this campaign: McCall's, Red Book, American, Pictorial Review, Cosmopolitan, Picture Play, Better Pictures, Writers Monthly, Motion Picture, True Story, Metropolitan, Film Fun, Photoplay, The Writer, The Student Writer, Good Housekeeping, Screenland, Drama, Story World, Editor, Independent, Physical Culture, Nautilus, Writers Digest and the Dial.

"The Mailman" Given Two World Premieres

The Film Booking Offices made a new departure in the way of picture previews last week when a double header premiere was run in Washington and Philadelphia at the same time on Emory Johnson's picture, "The Mailman."

The Washington preview was held at the Ambassador Theatre on Thursday morning and was attended by prominent Washington society people and members of foreign legations. In addition to this a private showing was made at the general post office before Post Master General Harry New and his staff of assistant post masters.

On reviewing the picture Post Master New expressed himself very pleased with the results obtained by Johnson in the making of the postal picture. His assistants were also very enthusiastic in their praise of the production and of the dramatic way it was handled.

At Philadelphia the trade premiere was held at Ed Fay's Knickerbocker Theatre and was attended by twenty-nine hundred people with eight hundred of them standing through the performance.

Tully to Picturize "Bird of Paradise"

When the picturization of Rex Beach's "Flowing Gold" is completed, Richard Walton Tully, producing for Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will bring to the screen the world famous "Bird of Paradise," his Hawaiian love drama which as a stage play has enjoyed a coast-to-coast success seldom equalled in the history of American dramatics.

Tully plans to start the filming of "The Bird," as the play is known in dramatic circles, about the first of the new year. The picture will be made in the Hawaiian Islands. The story of the play is laid in the period 1890 and Tully, in bringing this South Sea epic to the screen, will also be producing a picture of historic and educational interest inasmuch as all the quaint customs and traditions which once prevailed will be picturized.

Civic Bodies Endorse "Blow Your Own Horn"

Basing the campaign on the spirit of civic progressiveness which underlies the activities of thousands of communities, F. B. O. is launching an aggressive and widespread exploitation drive for its production, "Blow Your Own Horn."

Among the prominent boards of commerce which have already endorsed the production is the Association of Commerce of Racine, Wis., the executive director of which is Francis H. Bartlett. Mr. Bartlett recently saw a special preview of the picture and immediately requested that it be shown to the public in Racine at the best theatre in town because of its lively spirit.

"'Blow Your Own Horn' will do more to uplift one's civic spirit than any other photoplay I have ever seen," remarked the executive after thoroughly analyzing the entertainment elements of the production. Hundreds of tie-ups are being effected by F. B. O. with chambers of commerce throughout the country.

Shipman Films Made in Natural Backgrounds

Israel Zangwill, noted writer and dramatist, who is visiting this country now, sounded the keynote of the Ernest Shipman policy of motion picture production in a recent New York address. "The great idea today," said Mr. Zangwill, "seems to be to film pictures in flashy settings, rather than with a strict adherence to any legitimate dramatic value the scenario might originally have possessed."

It has always been the Shipman aim to produce published novels as they were written in the nature backgrounds that may bring so much beauty to the screen. It has been with this in mind that Mr. Shipman produced such well known novels as those of James Oliver Curwood and Ralph Connor.

Mr. Shipman's three latest pictures, "The Man from Glengarry," "The Critical Age," and "The Rapids," which W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is distributing, are typical of these big, clean outdoor dramas.

Crowds in Baltimore See "The Hunchback"

Another brilliant opening was registered for "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" when the first Southern Company opened its tour at Baltimore on Monday, October 22. A feature of the program was the Symphony Orchestra under the direction of M. Rollman, one of Baltimore's leading musicians. Newspapers in their flattering reviews of the Universal production stressed the fact that the orchestra excelled any ever heard with any production that had ever visited that city. Mention was also made of the elaborate staging and Universal was thanked for bringing the production to that city for a pre-release showing.

It is interesting to note that two of the biggest musical comedy successes in the country opened on the same night and in spite of the fact that "The Hunchback" prices were much less than those charged in the other two theatres, the gross receipts at the Academy of Music exceeded both houses.

Mussolini Given Print of "The Eternal City"

George Fitzmaurice, who is associated with Samuel Goldwyn in the production of Sir Hall Caine's "The Eternal City," which is for First National distribution, sent a copy this week of the finished picture to Premier Mussolini at Rome, Italy, in payment of a promise he made the heads of the Italian government after he had completed three months' work in Rome.

Mussolini had been extremely helpful to Fitzmaurice and his company during their work in the Roman city. Permission was obtained to use, as locations, such places as the Coliseum, the Forum, the Roman Baths, Old and New Appian Way. Battalions of soldiers were delegated to both work in the picture and guard the players from interference. And Mussolini actually played a small role in the production.

The entire story has been changed by Ouida Bergere with the consent of Sir A. Hall Caine so that every element of religion has been eliminated.

Arliss to Make Film in London

George Arliss will work in films during his playing of "The Green Goddess" on the London stage. The final shots of his next picture, "The Adopted Father," will be made in England by Distinctive Pictures Corporation owing to the fact that the success of the William Archer melodrama will keep Mr. Arliss abroad longer than had been expected. He had almost finished work in this American screen comedy before sailing to keep his engagement at the St. James Theatre in London.

The cast supporting Mr. Arliss in "The Adopted Father" includes Edith Roberts, Ronald Colman, Taylor Holmes and Little Joseph Donohue. Harmon Weight, who has directed all the Arliss pictures except "The Green Goddess" was chosen by Distinctive to make this photoplay.

THE PEP OF THE PROGRAM

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

This Is Going to Be the Biggest Comedy Year in History of Screen

By AL CHRISTIE

This is going to be a big year for comedy, and the laughmakers will come into their own more than ever before in the history of the motion picture business.

The tide of long and boresome features has been turned and exhibitors everywhere have demanded in certain tones their desire for pure entertainment, whether it comes in large or small packages.

What will our part in this be?

Our entire organization has been concentrating these last few months on new ideas, new situations, new gags, building up a type of comedy for laughing purposes only, without detracting one particle from the standard we have set for quality production.

We are starting on our fourth year of distribution through Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., our eighth year as independent producers, and my own thirteenth year of directing behind a camera, and I want to say that I fully believe there is nothing unlucky about the latter number. It has always spelled good fortune before, and this should be our most successful period.

We are encouraged everywhere by exhibitors who believe in the two-reel comedy as a regular diet on all programs. The comedy has been likened to the funny page and the daily funny strip in the successful newspapers.

Publishers have long realized that the cartoon strip is the biggest single circulation builder in the paper. Likewise real motion picture exhibitors know that the building of a steady clientele is dependent to a large degree on the showing of comedies which put their patrons in good humor, which give them good fun for their money. They know that running a picture theatre without high-class comedy is like printing a newspaper which is all editorials and reading matter concerning the business, the crime, the grief and the strife of the world.

And there's enough grief in the world without going to a theatre to get more. The whole world loves a laugh, and the most successful theatre men are taking advantage of this universal demand by making the comedy part of their program one of the biggest advertising assets.

Two Two-Reelers and "Jamestown" on Pathe's List for November 4

Variety marks the Pathe schedule for November 4 which includes an unusually large number of subjects. Heading this program is "Jamestown," the second of the "Chronicles of America" series. Like the first "Columbus" it is in four reels.

Ruth Roland's serial, "Ruth of the Range," reaches its fourth episode which is titled "The Terror Trail." The third of the "Spat Family" series is titled "Roughing It" and shows the discordant family out West staking a mining claim and meeting with many ludicrous mishaps.

On this schedule is also a Mack Sennett two-reeler "One Cylinder Love." Built around a story of a broken engagement are aeroplane thrills and clever acting. Stan Laurel is featured in "The Whole Truth," a single reel Hal Roach comedy, presenting an amusing version of the recent scientific discovery of a serum which is an antidote against lying and makes the patient tell the truth.

The Aesop Film Fable, Cartoonist Paul Terry's laughable creation, is titled "A Barnyard Rodeo," and shows the familiar animals in a typical Western rodeo. Pathe Review No. 44 contains the following subjects: "The Pleasure Boat," a pictorial interpretation of Richard Henry Dana's poem; striking views of Durango, Mexico, under the caption "The City of Sorrows," and a Pathecolor presentation of a day in Volemdam, Holland, under the title "Dutch Doings." In addition there is an industrial section that will interest the majority of spectators.

"Jamestown" deals with the early struggles of the Colonists and introduces the colorful chapter of American history dealing with the Indian Princess Pocahontas and the English Colonist John Rolfe; also the struggle between the English and Spanish Colonists for supremacy.

Amusement and Knowledge Provided in Tolhurst's Pictures for Educational

Educational Exchanges, Inc., are of the opinion that the distribution of the series of Tolhurst microscopic pictures produced by Principal Pictures Corporation, of which Sol Lesser is president, marks a forward and significant step in the development of the screen, that of providing entertainment and instruction in a manner that will be as welcome to the public as the works of Maeterlinck and Fabre on insects have been to the world of literature.

"Once the public accepts scientific demonstrations on the screen the general education of humanity may fairly be said to have begun," says Louis H. Tolhurst, the California scientist who perfected the process by which these pictures are taken. "The exhibitor has learned that the public is not over-zealous to increase its stock of knowledge, but is very eager to be amused. Accordingly, in attempting to present the intimate lives of familiar insects I have sought to keep this element of entertainment uppermost. I believe no scientist or educator familiar with Maeterlinck's "The Life of the Bee," or better still Fabre's charming books, will quarrel with me or my methods when I say that without a doubt more people have learned of the habits of the bee from these romantic works than through scientific text-books.

Maeterlinck has brought the subject well within the scope of "human interest." Fabre has done even more with his careful and scientific "stories" of insects. To achieve in pictures what these celebrities have done with their literary style, is my ambition. Properly titled, the lives of insects are capable of an infinite variety of treatment. Tragedy, comedy, epic struggle, satire, humor and sensational action can be found, while the social relations of "colonies" are so complex and interesting as to supply a never failing field of investigation and exploitation.

Century Working on "Buster Brown"

Julius Stern, who some time ago acquired the film rights to R. F. Outcault's celebrated Buster Brown cartoon strip, announces that the story for the first of this series which will be filmed as Century Comedies, is now nearing completion and numerous players are being considered in order to select a suitable Buster Brown and Mary Jane and a perfect Tige for their respective roles. The number of comedies to be made has not yet been decided. Competent gag men are busy on the material and the name of the director will be announced soon.

Century Announces Fifth Unit

Noel Smith, formerly with Century and then with Fox, has returned to Century Comedies and will direct a series of two-reelers. Work on the first one featuring Harry Sweet, who was also formerly a Century star and then went to Fox, will be started within a few days as Sweet is again in the Century fold.

Smith makes the fifth director to head a unit making Century Comedies, the others being Al Herman, Bob Kerr, Harry McCoy and Arvid Gillstrom. All units are working under the supervision of Julius Stern and Sig Neufeld. Casts of well-known comedians have been selected for all of these units.

Books Semon Film

The Modern and Beacon theatres in Boston booked "The Gown Shop," the first Larry Semon comedy for the season of 1923-24. There are to be four Larry Semon comedies released by Vitagraph which include "The Gown Shop," "Lightning Love," "Horseshoes" and one for which a title has not yet been selected.

"Peggy" Bookings

Heavy bookings continue to pour in on the Baby Peggy series of Century Comedies. Among the most recent are the Missouri in St. Louis, Majestic in Columbus, Strand in Wichita Falls, Broadway in Richmond, Rialto in Butte, Liberty in Spokane and California in San Pedro.

Signs for Series

Pathe announces that the Strand theatres in New York and Brooklyn have booked the entire series of "Spat Family" and "Our Gang" two-reel comedies.

New Burr Comedy

"Fearless Flanagan," the C. C. Burr two-reel comedy released October 7, features Charles Murray, Kathlyn Martin and Raymond McKee. It was directed by Gregory LaCava, and is being distributed by Hodkinson.

Pal Film Retitled

The title of the newest Century comedy, starring Pal the dog, has again been changed and it will be known as "Down to the Ship to See," which it is announced was suggested by a Long Island exhibitor.

"Three Cheers"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

An abundance of amusing stunts makes this second number of Jack White's Juvenile Comedy series a good program subject. It has less plot than the first one of the series and is more like an unrelated arrangement of childish pranks, but goes over nevertheless and in places is very funny. The children are all interesting types and anyone should enjoy their performance.—M. K.

"Fashion Follies"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

New ideas are not plentiful in this Century comedy but most of it is the type of amusement that goes very well anyway. The bathing girls will appeal and the fashion show gives a chance for the familiar but laughable stunts of confusing the live models with the dolls. It has an abundance of action and should entertain, generally. Henry Murdock is featured.—M. K.

"The Code of the Mounted"

Universal—Western—Two Reels)

This is so evidently a reissue of something produced some time ago that it is doubtful whether it will be a success on the average program now. The clothes, photography and general style of acting dates back to early days in picture-making. It relates the story of a Mounted Police officer who has to make the familiar choice between love and duty.—M. K.

"A Barnyard Romeo"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

Paul Terry's clever touches enliven the well-known Western stunts of lassooing, steer taming and rough riding here. The humor is delightful as usual and the subject itself is more widely appealing than some of the other Aesop Fables. A well worth-while number.—M. K.

"Discontent"

(Educational—Scenic—One Reel)

Considerably more emphasis is placed upon the dramatic note this time than in the usual Bruce Wilderness Tale. While there is no real attempt at acting, the story is sympathetic and there is a simplicity and humanness about the types. The husband who finds complete happiness in his work in the open and the wife who longs for the city and ultimately deserts her husband are the figures in an emotional conflict against pictorial backgrounds.—M. K.

"Be My Guest"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

A situation that will be rather generally appreciated is the basis for action in this Neely Edwards number. A man who prefers starvation to restaurant fare accepts dinner invitations from three friends but finds the resulting disaster far worse than dinner at a hot-dog lunch counter. This will amuse the average patron.—M. K.

"The Whole Truth"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

Revealing to what interesting heights man's imagination will soar when accounting for his absences to his wife, this Stan Laurel number has good comedy value. In spite of sampling the serum that forces a man to tell the truth, the hero thinks up a good story to tell in court. It is lively and entertaining.—M. K.

"Fighting Blood"

(F. B. O.—Drama—Two Reels)

Round Five of this series, "The Taming of the Shrewd," and Round Six, "The Wages of Cinema," compare favorably with the earlier numbers, and maintain the high standard of entertainment and box-office value. Each one contains strong human interest, good comedy and a peppy fight in the ring. George O'Hara is excellent in the leading role, and is ably assisted by Mary Beth Milford and Louise Lorraine, as well as the old favorites, Kit Guard and Al Cooke.

"The Taming of the Shrewd"

There is a lot of good comedy in this number, which first shows Gale trying to take care of a waif that is wished on him. Later he jumps into the water, thinking to rescue his friend Rosemary, who is working in a picture, but finds he has saved a property boy, who doubled for her and jumped off the cliff. He succeeds in winning a fight in the ring against "The Shrewd."

"The Wages of Cinema"

This is a clever number, containing a lot of good audience material. Gale, unable to get Kilpatrick to sign up for a fight with him, gets a job in the movies; and, disguised as an actor, with the assistance of the director and two girls, Kilpatrick is persuaded to don the gloves. Gale licks him, reveals his identity, and is promised a real fight in the ring for the championship with Kilpatrick.—C. S. S.

"Roughing It"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Western life disagrees painfully wtih the Spat Family in this third picture of the series. Their quarrels are staged on the desert where everything from toads disturbing midnight slumbers to a hair-breadth escape from "bandits" who prove to be only prospective buyers, offering a vast fortune for the Spat Family's property, keep them excited. It has a good many laughs and should go well.—M. K.

Pathe Review No. 44

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Greater emphasis is placed upon the pictorial value in this review which has many pleasing scenes. An illustration of Richard Henry Dana's poem, "The Pleasure Boat," views of Durango, Mexico, called the "City of Sorrow," and a color presentation of Dutch village scenes are included. Facts about coloring wall paper supply the technical interest.—M. K.

"One Cylinder Love"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

This is a mixture of entertainment that lacks unity somewhat, but amuses in an irregular way, with a few outstanding incidents that will probably meet with a hilarious reception. Bathing girls, amateur aeroplaning, and a trained bear furnish some lively action. It has an unusual amount of action and should be a satisfactory number for the average program. A Mack Sennett production.—M. K.

Hal Roach Companies Busy Making Comedies for Pathe

Production activities at the Hal Roach Studios, Culver City, Calif., are moving along at a fast clip.

The new Stan Laurel vehicle is a story of the "after the war" type with the comedy theme of "I got my captain working for me now!" In the cast appear Jimmy Finlayson, Ena Gregory, Mae Laurel, Eddie Baker, and William Gillespie. George Jeske is handling the megaphone.

The comedy just started by Will Rogers is a typical Rogers cowboy story written for the star by Hal Conklin. Jay Howe is directing the production. Marie Mosquini appears opposite Rogers.

Hal Roach's aggregation of animal players in the latest "Dippy Doo Dad," directed by Len Powers, are enacting a crook story.

The company of players engaged for "The Spat Family" has been augmented by the addition of Philip Miller, a well-known child actor.

Christie's Four Stars Will Each Be Seen in Five Films

Christie forces are now busily engaged in producing what is described as a "rip-snorting western comedy" which would seem to be a burlesque on ordinary "westerns." Bobby Vernon appears as Cactus Kelly. Then, too, there is Lopez the Lizard as the villain and Charlotte Stevens as the heroine.

This is but one of the twenty comedies scheduled by Christie for the coming season, five for each of their comedians, Bobby Vernon, Neal Burns, Jimmie Adams and Dorothy Devore. The first five to be released on the new schedule are "Navy Blue," starring Dorothy Devore; "This Is So Sudden," with Neal Burns; "Everything," with Bobby Vernon; "Done in Oil," with Jimmie Adams; "Fool Proof," with Neal Burns, and "A Perfect 36," with Bobby Vernon.

The supporting staff for the stellar comedians includes Jimmie Harrison, Vera Steadman, Charlotte Merriam, Babe London, Natalie Joyce, Tom Murray, Ward Caulfield, George French, Bob North, George Burton, Felix Valle, Bud Fine and Roy Weston.

Charles Christie has just returned from Europe, bringing with him John H. Taylor, managing director of Christie Film Sales Co., Ltd., of London, and John Maxwell, owner of a chain of theatres in Scotland.

"Snub" at Rivoli

The first of the new series of single reel Pathe comedies starring Snub Pollard titled "It's a Gift" was the comedy attraction at the Rivoli, New York, and it is announced that it enjoyed the distinction of being the only comedy attraction at any of the big houses on Broadway.

Other comedies in this series already announced are "Dear Ol' Pal" for November 11, and "Join the Circus" December 2. "It's a Gift" was released October 14.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Has Been Adopted

The following is the nomenclature adopted, to this date, by the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, insofar as has to do with projection:

Arc—A column of very hot, light-emitting gas, carrying an electric current sustaining this condition.

Back Focus—Distance from principal focus of a lens to its nearest face.

Working Distance—The distance between an object and the nearest face of a lens forming an image of an object.

Change-Over—In projection, the act of changing from one projector to another without interrupting the continuity of projection.

Condenser—The lens combination which deflects the diverging rays of the luminant into the projection lens.

Collector Lens—The lens of the condenser nearest the light source.

Converging Lens—The lens nearest the objective.

Center Lens—The lens of a three-lens combination, lying between the collecting and the converging lens.

Dissolve—The gradual transition of one scene into another.

Douser—The manually operated door in the projector which intercepts the light before it reaches the film.

Effective Aperture—The largest diameter of a lens available under the conditions considered.

Equivalent Focal Length—The equivalent focal length of a combination of lenses is equal to the focal length of a simple thin lens which will give an image of a distant object of the same size as does the combination lens.

Fade-In—The gradual appearance of a picture from darkness to full brilliancy.

Fade-Out—The gradual disappearance of the screen picture into blackness.

Feature—A pictured story a plurality of reels in length.

Film—The ribbon upon which the series of related picture elements are recorded.

Flash—A short scene, usually not more than three to five feet in length.

Flash-Back—A very short cut-back.

Focal Length—The distance from the center of a simple thin lens to the image formed by it of a distant object.

Footage—Film length measured in feet.

Frame—A single picture in the series on a motion picture film.

Frame Line—The dividing line between two frames.

Intermittent Sprocket—The sprocket which engages the film to give it intermittent movement at the picture aperture.

Iris—An adjustable lens diaphragm.

Insert—Any photographic subject, without action, in the film.

Lantern Slide (Stereo Slide)—A transparent picture for projection by a stereopticon.

Leader—A piece of blank film attached to the beginning of the picture series.

Lens, Simple—A lens consisting of but a single piece of glass, or other transparent medium.

Lens, Compound—The combination of a number of simple lenses.

Light Beam—A bundle of light rays which has a cross section of appreciable size.

Light Ray—A stream of light of inappreciable cross section.

Magazine Valve—The film opening in the magazine of a motion picture projector.

Motion Picture—The representation of an object by the rapid presentation to the eye of a series of pictures showing the object at successive intervals of time.

Motion Picture Projector—A device suitable for projecting motion pictures.

Multiple Reel—A photoplay more than a thousand feet in length.

Notice to All

PRESSURE on our columns is such that published replies to questions cannot be guaranteed under two or three weeks. If quick action is desired remit four cents, stamps, and we will send carbon copy of department reply as soon as written.

For special replies by mail on matter which, for any reason, cannot be replied to through our department remit one dollar.

Objective—The simple or compound lens nearest an object which forms an image of it. (Looks like an error there.—Ed.).

Optical Axis—The straight line through the centers of the light source, lenses, diaphragm, ect., of an optical system, to which their planes are in general perpendicular. (This seems to be wrong, as printed, since the projector arc crater (light source) usually is not perpendicular to the aforesaid line.—Ed.).

Photoplay—A story in motion pictures.

Projectionist—A person skilled in the art of projecting motion pictures.

Projection Distance—The distance between the projection lens and the surface upon which the image is focused.

Projection Lens—The objective which forms upon the screen an image of a lantern slide, film or other object under examination.

Reel—A flanged spool upon which film is wound.

Reel—An arbitrary unit of linear measure of film—approximately a thousand feet.

Register—To superimpose exactly.

Rewind—The process of reversing the winding of a film, usually so that the end first projected shall lie upon the outside of the roll.

Rewinder—The mechanism by means of which rewinding is accomplished.

Shutter—A moving element, usually a disc, which intercepts the light in a motion picture apparatus one or more times for each frame.

Shutter, Working Blade—That sector which intercepts the light during the movement of the film at the aperture.

Shutter, Intercepting Blade—That sector which intercepts the light one or more times while the film is stationary.

Splicing—Joining the ends of film by cementing.

Split Reel—A reel of film of two (or more) parts, the subject of each part unrelated to the subject of the other part.

Spot—The illuminated area on the aperture plate of motion picture apparatus.

Sprocket—The toothed cylinder which engages the perforation in the film.

Stereopticon—A lantern for projecting transparent pictures; i. e., lantern slides, often a double lantern for dissolving.

Take-Up (non)—The mechanism which receives and winds the film after it passes the picture aperture.

Take Up (verb)—To wind up the film after it passes the picture aperture in motion picture apparatus.

Throw—See Projection Distance.

Trailer—That piece of blank film attached to the end of a picture series.

The following proposed nomenclature is under consideration, but is not yet officially adopted:

Moving Period—That portion of the picture cycle during which the film at the aperture is in motion. This period is expressed in degrees of revolution of the flywheel when 360 degrees is equal to one cycle.

Observation Port—The opening in the front wall of the projection room through which the projectionist observes the screen.

Picture Cycle—The entire series of mechanical operations which takes place between the positioning of one frame of a motion picture film and the positioning of the next frame.

Projection Room—A room or inclosure from which motion pictures are projected. (This it is proposed to change to "Projector Room" and it would probably have gone through that way at Ottawa, but was laid over until the next meeting.).

Stationary Period—That portion of the picture cycle during which the film at the aperture is stationary. This period is expressed in degrees.

LENS CHART

By JOHN GRIFFITHS

Here is an accurate chart which belongs in every projection room where carbon arcs are used. It will enable you to get maximum screen results with the equipment you are using.

The news Lens Chart (size 15" x 20") is printed on heavy Ledger Stock paper, suitable for framing. It will be sent to you in a strong mailing tube, insuring proper protection.

Get this chart now and be all ready to reproduce with maximum screen results the splendid pictures which are coming this fall.

He Wants Help

C. D. MacGregor, Projectionist Princess Theatre, Chatham, Ontario, wants advice, as follows:

Received the new lens chart some time and find by checking over my present optical layout that it is all wrong. I therefore ask that you send me such suggestions as you will as to how to get the best possible results with present equipment; also any suggestions as to changes which would improve the optical lineup.

That you have some idea of conditions in general, here are a few of the important measurements: Distance of projection—lens to screen—96 feet 4 inches; picture size (approximately), 11x15 feet; distance screen to first row of seats, 15 feet; distance screen to last row of seats, 133 feet; width of auditorium, 23 feet; proscenium opening. 17

It is my earnest desire to project as nearly a perfect picture as may be upon the screen—not to be the barnyard mechanic who merely works for a set wage, to whom ability to "get by" and continue to draw that wage is the sum total of everything. Any suggestions regarding improvement will be gratefully received.

I suppose you need no introduction to our Chief Projectionist, Charles A. Dentlebeck, to whom I shall forward your reply when received. I have not yet met him, but from what I have read and heard of him he must be a roung peg in a round hole, which is all any of us may hope to be. In closing let me earnestly wish every future success for the World Projection Department.

No, I certainly do not need any introduction to Dentlebeck, whom I saw last week at the meeting of the S. M. P. E. in Toronto. He wanted friend daughter and me to drive to Toronto and visit the Dentlebeck wigwam, but time would not permit. He is all you think he is, but for two years past he has had a "boil" which caused the round peg, normally fitting the hole snugly, to fit "not so good." The boil is now, I am more than glad to say, removed, root and branch, so Charlie again is 100 per cent. Chief Projectionist for the Canadian Paramount—more power to him!

First of all the crater impressions were well made and show that you are carrying your crater at least at a fairly efficient angle. You should, unless you aready have done so, study "Crater Angle," pages 405 to 412, inclusive, of the Bluebook, and apply the information on page 408 so that you may always know that you have your crater exactly at the right angle. Possibly you have already done so. Inasmuch as all your crater impressions are about the same, it is quite likely you have.

Mirror Screen Efficient

In the first place, your auditorium is one in which a satin finish mirror screen would be enormously efficient, except for a few of the front side seats. With that screen the patrons seated in the rear seats would be able to see every detail of the picture and you could reduce your amperage by at least one-third and still have a far brighter picture than you now have. Mirror screens are costly, yes, but were that theatre mine I certainly would have one. Failing in that you should have a highly reflecting type of screen, and a Crystal Bead would give excellent results in such a theatre.

Your craters average 7-16 inch in horizontal diameter. You may tell both your manager and Dentlebeck that the projection lenses you have are totally and entirely unsuited to the work they are TRYING to do. It is worse than foolish to keep such lenses. They are enormously inefficient when used with the ordinary condenser.

horizontal diameter and, looking in the 6½-

Your craters are 36-64ths of an inch in 6½ column, we find that in order to get the minimum distance from crater to lens for this amperage we would have to have a distance of 11 inches from face of converging lens to aperture, under which condition chart B shows us that even a 2⅝-inch free diameter would not pick up all the beam. That, therefore, is "out"—impossible.

Turning Around

Turning the thing around we find that your lens would not pick up all the beam even with the face of the converging lens 21 inches from the aperture. The thing is so atrociously bad that I hesitate to suggest any compromise. The only right thing to do is to throw your present optical system into the discard, though it is possible you might use a Cinephor condenser with your present projection lenses.

I have submitted your case to Griffith and he says: "Cinephor condensers would be very good in this case. Working distance 4—2=2 inches; Y distance 13—2=11 inches. Use 6½ plano convex collector and a Parabolic converging lens (Cinephor consists of a plano convex and a Parabolic lens.—Ed.). Crater distance will be approximately 3⅛ inches and the spot 3-64ths of an inch greater in diameter than for ordinary condenser, because the crater is 1-64th of an inch greater than chart size.

You thus see that in this case Cinephor makes a bad condition good."

Correct! Before I had consulted Griffith I had forgotten the fact that Cinephor in effect reduces the projection lens working distance. Griffith is a wizard at doping out these things, which is the natural result of concentrating on just one thing for a long while.

From Toronto

From Harry T. Dodson, Toronto, Ontario, comes the following:

First and foremost, here is one perfectly good dollar, for which send me a copy of the new lens chart; also accept my support, though darned late, for the adoption of the name "Projection Room" as against the proposed "Projector Room."

You express surprise at the laxness of the various locals in not indorsing the name "Projection Room" as a body. Well, Brother Richardson, I am not! I think that after a local has been formed and has run along smoothly for a certain time, it gets to feeling that WE are about the best there is, or ever was. OUR conditions and OUR results are equal to all the others—and better than most of them, and you can't stir up pride, ambition or much of anything else in them. They just slide along year after year, with an increasing scale each year, giving exactly the same old results for the increased money. This does not apply to the entire membership of most locals, but to the great majority, and you very well know it does.

The discouraging thing is that the few men who do study and try to give maximum results at minimum cost to the exhibitor don't get any more pay than the slide-along dub. He does not even get any credit for his hard work and endeavor. Friend Manager says: "If you're not satisfied with the scale I can get plenty who are," and that's that!

Who Gets the Credit?

There may be two theatres running within a block of each other. One does a good business and the other a poor one. The first has A1 projection, in all that entails. The other has a punk screen result. WHO GETS THE CREDIT IN THE PAYING HOUSE??? The projectionist? Ye gods, no!! It is the popular manager, the won-der-ful orchestra and the be-yu-ti-ful house! That is the whole story, and the man who puts on what the people really pay to see at 100 per cent. value gets—well, maybe a little credit, but not much.

I know your answer, Rich. It is "classify the men"—but it can't be did, because the majority vote counts and the great majority is class Z, so it is promptly voted down.

I'm going to write every time I see anything in the department you want a discussion on. Maybe it will at least induce some one else to write, if only to show me what a sap I am, and how darned little I know, and we will thus learn something anyhow. By the way, can you tell me who used that little green handbook of yours—the vest pocket one? I remember getting one from the Laemmle Film Exchange, in Winnipeg, in 1907, I think it was. Everyone I met said the N. Power Company was the only one who put them out.

Everyone Wrong

Then everyone was wrong. They were put out by about every film exchange and projector manufacturer in existence at that time. I sold 80,000 of them, as I remember it, but not all had the green cover. As to the locals, what you say is exactly true, and it is a condition which demands drastic treatment, because it is a condition which works injury to the industry itself. To date, though, every one but my 'umble self seems afraid to tackle it. I would not feel so keenly about it did it not result, in practice, in keeping many competent, high-class men out of the union, hence out of work, until the union DUBS (oh yes, there is such a thing alright, and he is a numerous species, too), as well as the competent union men, are all at work.

I have neither liking nor respect for the DUB, union or otherwise. By "Dub" I mean the incompetent, shiftless or lazy man, who will not deliver the best there is in him, and make every possible effort to improve.

I came very near visiting Toronto October 6, on my way back home from the S. M. P. E. meeting. Daughter and I talked it over and concluded the path was too long and the time too short. It meant about four hundred miles added driving. Glad to hear from you any time, brother Dobson.

Backs Us Up

Local Union No. 433, I. A., Rock Island and Moline, Ill., through its Educational Department, writes as follows:

Dear Sir and Brother: This is to advise you that Local 433 is behind you in your endeavor to advance the PROJECTIONIST (capitals by the writer of the letter) to his proper position in the industry.

Now that the summer is over, the school has started again, and the boys will have something to argue about after the show. This semester we are equipping the school with projection apparatus, and will put into actual practice that which we learn at the time we learn it, thus avoiding a whole raft of blackboard work and a (deleted) of a lot of examinations—maybe.

You may say: why can't each man put into practice that which he learns from the Blue book on his own equipment? Probably he can, but we believe that when we all get together and work together, the results will be more satisfactory; also by swapping ideas I think more will be learned than by one man studying a book alone. No matter how well the book may explain a thing there is always the chance of getting the wrong slant, but when several are together, studying the same thing, with the actual equipment before them, it is a combination hard to beat.

Probably it will interest you to know that this local will order the new lens chart for each of its members, every one of whom owns a Bluebook already. Attached find our action on the Projection Room matter.

The letter, which is on the stationary of and under the seal of local union 433, I. A., reads:

Dear Sir and Brother: This is to certify that this organization endorses the term "PROJECTION ROOM" as the correct term to be used, and condemns the use of "Booth" or any other term than "Projection Room" to designate the enclosure housing motion picture projectors and other equipment used in a theatre showing motion pictures.

If agreeable, please place this communication before the Society of Motion Picture Engineers.

SEAL K. T. SIMPSON, Secretary.

It is indeed good to know that at least one educational department of a local union has been able to withstand the test of time, and is still doing business after an extended period of existence. I thoroughly agree that much more can be learned, and learned much better, by a group of men studying together than is possible by an individual studying alone. The equipment will help, too, if used intelligently.

As to your endorsement of the term "Projection Room," it will be placed before the S. M. P. E. at its next meeting.

Warning

When endorsing the name projection room, always make a separate letter of it. DON'T stick your endorsement in the body of a letter dealing with other matters.

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

The Independent Generating Plant For Motion Picture Theatre Service

IN a recent issue, we made some observation regarding the value of independent lighting plants as an item of motion picture theatre equipment. We also rashly offered to advise our readers regarding suitable plants for their individual requirements if they would advise us just what these requirements were:

We use the word "rashly" advisedly, because many of those who wrote us for information either skipped entirely the requests for requirement data or had failed to acquire any knowledge regarding same.

As a sample of what we were up against, here are two communications on the subject which were received in the same mail:

Enclosed we are sending you a self-addressed stamped envolope for information regarding a theatre lighting plant. We are interested in a plant of 4-5 KW capacity, direct connected, no batteries, 110 volts, and if possible one that can be operated on kerosene. Gas is so expensive down this part of the world, now forty cents per gallon—at one time as high as fifty cents per gallon.

Read your article in the September 15 issue of the World about the installation of the independent lighting plants. We would like to get full information in regard to theatre lighting plants.

The first was from the manager of a small house who knew just exactly what he wanted and we were able to supply him at once with the information requested.

Letter number two was from the managing director of a big theatrical chain and it required correspondence on our part to extract the information that the projection requirements alone called practically for a 10 KW outfit.

Data Was Vague

While the interest manifested was greater than we had anticipated, the information which the average exhibitor seemed to have on tap regarding his requirements was so vague that, being of a restful disposition and somewhat averse to unnecessary exertion and duplication of labor, we are going to make a few general remarks regarding the independent lighting plant as a means of saving future unnecessary correspondence, on the same principle as employed by the pious but time-saving farmer who said grace over the entire barrel of pork instead of over the individual meals at which it was afterward served.

To Which Class Do You Belong?

There are several reasons why an exhibitor may require an independent, or as technically termed, an isolated lighting plant.

He may be in a section, such as recently developed oil fields, where current is unobtainable.

He may be in a territory where the current supply is poor or unreliable, subjecting him to taking a chance on a dark screen and a gloomy house just when he needs the illumination most; so that he is willing, even should his current be more expensive in actual dollars and cents, to install his own lighting plant and be absolutely independent.

He may, for good and sufficient reasons, wish to feel absolutely secure from interruption of his show, even though his electric service be normally good, and, in this latter case, the requirements may be divided into two general classes—a plant sufficient to take care of his projection and a moderate amount of interior lighting, or a plant of sufficient capacity to carry on and provide the full current requirements of his house, such as projection, interior lighting, the power for fans and ventilating apparatus and the exterior lighting and signs.

Outfit Depends Upon Requirements

Now, the outfit to be selected depends upon into just which one of these classes each individual exhibitor, contemplating the installation of an independent lighting plant may fall.

For the house which intends to manufacture its own current absolutely independent of outside sources of supply, apparatus generating a voltage of less than 110 is quite practical, particularly if Mazda or mirror lamp projection be used.

Even with the ordinary low intensity arc projection, 60 volts will give admirable service, and, as this lower voltage is to be used continuously, all motors and lighting appliances adapted to the lower voltage may be installed.

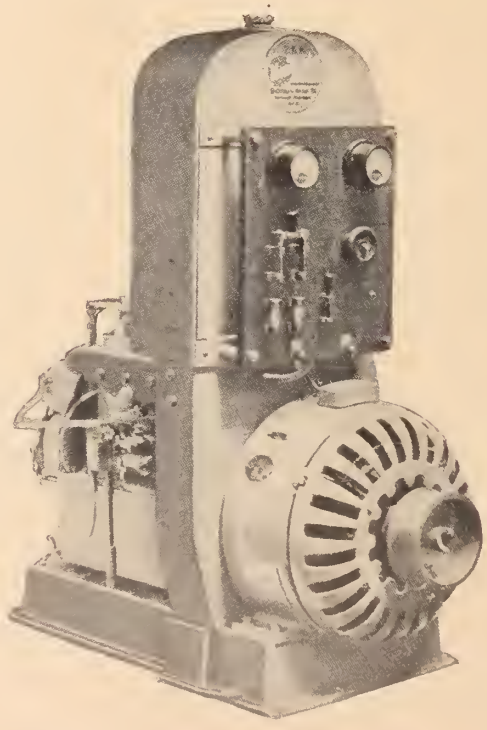

ILLUSTRATION ONE

A compact 2 kw. independent generating plant particularly adapted for service in connection with Mazda or mirror reflecting arc projectors

On the other hand, if the independent generating plant is to be utilized as a substitute during a breakdown of service from the local electrical company, a plant generating current of the same voltage as that of the public service company is more desirable, as it eliminates the necessity for duplication of lighting fixtures and additional transformers.

Determining Wattage Capacity Required

In determining the wattage capacity required of the plant, the factors to be considered are whether the plant in question is, in case of emergency, to take care of the entire requirements of the house, in the way of projection, interior, exterior and sign lighting, and also the operation of fans and the ventilating system; or whether what is desired is an outfit which will simply keep the screen from going dark and keep the exits and a few other necessary interior lights illuminated.

If the former, an outfit of moderate wattage capacity will fill the bill. If the latter, increased capacity may be provided by either one of two methods.

The generating plant may either be of sufficient capacity to care for the maximum requirements of the house at peak, or a plant of more moderate capacity may be utilized in connection with a series of storage batteries, which may be called upon to take care of the lighting requirements for a moderate length of time.

The objection to the latter method lies in the fact that storage batteries, except when actually in use, tend to deteriorate and they are generally a source of anxiety to all but those skilled in their management.

If a battery system be utilized in connection with the generating plant, it should be kept charged. The best method of doing this is, at stated intervals, to cut out the current from the public service station and run the show on the independent generating set, in which the storage batteries are, what is technically termed, floated on the line. And, after the show is over, continue the operation of the generating lighting plant until the batteries are again fully charged.

With a generating plant of sufficient capacity to take care of one's requirements without a storage battery attachment, no such method of procedure is necessary, and the plant may remain idle, except for a turning over test once in a while, until the actual necessity for its use arises.

When the cost of a storage battery equipment is considered and the amount of care that it must be given, it will be found, in the majority of cases, that it is true economy to install a generating plant, the output of which is sufficient to care for the requirements of the house.

As an illustration of plants suitable for the various requirements of the exhibitor, we show a few interesting, typical examples.

Number one has a generating capacity of 2 KW and is particularly suitable for houses in which Mazda or mirror lamps are used for projection. It furnishes sufficient current to carry projection lamp, electric fans and also a moderate number of lights, both interior and exterior.

The plant consists of a 4 cylinder, 4 cycle engine, 2 inch bore and 3 inch stroke, operating on either gasoline or kerosene fuel and direct connected to a 2 KW shunt wound generator.

The motor runs at a normal speed of 1,250 revolutions per minute. Ignition of the motor is by high tension magneto and starting is automatic by pushing a starting button, although it may also be turned by hand.

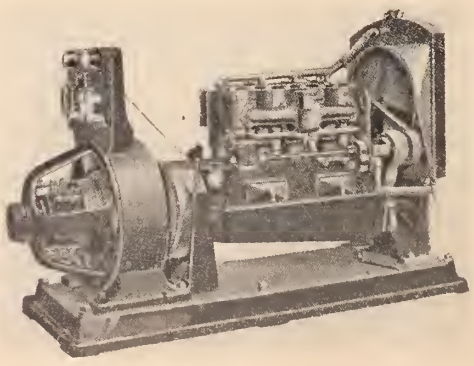

ILLUSTRATION THREE

Generating set built in three capacities, 10, 15 and 25 KW. Such a plant would care for the requirements of the larger types of theatres.

The dimensions of the power plant are 38 inches in length, 38 inches high and 16 inches wide, and it weighs approximately five hundred pounds.

The generator may be utilized either with or without storage batteries. As it is provided with a sensitive governor and a specially wound generator, it produces a straight flow of direct current with practically no variations in voltage.

Storage batteries to be utilized in connection with the outfit, if desired, can be supplied in capacities of sixty, eighty, one hundred, one hundred and twenty, one hundred and sixty or one hundred and eighty amperes, as desired.

As will be noted in the illustration, the switchboard, on which are mounted a combined voltmeter, battery indicator, ammeter, main line switch, a battery switch, a battery testing switch, battery fuse, line fuse and an automatic reverse current cut-out with starting and stopping button, is mounted on the radiator.

This outfit is extremely portable, as it is entirely self-contained and carries a fuel tank located in the base.

Illustration number two shows a generating set of 4 KW capacity. This set consists of a four cylinder, four cycle motor, two and five-eighths inches bore and a four inch stroke, operating on either kerosene or gasoline, as may be desired, and which, like number one, is entirely self contained, the radiator being mounted over the generator and the gasoline tank over the forward end of the motor.

The overall dimensions are twenty by forty-six inches long and forty inches high. It weighs five hundred and ninety pounds.

Ignition is either by high tension magneto or battery as the purchaser may desire. The motor is directly connected to a

It is admitted by all authorities that the carbon arc operating on a properly controlled source of direct current will produce by far the best results on the screen on account of the quality of its light, the evenly illuminated screen, no trouble from a reflected image and the abundance of the light, permitting projection of a brilliant picture even in a theatre otherwise well illuminated.

With the use of the Transverter the above results are reinforced by simplicity of operation and economy in power cost, that makes such an installation ideal.

multiple pole type generator, which is compound wound, unless otherwise ordered, and generates current of 60, 110 or 140 volts, as may be desired.

The armature is mounted on an extended crank shaft and takes the place of a flywheel.

This outfit may be supplied with an electrical starter, but is easily cranked by hand.

Where storage batteries are used in connection with the outfit, the motor can be started on same by means of a push button.

On the switchboard are mounted a pilot lamp, voltmeter, ammeter, rheostat, main switch and fuse switch. For battery charging, an automatic cut-out is supplied, which automatically opens the circuit should the engine slow down or stop.

Illustration number three shows a generating set built in three different capacities—10, 15 or 25 K. W. The 10 and 15 K. W. plants consist of a four cylinder, four cycle motor, four and one-quarter inches bore by six inches stroke, direct connected to a multiple pole type generator.

The dimensions of the 10 K. W. plant are twenty-two inches long, eighty-one inches wide and fifty-three inches high. The dimensions of the 15 K. W. are identical, with the exception of being eighty-four inches in length. The 10 K. W. plant weighs 2,650 pounds and the 15 K. W. 3,990 pounds.

The 25 K. W. plant has also a four cylinder, four cycle motor, with a four and one-quarter inch bore and a stroke of six inches. The dimensions are thirty-eight inches in length, thirty-nine inches in width and sixty inches in height. It weghts 5,030 pounds.

Number three will supply current at 32, 110 or 130 volts. Its motor may be run with gasoline or kerosene fuel.

Tucker and Davis Contribute to the Discussion on Theatre Improvement

WHILE commenting, last week, on Arthur Hancock's suggestions regarding the betterment of an existing house, we suggested that other exhibitors give voice to their own views on the subject.

We are in receipt of the following communications from Henry Tucker, Tucker Theatre, Liberal, Kansas and L. O. Davis of the Virginia Amusement Co. operating the Virginia and Perry Theatres of Hazard, Kentucky and the Family Theatre of Combs, Kentucky.

This is a live subject and we would be mighty glad to have other readers chip in with their suggestions.

Moving Picture World:—Our theatre is fifty by one hundred and thirty, designed by Carl Boller & Brother, Kansas City, Mo. Seating capacity, 961; lobby in center, twelve by sixteen; box office at side of lobby; has two stores, sixteen by sixteen, one on each side of lobby for rent; front is two stories, having four office rooms over lobby and stores. Balcony seats 251, with 705 on main floor. Stage twenty-four by fifty with loft fifty feet. Heated by fan circulator, which also acts as ventilating system in winter. Cooled by twin Typhoon in summer.

Now as to changes: For small towns under ten thousand would eliminate loft, but would equip stage for light vaudeville use. Our seats are in three sections, two sevens against walls, and one section of thirteen in center. This leaves only two aisles.

Would eliminate part of these seats so as to have at least four aisles. It is next to impossible to fill all seats with such large sections. Would place box office in center of lobby instead of side. Would make dressing rooms and furnace and coal rooms practically fireproof.

Would also urge anyone contemplating building in smaller towns to pay special attention to cooling system. If necessary cut out the fancy decorations and spend your money on blowers that will blow the inside of it out. A cool house in summer means more than a fancy interior.

HENRY TUCKER,
Tucker Theatre, Liberal, Kans.

Moving Picture World.

"In accordance with your request for description of features that I would incorporate in a house that I should build will say that there is one feature I have added to my house now that I find very good.

"Build the manager's office directly across from the projection room where it is possible that there can be a small window in the side of the wall near his desk chair that he can have a view of the screen and the picture at all times."

All that I have to do to see the picture while in my office at work is merely turn my head and if there is a bad light, misframe or the projection is not what it should be it is there for my inspection at the turn of my head the whole day through.

"By having ones office near the projection room and where one can obtain a view of the screen at all times it keeps one in closer touch with the projection end of the business which is the most important in the picture game as what you are selling are PICTURES."

Better Projection Inevitably Pays; See That Your Patrons Get It

By HERBERT GRIFFIN

General Sales Manager, Nicholas Power Co., Inc.

WE have used the phrase, "Better Projection Pays," to a considerable extent in our advertising and, of course, under such conditions we are referring to our own product, but on this occasion a more general meaning will be given to it.

I would like to have the entire motion picture industry adopt the phrase and then put it up to the manufacturers of equipment to prove which particular machine actually gives the best results under all conditions.

The larger theatres throughout the country are as a rule particular about the kind of projection they give their patrons and to this end employ good men, get the best equipment in the market, keep it in good shape and replace with new machines from time to time.

The large theatres watch expenses in the same way the smaller theatres do or at least do not usually indulge in needless expense, and it seems obvious that they must find it profitable to spend money from time to time to keep up the proper standard of projection.

Some small theatres, of course, are very particular about projection and may even set an example to the larger theatres, but in many, altogether too many, small theatres there is a woeful indifference to the advantages to be derived from improving projection.

"Getting By" Is Not Good Policy

A motion picture projector, of course, can be made to last for a good many years and show a picture which will get by in about the same manner that some old worn out, aged and decrepit automobiles "get you there and get you back." Such automobiles are frequently used as taxis and they get the business just so long as there is no competition.

When a new, up-to-date machine comes along the majority of people will use that taxi in preference to the old one. It is in just this way that some theatres seem to be getting all the business there is to be had, but what they are actually doing is inviting competition. Soon or late someone is going to see that the field presents an opportunity for a good house, and when this is built the old one goes out of business. The exhibitor who watches everything which relates to the proper showing of films to his patrons will not infrequently be in a position to make his theatre pay even though he gets pretty stiff competition from the big theatre.

Rah for Richardson

F. H. Richardson, in my opinion, has been responsible for raising the standard of projection and he is constantly emphasizing this idea in all sorts of places through the spoken word and in all sorts of publications by the written word.

In a recent number of the Moving Picture World he refers to a man who claims that he has been able to "pack his house" in spite of what seems to be outrageous conditions in his projection room. This man claims that he is getting the money with very inferior equipment and admittedly very poor projection.

From a business standpoint it would appear that this exhibitor is under no obligation to spend any money to improve conditions in his theatre, but Richardson points out that by the judicious expenditure of a little money this man might be able to pack his house at higher prices.

Apart from the fact that better projection in many instances can be made to show an immediate financial return to the exhibitor, I think that in the long run any business man should realize that it is a good policy to improve the quality of the goods he is selling whenever he can do so.

It is unreasonable to ask the exhibitor to spend money needlessly, but any fair-minded theatre owner who gives some attention to this matter will surely come to the conclusion that "Better Projection Pays."

Automatic Devices Co. Releases a New Model

The Automatic Devices Company, of Allentown, Pa., has just announced the release of a new improved A. D. C. automatic curtain control equipment based upon the result of long experience and exhaustive tests.

Long known as manufacturers of an automatic curtain control, embodying a most simple device for this purpose, the Automatic Devices Company has constantly striven to improve its product to conform with the requirements of modern exhibitors.

The new improved type of machine eliminates all belts and pulleys and is strengthened in all parts. An automatic disc clutch has been made a part of the machine as a safety feature for emergency purposes.

Should any condition arise which would impose an undue strain on any part of the machine, the clutch will immediately function, thereby protecting the entire equipment. Helical gears cut from special material are used and the entire machine is fully enclosed to conform with all underwriters, state and municipal requirements.

Outlets are provided on both sides of the machine to accommodate either flexible or rigid conduit through which the entrance wires are connected.

It is becoming more and more evident to theatre owners that a steady and even operation of screen and proscenium curtains controlled by push buttons in the orchestra pit or projection booth, makes a distinctly favorable impression on the audience and adds materially to the proper showing of pictures by allowing the curtains to be opened at exactly the proper time and speed and closed at exactly the right moment.

The How and Wherefore of the American Reflecting Arc Lamp

IN the American Reflecting Arc lamp, as manufactured by the American Reflecting Arc Corporation, of 24 Milk street, Boston, Mass., the lamp itself has been designed along lines that make it readily adaptable to American standards of design and operation. Its base and supporting bed are of cast iron. All working parts are of brass.

The reason for selection of brass is twofold; first because of the peculiar design of the lamp being such that most of the current carrying is done by the parts of the lamp itself, brass is one of the best metals procurable for this purpose. Secondly, because of the fact that all parts of the lamp are manufactured to a standard to permit interchange of parts, brass was again selected because it lent itself to accurate machining. Ample provision against wear has been taken into consideration so that the lamp should give years of perfect service.

Automatic Feed Control

Early in the development of this lamp, the American Reflecting Arc Corporation engineers realized the necessity for an automatic feeding device. This was doubly apparent because of the necessity for maintaining a perfect crater and unvarying arc length in order to realize to the full extent the possibility of maximum illumination with the minimum of current consumed.

The result is an arc control perfect in its operation on either alternating or direct current.

The arc control consists of two units—a driving mechanism consisting of a universal motor operating a train of reducing gears to the feed screw of the arc lamp and a regulating device.

It is in the regulating device of the arc control that this accuracy of performance is obtained. The functioning of this apparatus is secured through the utilization of both the ampere and voltage characteristics of the arc. This device is so designed that a perfect balance is maintained and a zero operating point established. Any departure from this zero point, which represents the arc gap, is transmitted to the driving unit and adjustments of the carbons mechanically by the driving unit is secured.

The perfect functioning of these two devices operating in synchronism with each other secures a perfect operation of the arc lamp and a resultant perfection of the projected image on the screen.

In the matter of accessories is included a specially designed Arc Lamp Housing to enclose the Arc Lamp and provide support for the arc control driving mechanism. A specially designed stereopticon housing attachable to the Arc Lamp Housing has also been developed. These are manufactured by the American Reflecting Arc Corporation.

The necessary regulating devices, rheostats and transformers, are manufactured for the American Reflecting Arc Corporation. The rheostats by the Ward Leonard Electric Company and the transformers by the American Transformer Company.

The mirror or reflector used in conjunction with the Arc Lamp is of special design and manufactured by the Bausch & Lomb Optical Company according to specifications of the American Reflecting Arc Corporation.

While the American Reflecting Arc Corporation is interested only in supplying the Arc Lamp and Arc Control mechanism as a unit with a lamp house supporting base by means of which the unit is adaptable to any standard projector and makes possible the using of the customer's present carbon arc lamp house, it can supply their special lamp houses and regulating devices to those who desire a completely assembled outfit.

Tony Gaudio Invents a Money Saving Substitute for Exterior Night Shots

A SAVINGS of hundreds of thousands of dollars a year by the elimination of night exterior filming has been made possible for the film industry as the result of a process perfected by Gaetano ("Tony") Gaudio, veteran screen cameraman.

Prediction that the new invention will revolutionize night filming was recently made by Producer Joseph M. Schenck, following a practical test. Gaudio, who is shooting Norma Talmadge's Joseph M. Schenck drama, "Dust of Desire," used his process during three days, in which night scenes of an Algerian village street were taken during the day.

The saving in electric equipment, current and wages of electricians for the three days, according to Schenck's production records, amounted to $25,000. Four thousand dollars was saved in the rental of extra equipment alone.

More than the monetary saving, the producer declared, is the superiority in results given by Gaudio's process. Artificial night lighting has never given entire satisfaction, says Schenck, who looks forward to the adoption of the invention by the entire industry. While the invention was perfected after only five weeks of experiment, it is based on Gaudios experience extending over twenty-four years of camera work. It can be applied to any camera, having few attachments. The working principle rests in the preparation of the raw film.

"My invention, I believe, is superior to the two former methods of filming night effects," said Gaudio. "There have been attempts to get night effects by tinting the positive of films taken during the day, but the tinting of the sky in positives has failed because the dissolving of the silver leaves a transparency to which cannot be applied, and the sky on the screen, consequently, shows up very light. The actual filming at night, on the other hand, is not satisfactory, because artificial illumination is not even throughout a set, and, to illuminate a deep set, costs much money.

"My process is designed to overcome these defects and to give a more natural effect, and to save money. The negative I used on 'Dust of Desire' was put through a special coloring solution. This gave silhouettes with both depth and contour, while previously figures registered as mere profiles.

Process Cuts Production Costs

"From the financial side it does away with electric power and equipment and the cost of keeping electricians in attendance. It may even be developed to a point where night interiors can be made under open stages."

According to John Considine, General Manager for Joseph M. Schenck, at whose suggestion Gaudio and Ray Binger, his assistant, began their money-saving experiments some time ago, the new process gives a black sky, a light foreground, a clearly defined sky line, perfect silhouettes and stereoscopic relief with high visibility, to figures both in close-ups and even until their disappearance on the sky line.

In addition, the shadows of figures walking in the moonlight are strongly outlined. For overcast day effects, snow storms, sand storms and any gradation of light from twilight to deep night the new process is ideal. Moonlight cloud effects are particularly beautiful.

When "Dust of Desire" was begun, Considine pointed out to Producer Schenck that about $5,000 a day would be necessary to shoot the night scenes of the Algerian drama. This sum would be required for electricians, electrical equipment, skids, generators, tractors, etc.

Great Expense Avoided

It was pointed out that only one set up could be made in a night and that no real long shots could be obtained unless all the electrical equipment in California were secured at tremendous expense.

Realizing that tinting the film would not do inasmuch as by this method the tinted sky shots would not match up with the scenes already made at night under artificial light. Producer Schenck called in Gaudio.

The latter, who had been working for many months to perfect his process, left Los Angeles for the desert with a few actors and tried out his new process. The results were so amazingly good that last week Gaudio announced that he was ready to stake his reputation on it.

The trip of more than 400 actors and technicians to Oxnard where the trial was made cost Producer Schenck a small fortune. There was some trepidation at taking a chance of losing from $30,000 to $40,000 in the event that Gaudio's new process failed but Producer Schenck gambled with his veteran cameraman—and both won out. When the film was developed and printed in Los Angeles the results created somewhat of a sensation.

Expansion of Plant and Growth of Business Forces Hallberg to Move

J. H. HALLBERG, for more than fifteen years a leading designer and manufacturer of electrical machinery and specialties for Motion Picture Projection and for studios has moved his manufacturing plant from 209 West Forty-eighth street to Corona, Long Island. Mr. Hallberg personally supervises the design and sales and all correspondence should be addressed to J. H. Hallberg 445 Riverside Drive, New York.

Besides this connection Mr. Hallberg still has his separate transformer and motor generator plants as in the past but all of the smaller specialties are manufactured in the above mentioned establishment.

Mr. Hallberg has assumed the experimental directorship of a new research laboratory now nearing completion at Alpine, New Jersey where research will be conducted in all branches of science and particularly in connection with the electronic and similar treatment and diagnosis of disease. On account of the wonderful laboratory facilities placed at Mr. Hallberg's disposal we expect that he will contribute new developments and apparatus to the motion picture art and he promises to disclose through our pages new inventions from time to time.

A Milestone of Progress

Mr. Hallberg has been exceptionally successful in producing very efficient motor generators, Economizers, Mazda lamp transformers, portable projectors, arc controllers, electric speed indicators, rheosats, gasoline electric light plants and kindred apparatus for the motion picture trade and his name stands as a milestone in the progress of the motion picture industry.

We referred in a recent issue, to an interview with Mr. Hallberg in which he disclosed to us a project for several modern motion picture theatres which were to be established in New York City more than twelve years ago and it is interesting to note that at that time his conception of what a modern motion picture theatre should be anticipated what is being done today and some of his ideas at that time are still in advance of the present age and we hope to have the pleasure in a later issue to give a complete outline with plans of the above referred to project as we believe that information will be of advantage to those who contemplate new theatres in the future.

In 1912 about the time that S. L. Rothapfel came to New York and formed connection with the Motion Photo Play Co., a subsidiary motion picture branch of the B. F. Keiths interest, Mr. Hallberg did much towards securing perfect projection and furnished many special and new devices as used at that time by Mr. Rothapfel.

There stands to Mr. Hallberg's redit many of the most important motion picture theatre equipment installations in this country and we feel sure that the trade will be glad to know that he is still with us and promises to produce new and useful devices to improve motion picture projection.

This marvelous combination heater and ventilator heats and gently distributes fresh, pure air in winter—supplies an abundance of cool, clean air in summer. Keeps your theater comfortable and healthful the year round.

Combined Heater and Ventilator—for Moving Picture Theaters

Many moving-picture theater owners who have thoroughly investigated heating and ventilating systems have unqualifiedly chosen Skinner Bros. Heaters. These heaters are so unusual in design and operation that their performance really astonishes everyone—they combine effective heating and ventilating in one unit.

From a box-office standpoint this means everything to you—when you install the Skinner Bros. Heater you keep your theater at a comfortable temperature and rid it once and for all of the stuffy, foul atmosphere that keeps so many patrons away.

No outside pipes or ducts are used in the Skinner Bros. System—no coils hanging on your walls—no fittings block your aisles—no smudge or dirt on your decorations—no fire hazard.

Performance of these heaters is guaranteed when installed as directed by our Engineers. Investigate—right now—send for Catalog B-8 and the names of moving-picture theater owners who have installed this heating system.

MERE reimbursement for dark house losses comes a long way from balancing the actual damage.

That's why hundreds of foresighted exhibitors are buying "dark house insurance" in the form of steady, dependable Universal lighting plants. Then, when the dreaded shutdown of power line current does come, a flick of the switch starts a smooth flow of even, flickerless light.

Four-cylinder power and ample 4 K. W. capacity—backed by 23 years of experience—account for the fact that more Universal Electric Plants are used by theatres, traveling shows and circuses than any other kind.

A Simplex Projector Is Included in the Equipment of U. S. S. Colorado

WITH the placing in commission of the U. S. S. Colorado at the Camden Yards of the New York Shipbuilding Corporation, there was added to the United States Navy one of the greatest fighting units yet developed in marine engineering.

Included in its electrical equipment is a Type "S" Motor Driven Simplex Projector installed just prior to the commission date. This Simplex equipment is of the regular commercial type and in the opinion of the engineers who decided upon the Simplex as part of the equipment in this remarkable ship, the commercial Simplex without any specially constructed devices cover all requirements, which is indeed a tribute to Simplex engineering.

Increase in Size of Equipment

It is said that the Colorado while presumably a battle unit, represents also a milestone in engineering progress. and according to the New York Telegram "She need never fire a shot at an enemy in order to earn her huge cost many times over." She can justly be regarded as a vast experimental marine laboratory in which all electrical marine equipment can be tested and developed and the result of these tests will be given to American Shipbuilders.

Carries Crew of 1403

An idea of the Colorado's size can be best digested when one realizes that this huge floating fighter is 624 feet in length carrying a complement of 1403 officers and men. Her speed of 21 knots is obtained through oil burners that generate steam in her 18,000 horsepower turbines which in turn supply electric current for four 8000 horsepower motors which are attached one to each propeller shaft.

That the Simplex Projector was selected as one of the electrical units in this latest step of dreadnought building progress, speaks volumes for the progressiveness of the Simplex engineers and builders, and the industry no doubt will be pleased to hear that this machine, which is already found in every hamlet and city throughout the country is now included as an important unit on the worlds greatest floating laboratory and fighting vessel.

October Marked Eighth Anniversary of Birth of the Hertner Transverter

IN October, 1915, eight years ago, the Hertner Electric Company, of Cleveland, first placed on the market the Transverter motor generator for motion picture projection. It is the proud claim of its manufacturers that the Transverter was the pioneer device built to supply current to two projection arcs in series, and that before this date, all arcs were operated on a constant potential source with ballast resistance.

The advent of the Transverter may be regarded as a definite step in advance in the electrical phase of the motion picture art, for since this time the constant current type of motor generator has continually grown in favor.

It is of interest to note the gradual increase in size of equipments of this kind concurrent with the growth in the size of the theatre from the then usual 35 and possibly 50 ampere arcs to the call today for 75, 100 and 125 ampere capacities. Again it is interesting to see an apparent reversion today to a machine even smaller than the 35 ampere size; in fact, as low as 10 to 15 amperes in some cases, used in connection with the new type of reflector arc, which is coming into use extensively and which causes the manufacturer of a motor generator set to produce machines of from 15 to 125 or 150 ampere capacity in order to have a complete line and fill every demand.

It is the belief of the Hertner Electric Company that the carbon arc is destined to play a permanent part in motion picture projection and that while other light sources are being used and something else may some day be discovered that will supersede the arc, the recent advances along the lines both of the high intensity and the reflector would indicate that the ultimate in efficiency and projection of this light source has not as yet been reached and that future development may be expected.

Typhoon's Engineer Explains How to Secure Best Results in Ventilation

NOT always do the results of theatre ventilating systems work out as expected," says Engineer Dailey of the Typhoon System. "The cause of this may generally be traced to the lack of sufficient additional heat radiation to take care of the fresh air supply.

"A logical method of installation would be to use a fresh air supply fan to work in conjunction with heat coils. The air is warmed to a comfortable temperature and forced into the theatre. This permits a material reduction of the direct radiation around the walls.

"With the system as designed by the Typhoon Fan Company, there are additional advantages. The heating unit is placed above the organ loft or ceiling and the air forced out is that near the entrance doors. A considerable saving in coal is effected by forcing out this air (at a temperature of 70 degrees) instead of exhausting 90-degree air at the ceiling. Another point of economy is that the Typhoon used in heating the fresh air can be made a part of the summer Typhoon Cooling and Ventilating System, thereby cutting the equipment cost.

"Also deserving of mention is that, with recirculating ducts, the theatre's atmosphere can before performances be rotated through the heaters several times.

"In this way the house can be heated to a comfortable temperature in twenty minutes or less. The recirculating ducts play an important part too in extremely cold weather by allowing some of the warmer theatre air to mix with the fresh cold air, thus saving on the coal pile. True, this means a slight deficiency from the ventilation standard set, but it would be utilized only during the very few short periods that the outside temperature is sub-normal.

"Summer cooling remains the big profit-payer that the Typhoon System has made it. Nearly 2,000 theatres are now cooled by Typhoons, and keep their business at top level all through the hottest summer weather."

When interviewed at the new offices of the Photo Player Company, 150 West Forty-sixth Street, New York City, by a representative of the Moving Picture World, Mr. Matthews recently expressed himself as more than pleased with the outlook for the coming year.

He stated that immediate deliveries can be made on Foto Players and shipments of the Robert-Morton will be made in sixty days on all orders now received.

Mr. Matthews laid special emphasis on the advantageous features of a most comprehensive service system inaugurated by the Photo Player Company, by which every owner of a Foto Player or a Robert-Morton organ will be cared for immediately when aid or service is required, without loss of time to the exhibitor.

Be sure to book these, for they surely hit on "all six." While the subject matter is highly scientific, it has been filmed by Louis Tolhurst in such a manner that the youngsters in the infant class get fully as much enjoyment out of them as a class of thoroughly dyed-in-the-wool biologists or a group of tired business men.

In reviewing scientific pictures it may seem rather strange to say that the comedy touches are good, but in witnessing the microscopic views of the bee, the spider and the ant there is laugh after laugh * * *

The Secrets of Life mark a grand new epoch in showing what the screen can do for science.

"Best Picture"

"'Rosita' is Mary Pickford's new and best picture. You will wait a long time before you see a better photoplay. There is not a single dull moment in 'Rosita' and not a single incident that seems incredible."—Evening Telegram.

"A Delight"

"Every foot of 'Rosita' is a delight to the eye. Acting, costumes, settings and photography combine to present a glowing stream of radiant beauty."—Evening Journal.

"No False Touch"

"'Rosita' has pep, and flavor, and bouquet. Our Mary makes no false touch. She is tremendously accurate, and artistic. There is not a single jarring note."—N. Y. American.

"One Of Biggest"

"'Rosita' is one of the biggest pictures of the year. Rivals anything that has been done on the screen or stage by the greatest of actresses."—Variety.

"Exquisite"

"Nothing more delightful than Mary Pickford's 'Rosita' has been seen for some time. Exquisite is an adjective that fits this film. One of the most charming productions in which Miss Pickford has ever appeared."—N. Y. Times.

"Flawless"

"The finest thing that Mary Pickford has ever done. Is as nearly flawless as any film could be. We need more pictures like 'Rosita.'"—Morning Telegraph.

"Perfection"

"Perfection is attained in many directions. Miss Pickford is as wild and wicked a gamin as ever romped on any screen. An exceptionally brilliant performance."—Tribune.

"A Cinema Treat"

"'Rosita' is thoroughly enjoyable, and we wouldn't have missed it for worlds. The story is a gripping one, splendidly cast, directed and photographed, and is indeed a cinema treat."—Evening World.

"Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing"

"Should be acceptable in any house"

Says the M. P. News

Here is one of the most beautifully photographed film plays it has ever been our pleasure to view. We have seldom seen such crystal-clear work, while some of the sepia printing is highly artistic.

The production marks the return to the screen of our favorite, Mae Marsh, and her work as Paddy is a distinct achievement. As the vivacious, mischievous, fun-loving little Irish hoyden, Miss Marsh contributes to screen literature one of its most appealing characterizations. Donned in a large blonde wig and acting against some of the most beautiful scenic backgrounds we've seen in many moons, a new Mae Marsh comes to the screen. It is a thoroughly refreshing bit of acting. Miss Marsh went to London and Ireland to act in this one, so that the supporting company is 100 per cent. English. But in this case this fact will not detract from the picture on this side of the pond.

The picture has its moments. There is a thrilling horse race, which shows Mae to be a regular jockey. The fog scenes toward the end of the picture have their thrill and offer some more of the above-mentioned wonderful camera work.

"Paddy-the-Next-Best-Thing" will surely meet with the approval of mothers' clubs. It is the quintessence of cleanliness.

Classification.—A picturization of stage success in which Peggy O'Neill, Eileen Huban and others have appeared.

Production Highlights.—The crystal-clear photography. The artistic subtitles. The quaint old Ireland backgrounds. Mae Marsh's characterization of the title role.

Drawing Power.—Should be acceptable in any house.

Based on Sir Walter Scott's novel, "The Talisman"

the role he created in "Robin Hood"

"A Good Box-Office Bet; Should Satisfy Any Type Of Audience"

"A colorful, highly interesting and finely mounted production that promises well for the new Associated Authors.
"A picture that should appeal to and thoroughly satisfy almost any type of audience. Also, it should, because of the great interest aroused in the character of Richard, the Lion-Hearted on account of the fine performance of Wallace Beery, appeal particularly to all who saw 'Robin Hood.'

"Beery's work in the title role is admirable and will be a revelation because of his excellent work in the lighter comedy moments of the picture.

"Whether your patrons have seen 'Robin Hood' or not makes no difference for we believe that both classes will like this picture and that it will prove a good box-office bet."—M. P. World.

"Star And Title Will Put It Over"
"Clever Comedy Touches"

"Here we have a picture which may in some respects be called a sequel to 'Robin Hood' in that it discloses the adventures of King Richard in the Holy Land. The colorful character of the English king is depicted in all his glory by the same actor who interpreted him in 'Robin Hood'—Wallace Beery.
"There is a splendid flavor of comedy in relief which exploits the swaggering king in intimate scenes in his bath.
"Mr. Beery and the title will put this over.
"A colorful picture which carries good detail and clever comedy touches.
"The adventures of Richard are interesting enough to make the film compelling."

Warner Plans Remain Unchanged

WARNER BROS. Pictures, Inc., announce to the trade that no changes in its 1923-24 production plans are being made, and that none are in contemplation.

Several months ago we announced a program of 18 Warner Bros. "Classics of the Screen." Today we amplify that statement with the announcement of an additional TWO and probably THREE big pictures to be released as SPECIAL PRODUCTIONS.

Of the original 18 pictures scheduled, twelve have been completed and four others are in production. One SPECIAL is now being released, another is practically finished and a third is in the early stages of preparation. Others will be started just as soon as studio space is available.

The outlook for Warner prosperity was never so bright as it is today. Our program for the year, carefully mapped out in the beginning, is brilliant with promise for the future. Though of an elaborateness that assures greatness in the finished product, our production plans have been laid along safe, sane and economical lines. They will be carried out to the letter.

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Someone Shouts "Fire!"

TRAMP! Tramp! Tramp! The parade marched steadily down the street—past warning signals, disregarding "Stop" signs, forging ahead at double time.

Then some one up near the head of the procession got a flash of inspiration and said, "I don't know as this parade is getting anywhere in particular. Guess I'll sit on the curb and watch it a while."

Now the parade is disorganized.

Some are marching on, some are running back; most are just standing around talking, and attempting to decide between the choice of the curb and the middle of the street.

Business of catching a second breath. And a sober thought.

THE action of Famous Players in deciding on a temporary production shut-down is sane, intelligent, and courageous.

Famous is well supplied with productions for its release schedule; there need be no worry about product now, or for many months to come.

Indeed, the situation throughout the industry is one of over-stocked warehouses and sluggish selling. Stopping the machines in the factory is the accepted first step in remedying such a condition.

But—if all the studios in this industry were to shut down tomorrow, it would not help fundamental conditions one iota if, when production is resumed, they re-embark on the cut-throat, senseless, extravagant, and blind production competition that has produced the present situation.

Paste that in your hat.

And read it over again a year from now.

LET'S examine into the causes of the current deadlock.

The goat in the situation is, and has been, the distributor—the sales machine. Not the producer, as we are told so often, nor the exhibitor. For the latter has the weapon of a "buyer's strike" at his command at all times.

The distributor is the goat.

On the one hand he has faced manufacturers who rush ahead with factory production blindly and utterly disregarding what the market would pay for their goods.

It is admirable and worthy of commendation to say, "We'll make the product bigger and better;" it is idiotic to say, "We'll make it so good and so costly the retailer will just have to buy."

The retailer won't. In many cases. That is the answer.

The curse of the distributor has been the producer belief that a "Quota" was a penciled figure on a piece of paper, to be altered or increased at will.

The grim, hard fact is that a "Quota" is a number of individual dollar bills, extracted by slow and painful work from retailers who, at least, know their own pocketbooks.

THERE are more deeply fundamental reasons. Principal among them is the fact that, with a few distinguished exceptions, the manufacturers in this industry have never CONTROLLED the process and cost of manufacture.

When the producer wanted a big story—he went into the market and BID against a half a dozen fellow producers.

When the producer desired a sure-fire cast—he went into a market limited to some score of players and BID.

When the producer sought to estimate the cost of production he made calf-eyes at his director, mumbled a prayer or two, and then doubled the guess that he was given in response.

As an industry, we have failed to develop new creative brains, potential histrionic lights, broader executive vision, and—playing the "surething" game to the bitter end—we have found ourselves compelled to place the RESPONSIBILITY for the cost of our goods on "conditions."

You can't hire or fire "conditions."

A DINNER given to Ernest Fredman, of The Film Renter, London, occurred the day of the Famous Players' announcement.

Our usual procedure with unsuspecting British editors is to lure them to a banquet table under subdued lights and then spend two hours or more giving them ADVICE.

But, strangely, the two hours of the Fredman luncheon were spent by our leading film executives in making CONFESSIONS.

Marcus Loew, Richard Rowland, Samuel Goldwyn—three of our most frank and consistently interesting magnates—took occasion to commend Adolph Zukor on his courageous action and to voice their own agreement with his view of the necessity for stern measures.

Confession, we are told, is good for the soul. Confession with reformation, in the present case, might be good for the pocketbook.

But, it struck us, there was a hopeless, despairing air about the confessions.

Something like this:

The patient admits that eliminating red meat from his diet is proving very beneficial. Is even considering giving up eating altogether for a time. But he knows darn well that just as soon as he gets the price again he is going to fare forth on a grand and glorious meat debauch—and, gosh, how he dreads it!

Not all the blame for a dyspeptic industry can be placed on the doorstep of the producer.

Marcus Loew, in his remarks at the Fredman luncheon, took particular pains to mention the cost of distribution as a factor in the situation.

The Loew-Metro financial statement issued a few days later supplied a follow-up to his remarks. The cost of film distribution is placed in the statement at a figure close to three million dollars.

Something approximating fifty-seven thousand dollars a week as the cost of conveying just one organization's product to the market!

Multiply that—and get an idea of what the box offices of the country must pay, not for the manufacture of our goods, but for SELLING them.

Could any industry, not singularly blessed by the Fates, withstand such proportions in the division of its dollars?

THERE seems to be a tendency on the part of producers to sum up the remedy for the industry's illness in the declaration:

"If the exhibitors can't pay for the bigger and better pictures—we must stop going forward and start moving backward."

The inference being that WORTH WHILE pictures are synonymous with COSTLY pictures.

The truth is—this industry cannot go back in point of quality. Judging from an average month's entertainment at an ordinary picture theatre—there is still room to go very far ahead.

The problem is—how to put more BRAINS into pictures; to the end that brains mean quality and brains mean efficiency.

The necessity is—the creation of more real "producers"; production executives.

The past has given a definition of the word "producer" that runs something like this: "A man who has the money to make a picture, who can promote the money, or who is related to the money."

The man answering this definition has then had to turn around and give the spending of the money into the hands of those having no RESPONSIBILITY for it.

With the picture made, he has gone to the distributing organization and said: "It cost me so-much, the QUOTA will have to be twice so-much."

And now we are fast convincing ourselves that we have been making pictures that are TOO GOOD! What bunk!

Just because it isn't possible to induce the public or the exhibitor to pay for the money-lender's bonus, the producer's ignorance, the director's extravagance.

We can't go back.

We MUST go ahead.

And do it on a profit-making basis.

Robert E. Welsh

Adolph Zukor Curtails Production; Cochrane and Rowland Praise Move

SPECULATION has been rife in all business circles regarding the statement last week of Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that the corporation "has completed the production program for this fall that was outlined in its announcement several months ago. We are now curtailing production in our studios to the greatest possible extent and we will not resume the making of any further new negatives until production costs have come down to a common sense basis."

The effect of this announcement on the stock market was immediate and marked, for it followed testimony at the Federal Trade Commission hearing that Mr. Zukor's Paramount stock holdings are not in his name. The error of a reporter caused newspapers to say that he held none of his own company's stock. This stock, after closing at 65⅝ on Thursday, October 25, opened Friday with an overnight loss of 5⅝ points. Later it rallied to 62½, but on heavy offerings it dropped to 52½ and closed at 53¼. A total of 49,000 shares changed hands during the day. On Wednesday, October 31, the stock had recouped to around the 55 mark.

Universal to Follow Suit

Newspapers carried long stories on how "movie costs halt production," to quote the New York Times headline, and interviews with different motion picture executives. R. H. Cochrane, vice-president of Universal, said: "Mr. Zukor is right. Production conditions are and have been outrageously abnormal. It would be a great thing if all studios could close their doors until the people who have been forcing costs skyward have a chance to wake up. The only reason why the Universal has not closed its studios is because it would leave us with so many unfinished negatives on hand that we would risk a loss of over $1,000,000. When these negatives are finished, we intend to shut off production as close to the complete stopping point as our releasing contracts will permit."

Associated First National denied it would spend $3,500,000 on films in the next two months, refuting a story from Los Angeles, and declared an intention to retrench as much as possible. "The move of Famous Players in temporarily shutting down is right," commented Richard A. Rowland, general manager. Other companies say they will continue according to schedule. Carl Anderson, president of Anderson Pictures Corporation, believed that the situation has little effect on the business.

Many Negatives on Hand

E. J. Ludvigh, secretary and treasurer of Famous Players, is quoted as follows: "The shutting down of production means that our outlay for films is complete and no further production expenses will be necessary for months to come. We are going to turn the negatives into cash. We have $15,000,000 worth of films on hand, the best part of a year's production, mainly made during the late spring and summer, when costs were low. These will be shown this winter, and returns are expected to be very satisfactory. We expect this year's earnings, based on the ten months' showing, to be about the same as last year. There has been no suggestion of any change in the dividend policy.

"Shutting down should remove the chief criticism against Famous Players that we lay up too large inventories. Films in stock include such features as the 'Ten Commandments,' receipts from which are expected to exceed the 'Covered Wagon'; also new films by Pola Negri, Glenn Hunter, William S. Hart and the first picture made by Douglas Fairbanks, Jr."

It was explained that the curtailment means that 200 employes, such as carpenters and electricians, will be laid off, besides 700 persons who have been working in the Hollywood studios. The highly paid stars and directors under contract will be retained. The actors will receive half-pay during the period they are not working.

Rowland Denies Story

Absolute denial of the announcement from Los Angeles that Associated First National Pictures would spend $3,500,000 on film productions in the next two months is given by Richard A. Rowland, general manager of the company.

"To say that First National will spend $3,500,000 on productions in the next two months is incorrect. On the contrary, we intend to retrench as much as we possibly can with the pictures we ourselves make. Our contractural relations with independent producers compel us to continue, however, insofar as their product is concerned. But we will spend no more than is absolutely necessary to carry these contracts through. Mounting production costs and a reluctance by producers to face the truth about possible returns, make drastic action imperative.

"The move of Famous Players in temporarily shutting down is right. We are in sympathy with them, and if we were placed in a similar position, if our contracts did not call for fulfillment, there is no question but that we would have taken the same step. What the solution is I don't know, but I certainly do not believe that activities can be resumed on the former basis, or assume former extent until a complete reconstruction of ideas in regard to costs has taken place."

Goldwyn Sitting Pat

F. J. Godsol, president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, said:

"The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation will make the same number of pictures as originally planned and the studio at Culver City is running on schedule and will continue to do so. If over-production is the case with any other company, it is not the case with Goldwyn, which is operating on a carefully thought out and carefully arranged schedule. The entire Goldwyn Cosmopolitan distributing program, which includes Cosmopolitan, Distinctive and Goldwyn pictures, will go forward in a normal course."

H. M. Warner, of Warner Brothers, said: "While rumors are rife everywhere con-

Paramount Release Schedule to Be Unbroken, 'Tis Said

INQUIRY at the offices of the Famous Players-Lasky and information gathered from other reliable sources reveal the fact that the company has completed, or nearly completed, nineteen of the twenty-two productions listed for release after November 1 in the announcement made two months ago.

These nineteen pictures will find Paramount's releasing schedule on a basis of a picture a week up into March and, while nobody at Famous Players was willing to discuss the reopening of the studios, it is understood readjustments in production will be completed in time to enable new pictures to be made so that there will be no break in the Paramount releasing schedule after March 1.

Fourteen of the listed pictures are entirely finished and the five others—three at the West Coast studio and two at the Long Island City plant—are now being completed. The shutdown, it is understood, will be in full effect at both producing centers immediately following the completion of these five productions

The full list of the company's pictures actually in sight for release, one a week, starting November 4, is as follows:

The Herbert Brenon production, "The Spanish Dancer," starring Pola Negri.

Sam Wood's production, "His Children's Children."

"The Light That Failed," a Melford production with Jacqueline Logan and Percy Marmont.

"Stephen Steps Out," a young Douglas Fairbanks' first star picture.

"The Call of the Canyon," the second of the Paramount Zane Grey productions.

"Around the World in the Speejacks," the six-reel special made by A. Y. Gowen on his two-year motor boat adventure.

Glenn Hunter in "West of the Water Tower."

"Wild Bill Hickok," which signalizes Bill Hart's return to the screen.

"Big Brother," an Allan Dwan production with Tom Moore.

"Flaming Barriers," another Melford production.

"To the Ladies," a James Cruze production.

Gloria Swanson in "The Humming Bird," produced by Allan Dwan.

"Holiday Love," produced by William de Mille.

"The Heritage of the Desert," another Zane Grey production.

"Pied Piper Malone," which Thomas Meighan is now making at the Long Island studio.

"My Man," a Pola Negri picture produced by Herbert Brenon.

"The Stranger," with Betty Compson, Richard Dix and Lewis Stone.

"The Next Corner," a Sam Wood production, with Conway Tearle, Lon Chaney and Dorothy Mackaill.

"Singer Jim McKee," Hart's second.

Just how long the Paramount studio shutdown will last is not known, for Mr. Zukor and his associates will not say definitely. However, it is understood the readjustment is already in operation and, with the backing of all factors in the industry, will be pushed through until costs return to a common sense basis.

M. P. T. O. A. Committee to Be in National Capital

UNITED action on the part of Motion Picture Theatre Owners in the country to handle legislative matters at Washington in the next session of Congress was agreed upon at a meeting of national officers and Board of Directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in Hotel Seneca, Rochester, N. Y., October 31. To further this project and render it entirely effective, it was agreed that the next meeting of the national officers and Board of Directors be held in Washington in December, while Congress is in session.

From this meeting a national legislative committee will be evolved with headquarters in Washington during the entire session of Congress. The special work of the committee will be to care for the interests of the motion picture industry in the nation, effect a repeal of the admission and seat taxes, and also prevent the passage of legislation inimical to the welfare of the theatrical business.

The campaign in this relation throughout the nation will be conducted along the most constructive and advanced lines possible. Every congressional district will be canvassed and flying squadrons of theatre owners and others will be at the service of the national committee to deliver addresses and handle any other line of work necessary to the consummation of the general purpose of the committee. This is the greatest line of action yet projected along legislation lines by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and is destined, it is said, to give the theatre people a line of protection not heretofore attained.

Those present at the meeting in Rochester, aside from the local theatre owners invited to attend, were National President Sydney S. Cohen, New York; Harry Davis, Pittsburgh; C. E. Whitehurst, of Baltimore; R. T. Woodhull, Dover, N. Y; John Schwalm, Hamilton, Ohio; Ernest Herstmann, Boston; Samuel Bullock, Cleveland, Ohio; M. J. O'Toole, Scranton, Penn.; William Bender, Indianapolis, Ind; George Aarons, Philadelphia, Penn., and E. M. Fay, of Providence.

Cosmopolitan Will Build Three More Studios in New York City

UP to the present time the Cosmopolitan Corporation has been making pictures in various studios located in different sections of New York City. This is in addition to its own studios at 127th street and Second avenue. Five of these, most utilized by Cosmopolitan, are the 44th Street studio, the Pathe, the Jackson Avenue, the Tec-Art and the Biograph.

While these are admitted to be good and well equipped studios the Cosmopolitan Corporation has found their total capacity unequal to its growing need of big stages to accommodate the elaborate sets for the important historical and other special features in its production schedule for the near future.

Accordingly, Cosmopolitan Corporation has acquired the necessary real estate and will immediately rush the building of three big new studios, all in New York City, and one of them to have the greatest capacity of any Eastern studio, except that of the Famous Players on Long Island.

William Randolph Hearst, president of the company, in authorizing the above announcement, said: "There is an enormous advantage in making motion pictures in New York City. One of the most important of these is that New York is the centre of stage play production. Consequently here is where famous actors and actresses of the stage are most immediately available for both stage and screen engagements."

Reports Decrease

Admission Tax Returns Show Late Summer Business Slumped

Washington, D. C.—A decided reduction in the receipts of theatres and other places of amusement during the late summer is indicated by tax returns just made public by the Bureau of Internal Revenue, which show that collections from that source for the month of September totaled $4,932,527, as compared with $5,560,748 for the month of August. The September collections, however, were slightly better than those of the corresponding period of last year, when $4,789,391 was reported. The figures just issued by the Internal Revenue Bureau show that, during the first quarter of the current fiscal year, ended with September, a total of $15,633,781 was collected from the admission tax, an increase of more than $1,500,000 over the collections for the corresponding period of the preceding year.

During the month of September a total of $134,660 was collected from the special tax on theatres, museums, etc., as compared with $402,344 for the preceding month.

All for K. G. Organization

Fred H. Chase, Vice-President, to Devote All Time to K. G. Corporation

Frederick H. Chase, recently elected vice-president of the K. G. Picture Corporation, brings an interesting personality into the motion picture colony. Banker, gold miner, big game hunter, Arctic explorer, writer, political organizer and heavyweight athlete, Mr. Chase's various experiences would furnish plot stuff for half a dozen thrillers. Mr. Chase has dabbled in pictures from time to time, but now he has promised K. G. to devote his whole time to organizing its activities, letting his outside interests lapse.

Mr. Chase is probably best known in New York for his work as secretary of Col. Roosevelt's Progressive party. During the war he earned the title of "100 per cent. Chase" for his unequalled record in selling Liberty Bonds.

Prof. Arkatov Here

Prof. Alexander Arkatov of the University of Moscow, for twenty years a film producer and founder of the Russ Film Company, has come to this country to interest American producers in filming subjects based on classics by such Russian writers as Tolstoy, Dostoiefsky and Andreyev. He claims new methods of production gained in Europe. Prof. Arkatov is living with I. S. Richter of 628 West 114th street, New York, who is collaborating with him in his work.

Production Curtailed

cerning the closing down of different plants, it is only fair to the exhibitor and to the public to issue the statement that the Warner organization intends to keep the different production units working at full blast, with no changes in the elaborate plans we have made for the future.

"When the news broke concerning the move of Famous Players, Hollywood was thrown into apprehension, and this has rebounded in all directions, affecting every organization in the producing business. I have not been aware that conditions are below normalcy and I see no reason to fear for the future as far as our own productions are concerned.

"We announced that we would produce eighteen Warner Classics for the season of 1923-24, and a number of special productions as well. Our announcement in this regard is unchanged in spite of the action that has just been taken by this contemporary organization."

"A Mental Condition"

Carl Anderson, president of Anderson Pictures Corporation, says:

"The present situation is largely a mental condition. Actually, the dimes and quarters are coming into the box office windows just the same as they have been doing for months and years. Theatres are running full blast; the exchanges are busy, and there is nothing in the present situation to indicate a change of this condition.

"It is undoubtedly true that some producers have spent enormous sums for production and are now forced to stop, look and listen, until such time as the pictures can be put to work and a revenue received to replace these excessive production costs. At every turn we see a big effort being made to justify these costs. Some producers have been on a wild orgy of spending, a carnival of extravagant costs. There had to come a time when top-heavy production costs would tumble over of their own weight. We have now reached that point.

"All the public and all the exhibitor have ever demanded is clean, appealing entertainment. As far back as June, 1921, the National Convention at Minneapolis of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America passed out to producers a warning that production costs were too high, and again in May, 1922, at the National Convention in Washington, the same statement was made. Yet the producers failed to heed the warning. Ridiculously high salaries of stars and executives continued. One unit pitted its resources against another, thinking to win favor by the lavishness of their productions."

Ince Foresaw Action

The production schedule for 1923-24 at the Thos. H. Ince Studios will continue just as it was planned many months ago. The problem of readjustment which has caused a temporary shut-down of some of the studios was foreseen, it is said, and dealt with by Mr. Incce almost a year ago.

Early this season Ince announced that he had made a decided change in his plans for the coming year and would offer not more than four or six pictures during the year—about half the number usually made at his studios during a season.

"There always is an audience for big pictures, I have found in my fourteen years' experience," declares Mr. Ince. "Magnificent picture houses going up everywhere offer a setting for fine productions, and require them. There are certain expenditures necessary and legitimate in the making of a picture. Others, such as exorbitant salaries, which have reached a ridiculous figure, can be curtailed through just such a readjustment as is occurring today."

Cut Stars' Salaries Radically Or Get New Faces, Urges Brandt

THE following statement is issued by William Brandt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners, State of New York:

"As a guest at the luncheon tendered to Ernest W. Fredman, editor of the Film Rentor of London, held at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel on Friday, I was greatly amazed to hear some of the speakers blame the exhibitor for the dilemma of some of the producers today. It was stressed at this luncheon that producers could not get their production cost back on account of the fact that combinations of exhibitors throughout the country, controlling the territories in which they operated their theatres, dictated the price they paid for the film and made it impossible for the producers to receive their exhibition quotas, or even their cost of production.

"While this may be so in a very few isolated cases, competing exhibitors are natural opposition, both fighting for the patronage of the people living in their territories, and under normal conditions both fighting for the film attractions that will bring these people to their theatres.

"Competing exhibitors haven't one thing in common, and will keep on fighting between themselves for this patronage and pay regular prices for attractions while there is a chance for profit, and the only reason that they occasionally get together is because their profit has been wiped out by the demand for exorbitant film rentals far beyond what they can pay. It is simply an economic business readjustment, the exhibitor finding he is obliged to combine to make a reasonable profit on his investment.

"Aside from a few avaricious individuals, on the basis of increased production costs, most of the producers are entitled to an increase in this year's film rentals, but the peak had already been reached long ago. It is impossible for the exhibitors to accede to the requests of the producers, with the result that the producers have found themselves burdened with expensive productions which they can not sell to the exhibitor in accordance with their cost.

"In my opinion, the greatest portion of the expense going into the production of a motion picture today is the salaries of the stars, directors and supporting cast. These salaries are clearly out of proportion to the services rendered in similar professions, and should be readjusted immediately. With these tremendous salaries paid to stars, directors and supporting casts, the average picture is boosted 'way above its normal cost, necessitating a corresponding increase in exhibition value, with a corresponding increase in film rentals which the exhibitor cannot assimilate, so that the entire matter backwashes to the producer.

"In glancing over the work sheet of a fairly good production which has made money for the exhibitors, I found that the salaries of the stars, supporting casts and directors more than doubled the rest of the expense entailed in the making of this picture. So that, until the salaries are reduced and brought within reason so that the film rentals can come down, there is no hope for economic stability in the industry.

"Just an example of what a few are receiving may be found in the following list:

"These salaries are not stable and, should an actor appear in a success, the next picture finds a demand for an increased salary.

"My experience in appearing before legislative committees on the question of advocating more favorable laws in the matter of taxation for the smaller exhibitor, of whom over 80 per cent. are represented in this industry, has been that the Legislature immediately points to the enormous salaries which the industry is paying to its stars, and declines the relief prayed for.

"Our reports recently contained the story that Baby Peggy, a child of 5 years, was receiving a guarantee of $500,000 a year for appearing in motion pictures. Contrast that with the salary that the President of the United States of America is receiving, which is $75,000 a year, and it can readily be seen what a tremendous impression the contrast has upon the outside world.

"One thing is certain. The only ones in the entire industry that are getting the money at present are the actors.

"An immediate adjustment must come, and that at once. And if those who are receiving these tremendous salaries are reluctant to meet a readjustment of an economic condition in the film industry, then, I say, by all means get new faces for the screen immediately. The exhibitor will be glad to help."

Mayberry with Hodkinson

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has announced the appointment of Cecil E. Mayberry as branch sales manager of the Chicago exchange. Mr. Mayberry is well-known among exhibitors, having formerly been manager of the Goldwyn exchange and later general sales manager of that company.

Erno Rapee Resigns

Erno Rapee has resigned as musical director from the Capital Theatre, New York City, and has taken a similar position at the Fox Philadelphia Theatre.

Binderup Awaits Court Decision

THE case of Charles G. Binderup versus the Pathe Exchange and eighteen other film exchanges, wherein Mr. Binderup, owner of a string of thirty theatres in Nebraska, sues the exchange jointly to recover $700,000 he claims to have lost because they refused to deliver films to him as per contract, has reached the United States Supreme Court and has been argued there by Attorney Arthur Mullen, of Omaha, representing the film exchanges, and Attorney Dana Van Dusen, of Omaha, representing Binderup.

The plaintiff seeks to make a case against the exchanges under the Sherman Anti-trust law, alleging that the exchanges have combined to keep him from getting films. The exchanges counter by saying that he showed the films in more than one theatre in violation of his contract.

Binderup further seeks to show that the business of selling and delivering films is an interstate traffic and that therefore the exchanges are subject to the Sherman Anti-trust law. The exchanges reply that Binderup, as all other exhibitors, must make his contract with exchange managers in Nebraska for films after the films have been shipped into the state, have come to rest in the state, and that therefore the traffic has lost all interstate aspects.

The case, after dragging through the federal courts in the district here, has gone to the circuit courts and now to the United States Supreme Court, where a far-reaching final decision is expected. Attorneys said, though the case was argued October 16, it might be three months or more before a ruling came from the supreme bench on the matter.

Crown Exhibitor and Subserve Producer for Filmdom Success

By MAX GRAF
Supervising Director of Graf Productions.

I HAVE read Mr. Richard Rowland's articles with much interest, and I have also read the editorial comments about Mr. Rowland not speaking to the trade very often, but hitting the nail on the head whenever he does.

Being a producer of independent pictures and having so often become dizzy over the enormous sales quotas placed on my pictures, only to be awakened a year or so later by the actual figures as submitted by my accounting department, I realize only too well that Mr. Rowland is right.

I have also read the more recent comments. Those made by producers who have taken the opportunity to proclaim, in hopes that their proclamations will reach the heart of the exhibitor, the highly efficient manner in which they are making productions in order to save waste and make for the theatres golden avalanches that can be had for the price of the regular run of photoplay.

One very nice thing about the picture business is that when anyone speaks (through his typewriter) he is either right, or else the editor kindly throws his copy in the waste basket before the speaker is subjected to that storm of criticism that would naturally follow.

Granting that all these gentlemen are perfectly right and with thought of malice toward none, I would suggest that this all-important question be referred to the exhibitor, who after all is the real back bone of the industry. If the fictitious sales values set on a picture are not met in actual dollars it is usually because the exhibitor realizes that the merits of the picture do not warrant his paying the price asked, and the salesman must either sell him at a lower price or turn the account over to his competitor and get nothing—which is not so good.

On the other hand, it is a well-known fact that the exhibitor is usually willing to pay a fair price for that which he really wants. He has to stay in business. But the exhibitor has his limitations. Just what kind of pictures are going to build up the business of the picture theatre? This is the all-important question.

If we are to build this industry of ours on a firm foundation; if we are to have a substantial output for the product we make; if we are to expand in place of deteriorating, then surely we must give some most serious thought to just what sort of picture we must have for the building process and just what pictures to avoid as stumbling blocks.

Statistics show that about 90% of the motion picture theatres in the United States have less than a thousand seats; 35% of these houses are not open more than four days a week. More than half of the entire number charge less than 25c for their top admission price. The average theatre overhead, exclusive of film rental equals about 50% of the entire box-office receipts and under the present system of operating the average theatre shows a profit of little more than 12%.

If we are to upbuild this business of ours—if we are to keep it on a firm foundation, is it better to cater to the exclusive 10% and to the articulate theatres that kick us out the moment a stage show comes along, or would we show better judgment by making pictures to suit the requirements of this struggling 90% whose theatres have been built upon their faith in the producers. Only 29% of the theatres showing pictures have orchestras and less than half of them have pipe organs. It takes a big musical setting to put over the sort of pictures the industry has become so vitally interested in of late.

While talking with a few, they have stated that these big pictures will uplift the industry, play for big prices in the exclusive theatres and then "clean up" for the average exhibitor a few months later. My experience has been that the man with a limited number of seats is compelled to give two performances a night to make his house pay, and that he is one of the few whose patrons will stand for a "boost" in admission price once in a while; that his business drops off just before and just after the big event to an extent that makes the total amount for his ticket sales at the end of the month just about the same as if he had let the big pictures go into the discard.

On the other hand, these big pictures are apt to make his ordinary run of shows depreciate in the eyes of his patrons until they drift into that clique that is denouncing the photoplay as a distortion of art. But now that there is so much talk going on in reference to what the future holds I believe it would be most interesting to the trade at large if our trade papers would open their columns and let the exhibitors voice their opinions as to just what they want and just what they wish to avoid. As I have said before, the exhibitor is, and should be king, and we, the producers, must do the bidding of the king if we are to arrive.

Bernheim Goes Abroad

Julius Bernheim, director-general of Universal City, Cal., the big Universal studio plant, sailed from New York this week, bound for the bedside of his mother, seriously ill in her home in Laupheim, Wurttemberg, Germany. Concerning the production activities of Universal City, Bernheim says that Universal is well ahead of its schedule.

Ernest W. Fredman, of London, England, editor of the Film Renter and Moving Picture News, a British trade journal, was tendered a testimonial luncheon by representatives of the industry on Friday, October 26, at the Ritz-Carlton, New York. Scores of the biggest men connected with motion pictures were in attendance.

Harry Reichenbach acted as toastmaster, and in his usual brilliant style introduced the speakers, among whom were numbered some of the leaders of the industry, including Marcus Loew, Samuel Goldwyn, Samuel Rothafel, Richard Rowland, Abe Berman, Joe Dannenberg, Nathan Burkan and Fred Hall.

The luncheon was sort of an official welcome on the part of the industry to Mr. Fredman, who came to these shores to report to the exhibitors of Great Britain just what he finds as regards present conditions and future possibilities.

This is not Mr. Fredman's first visit to this country. He was here about eighteen months ago. He expects to stay for about another fortnight.

Mr. Fredman was also the guest of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers at their regular weekly luncheon on Thursday, November 1.

Baby Peggy's Charms Capture New Yorkers on Her Birthday

BABY PEGGY, in private life Miss Peggy Montgomery, celebrated her fifth birthday on Friday, October 26, with a party and luncheon for "kids" and newspapermen at the Biltmore, New York City. Clad like a princess in a red velvet gown, Miss Peggy charmingly welcomed each guest. She was, she said, very happy that so many were there to join her in her games. Many did, for Baby Peggy is irresistible.

One courtier of four years quickly succumbed. He approached with pouting lips.

"You're going to kiss me?" Miss Peggy inquired politely.

"Yes-s-s," the cavalier acknowledged with gusto.

"Certainly," Miss Peggy agreed. "But on the cheek, please."

Congratulations were offered by various speakers with the demi-tasse. Miss Peggy sat in a high chair and listened with a charmingly impersonal air. While she joined in applauding each compliment, it seemed that her little hands patted louder than Hershfield, the cartoonist and toastmaster, remarked that Jackie Coogan also was having his birthday party that day in Los Angeles.

"It would be nice to have Jackie here," Miss Peggy announced primly.

The little star of Principal Pictures Corporation created quite a stir among the guests. There was speculation before she arrived, for the commonest belief regarding a child in theatricals is that she rapidly becomes spoiled. Miss Peggy is not. And it must be said that she is even more delightful in real life than she is in films. This naturalness of hers is due to her parents, who are determined that she is to escape the besetting sin of a "swelled head." Good luck to them in their intention.

Irving Lesser, of Principal Pictures, attended the luncheon and was kept busy introducing Baby Peggy to various visiting film magnates.

Surely Baby Peggy is making a hit in the "movies" because, as one of the speakers pointed out, she is sincere in all she does.

Commission Suddenly Decides to Prolong Paramount Query

Fuller's Wire from Capital Adjourns Indefinitely Government Case

By TOM WALLER

COUNSEL for Famous Players-Lasky, on the verge of preparing a defense for presentment within the following thirty days, did not attempt to conceal their surprise when, late on the night before the Federal Trade Commission had announced it would rest the plaintiff case, W. F. Fuller, chief of the Government probers, wired from Washington that the Commission had further evidence to enter on the record. Concluding the examination of an expert witness Mr. Fuller left the then finishing touches for Attorney Gaylord Hawkins, and hurriedly departed for the capital. Late that night Famous attorneys received word that the Government investigation was incomplete. The trial on October 26 was abruptly halted by Mr. Hawkins, announcing the taking of an indefinite adjournment.

A belief expressed that the protraction might have been due to the Commission feeling it had insufficient evidence to close its case at this time was disclaimed by an opinion voiced off the record by Mr. Hawkins. This was that the Government was satisfied it has established a case.

That the next place of the resumption of the trial, which so far has been recorded in many parts of the country, will be at Los Angeles, Cal., was expressed by Bruce Bromley, of the Famous legal battery. There, it is believed upon good authority, the Government may endeavor to ascertain the sentiments of certain prominnent actors and directors, whose standing in the industry was the important point of several witness called during the last few days of the inquiry here.

Mr. Hawkins expressed ignorance when these points were brought to his attention. He said he did not know when and where the trial will be resumed, but was inclined to believe that the plaintiff side would be closed with the entering of a few stipulations upon the record.

Expenses of the litigation so far have totaled close to $500,000, of which both litigants are said to have had an even break, with the heavier burden possibly on the Government's shoulder. It will mean at least another $200,000 or more, it was advised, if the investigation is adjourned to the coast.

Since July last the Commission has had six different lawyers in the case and up to the present date has had before it 152 witnesses, whose expenses incurred in railroad fare, etc., have had to be defrayed by the Government, it is learned from an authoritative source.

Famous No Monarch, Says O'Reilly; Warners First in Season's Product

"Paramount does not dominate the market in the city of New York today," testified Charles O'Reilly, head of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the Commission's last hearing. The chief official of the organization, embodying several hundred of Greater New York's most prominent exhibitors, rated Famous Players-Lasky as fourth on the list in grade and quantity of product this season. Warner Brothers comes first in this respect, according to Mr. O'Reilly's opinion, followed by Goldwyn and then First National. Paramount, in O'Reilly's estimation today has no monopoly of the movie mart.

A bitter attack against the block booking system was launched by the T. O. C. C. head in the course of his testimony. He predicted that unless it is utterly erradicated it will, within the next few years, mean the survival of the fittest; in other words the big circuit owner will flourish at the utter ruination of the Independent exhibitor.

The buying power of the circuit prohibits the individual from purchasing a picture even with more money than he would take in at the box office, declared the witness. House against house instead of buyer versus buyer was O'Reilly's sentiment for hitting the nail on the head for all around satisfaction and insurance for the safety of every one in the industry.

To solve the problem, the T. O. C. C. witness frankly admitted the only thing he could see on that horizon was what in substance would mean the breaking up of the circuits and the producer shunning such a big customer for the little fellow. In the long run O'Reilly prophesized that such a method would net the manufacturer bigger money than the lump sum he now receives for an exclusive first run booking to a theatre chain. As it now stands, he said, exhibitors of his own organization often have had to pay more for second runs than circuits have paid for first runs.

Circuit owners never fight, the witness said. They respect one another's treasuries. Marcus Loew, in O'Reilly's opinion, is a good enough business man to know the proportions of the Keith gold mine; and that Keith could give him just as good a run as he could give Keith.

As an illustration of the circuit control of picture prices the witness said that Loew bought the first Harold Lloyd picture for $18,000. It proved to be what the public wanted and Keith purchased the next one for $50,000. Loew acquired the third Lloyd offering for a still higher price. The witness believes that as far as New York is concerned important product, almost in its entirety, is given first run in either of the houses of these circuits, and sometimes in both.

"Producers should not bow to Mr. Loew's slogan: I'm first run or nothing," exclaimed O'Reilly. He added that if they continue to do so it will eventually lead to the extermination of the Independents.

Two resolutions expressing adverseness to block booking system, as passed by the T. O. C. C. at an August meeting, were identified by O'Reilly and then entered into the record.

One attested opposition to the present system of purchasing pictures while their production is only in the stage of contemplation. The desire to review the finished product, the right of individual selection and single instead of the compulsory group purchase were other sentiments included.

The second approved draft contained the statement that during the past two years attendance in picture houses has decreased considerably. This was taken by the organization as an illustration of what forcing the exhibitor to contract for pictures he has never seen, until flashed on the screen of his house, will do.

Under cross examination by Attorney Swaine the witness stated he is acquainted with the new Paramount policy and that such reorganization was brought about shortly after the adoption of the two resolutions.

The new policy, he said, seems to cope with the needs of the exhibitor, but it will be a long time before the other companies will follow suit. Eventually, however, Mr. O'Reilly expressed the opinion that producers will follow in this direction the steps of Famous.

D. I. Berman, general manager of the foreign department of United Artists told of Famous conditions in Canada while he was manager of the corporation there. Most of the time he was on the stand was taken up in explaining the policies of different Canadian theatres.

Independent History

Veteran Attacks Block System; Says Makes Exhibitor Goat to Public

The history of the movies, as it particularly pertains to the early fight of the Independents, and why the block booking system today, in his estimation, is the greatest menace to the industry, were gone into in much detail in the five hours that F. Tom Moore occupied the stand as a witness for the Federal Trade Commission. Mr. Moore, operates the Rialto Theatre, Washington, D. C. He was one of the first to enter the industry and one of the first to foresee filmdom's prospects.

In 1904 Moore, then in the prime of life, was blowing the bellows and wielding a hammer on a blacksmith's forge as a means of livelihood. That same year he put aside the leathern apron to later acquire the big diamond which reposed on one of his big fingers the other day. At that time Moore began as a singer with a vaudeville troupe. Then he established his own skit company. But one reel films were coming into vogue in the early part of the century and it was for them that the witness established the Imperial Exchange in Washington two years later. This he sold to the General Film Company in 1910.

About 1917 some twenty-six Independent exhibitors were finding it difficult to obtain pictures of special note being released by

Major Thomson in Control of F. B. O.—Next Season's Policies

MAJOR H. C. S. THOMSON, who succeeded P. A. Powers as managing director of the Film Booking Offices at the instigation of the capital represented in the corporation, stated that there would be no drastic changes made in the personel of the F. B. O. forces or policies and that the "open booking" principle adopted by the company at its inception will be carried through, but on a much larger scale, and with a greater variety and assortment of productions for the exhibitor to select from.

"The principles of showmanship," said Major Thomson, "that the F. B. O. have been following in the twenty months it has been in existence has proven itself a worthy one.

"It is not the idea of the F. B. O. to load itself with overspent productions and then pass the burden along to the exhibitor. It is the purpose of the F. B. O. to make productions that the exhibitor can sell to his patrons at a reasonable profit to his theatre.

"The first consideration of the Film Booking Offices and Robertson-Cole Company will be the amusement of the public, then the profit of the exhibitor. Every production made at the Robertson-Cole studios will be made from an angle of showmanship and not from the angle that it is good publicity to say a production cost a million dollars to produce.

"To the exhibitor, it is not what a picture cost in production that he is mostly interested in, but he does want to know about the finished product and what it will bring into his box-office.

"The pictures I have in mind are such as 'The Third Alarm,' 'Westbound Limited,' 'In the Name of the Law,' 'Human Wreckage,' and a score of other F. B. O. pictures. None of these productions I have mentioned cost a million dollars to produce or even a half million dollars. Coupled with a campaign of real showmanship these pictures have brought business to the exhibitor at a price to him that was well within his reach.

"It is the purpose of the F. B. O. to continue to sell the product twice. First to the exhibitor and then to the public. Our publicity and promotional departments will continue to function as they have in the past with a wide free hand to help the exhibitor.

"The program plans of the F. B. O. were announced some time ago and there will be no drastic changes in these with the possible exception of changing a release date here and there as the occasion may demand. Our plan is to give the exhibitor who uses our product one very big picture each month in addition to two very good ones. As a start along these policy lines the next big F. B. O. special will be Chester Bennett's 'The Lullaby,' starring Jane Novak. The next special to follow this will be Emory Johnson's 'The Mailman.'"

Movies in Hongkong

American Films Most Popular in Chinese City, Consul Says

Washington, D. C.—American films are very popular in Hongkong, according to the American consul in that city, who has just reported to the Department of Commerce that there are eight large theatres in his community, four of which cater to Europeans, Americans and the better class of Chinese. The total daily attendance at all theatres at Hongkong is placed at 10,000, and the admission prices range from 20 cents to $1 gold.

The largest proportion of films shown are of American manufacture, it is stated, and the local theatres which cater to the European trade prefer films produced by the best artists and covering a wide range of subjects. Those catering to the native Chinese trade prefer serials and films of a lurid or sensational nature.

Denny Recovering

Reginald Denny, star of "The Leather Pushers," "The Abysmal Brute" and "The Spice of Life," who was seriously injured when his motor car turned over on Sunset boulevard in Hollywood, is reported to be recovering at a satisfactory rate. His injuries were severe and he will be in a cast for several weeks, but attending physicians state that his unusual strength and all-around fitness are making his recovery easy.

With First National

Horace T. Clark, formerly Oriental representative for David P. Howells, has become associated with First National in the same capacity.

To Continue Paramount Investigation

some of the big producing companies. For the purpose of combining the purchasing power in this respect of such first class exhibitors the First National Exhibitors Circuit was formed. Members were allotted territories, under a franchise, on a percentage basis. To get the better class of product the witness, who said he then owned about seventeen houses in the Washington territory, joined the organization.

The circuit, he said, inspired the Independents to put forth a better product and also supplied for that product an outlet in the open field. Under his new agreement the witness was also a distributor for such material. First National, he stated, was organized primarily to offset the block booking system. The circuit was made up of men, he said, who desired the best on the market and were on the "dark side" as far as Paramount product was concerned. The object of the new association was to match as closely as possible the Paramount product.

A Texan exhibitor and a director of First National about this time sold his franchise. It was to determine whether he could sit on the Board of Directors and why he had disposed of his holdings that the organization in the fall of 1919 was called into session in New York City. The exhibitor said that he had been "squeezed" and had to sell.

At that time, Moore said, it seemed obvious that Paramount was desirous of controlling First National by making inroads on the stars and directors which the Independents developed. The price of Famous films was fixed at a ratio which was far beyond the reach of the average Independent, he testified. The product of the Independent market had thus dwindled. Famous offerings were the big attractions and the Independent exhibitors were doomed unless they could present a product which would match in some respects such films.

The meeting terminated in the holding of another at which the topic of how to overcome such difficulties was discussed. Other meetings followed when it was finally decided that a sub-franchise plan would be of the greatest assistance to the "squeezed" exhibitor. Under this plan, Moore stated, the scope of the Independents' chance to get good product was broadened, as was the opportunity for a greater outlet of these films.

At such meetings the block booking system, and how to combat it, was constantly discussed. While in session in Chicago in April, 1920, the working out by First National of a national booking plan was considered.

At this meeting Jules Mastbaum was a speaker. He referred to the Stanley Booking Company as a successful machine and said that First National, according to Moore, with its large membership should accomplish wonderful things.

A committee was formed to go into the merits of the establishing of a booking company for First National. It was explained, the witness testified, that if such a project met with success the sub-franchise proposition would automatically prove unnecessary. The enthusiasm of the organization was goaded by Mastbaum's comment, according to Moore, that all producers would be "eating out of" First National's hand within six months after such a plan was put into operation.

This committee went to Philadelphia to get a perspective there of the working basis of the Stanley company. Stanley directors were present at this conference at which, Moore said, it was made plain by them that the best policy to be followed would be to have First National merge with them on the booking proposition. Under such a merger Stanley, due to its experience over the new organization, would retain its seniority in the business, Moore said.

Moore stated that he refused to accede to such a plan. When others of the committee disagreed with him and told him that during the session he had assumed the attitude of a prosecutor in cross examining the Stanley directors, the Washington theatre owner tendered his resignation and advised members of First National that such a merger would be unwise.

"The kid gloves of the business," is Moore's expression for describing Paramount quality and quantity. In Washington, however, Moore said he got the Paramount pictures that the Loew theatre discarded Time and time again Moore testified he enedavored to get an even break on the Paramount product. Lots of promises were made but in the long run the old policy prevailed, he stated.

In 1922 when he received a letter from Paramount that the 50-50 proposition with Loew on dividing the films of the company was off, Moore remarked: "After I received that I told my brother I was worn out on the booking of pictures and that he should do it. He has looked after the booking end for the Rialto ever since."

The elimination of the block booking system, testified this expert, would mean reducing to an insignificant basis boards of censorship all over the country. Preachers of the gospel, under such a change, would then less frequently be able to conduct tirades against the industry. Last but not least the exhibitor would not be the goat in the unknowing public eye. Such a condition will be brought about only when the exhibitor has the right to use his own judment in selecting what films shall be flashed on the screen of his house, Moore emphasized.

A light in this direction is breaking over the movie horizon, Moore soliloquized. The "sausage" system of turning out product is ending the stage of its dominancy. Individuality is gaining strength in the industry more and more. Stars are entering the independent field and putting into their product their own singular and artistic ideas.

Forty Exhibitors in Washington Discuss New Organization Plan

WASHINGTON, D. C.—Initial steps were taken at the opening meeting of exhibitors from Maryland, Virginia, North Carolina and of the District of Columbia for the formation of a zone organization which is also to embrace the State of Delaware. About forty exhibitors gathered at the Arlington Hotel on October 30 to discuss a plan previously outlined by Jake Wells, of Richmond, Va. Harry M. Crandall was chosen temporary chairman of the meeting, and Samuel Boyd, his secretary, was selected as secretary of the meeting.

Mr. Crandall explained that the desire is for closer co-operation between the exhibitors of the states named, and including the District of Columbia, they having the same interest in a single exchange center. The idea is to form a sort of model zone organization which would later be taken up by the rest of the country, each zone representing a film exchange district, there being twenty-six of these throughout the United States.

The Plan Sketched

Mr. Crandall further explained that each of the zones would be entitled to one or more votes as might later be determined upon in the formation of a national organization, it to be very much like the Senate of the United States, wherein each state has equal representation and equal voice in the legislation for the whole country. The headquarters of the organization would be in Washington, where it would be free from domination of state association interests, and its affairs would be in the hands of a paid manager, assisted by such office staff as might be found necessary, the whole work being supervised by the representatives from the zones who would come to Washington at stated periods at the expense of the national organization to attend to its affairs.

Mr. Crandall condemned the M. P. T. O. A. for "its lack of activities that would benefit the individual exhibitor." He declared that at the last convention of the association the entire three days were spent in electioneering.

He urged the formation of a real business organization, at least in this territory, with the hope that the scope of its work would be extended in a national way, and he added that he expected that from this meeting different suggestions would be obtained which would help in the formation of a national association.

Present at the opening meeting, in addition to representatives from the states named, were representatives of the exhibitors of Michigan, Texas and South Carolina, where a great deal of interest has been exhibited in the proposal for the formation of a new organization. These men were given an opportunity to express their views and the members of prospective Zone 1 were greatly heartened by their promises of co-operation.

Jake Wells, of Richmond, reviewed the meeting of the Virginia exhibitors held at the Arlington Hotel several weeks ago, at which this plan was broached. He gave credit to William Brandt, of New York, as the originator of the plan. He criticized the present M. P. T. O. A. for its "do nothing" policy.

"I have seen the efforts of the national organization, and I am not here to say anything disparagingly about it," said Mr. Wells, "but I think I express the opinion of everybody here that it is not functioning to advantage. You can go to one of these national conventions and you find that the whole time is taken up with who is to be president, etc. At the convention here a slate was all made up, and the only question was of railroading it through. There was some opposition, but the time was devoted to doing away with that opposition rather than conducting other business. Personally, I think Sydney Cohen is one fine fellow and that he has done well. It is not Mr. Cohen who is wrong, because it would be the same if we had Mr. Smith, of California, or Brown, of Texas, as our president. It is the principle which has come to exist and which does not work out."

Mr. Wells pointed out that attendance at the national conventions was limited very largely to members living within a small radius of the convention city. The proposed zone system would do away with that condition because there would be but twenty-six delegates, and their expenses would be paid by the national organization from a budget made up by the zone organization, which would assure strictly a national and not simply a local representation. There would be no electioneering because the delegates would be selected by the organizations in the zones, for there is no desire to do away with the present state associations, and this governing board would simply select its chairman in much the same way as a business corporation would act.

Wants a Lobbyist

"I want to see this organization taken out of New York and put in Washington, where legislation which we are all interested in originates," added Mr. Wells. "I want to see a paid, competent executive on the job in Washington at all times to hobnob with the members of Congress and create a good-will for the industry."

He explained that the finances of the national organization would be raised by contributions from the state units through the respective zones in much the same way as the country is divided up by the producers. The zone in which Virginia, Maryland, Delaware and the District of Columbia would be the constituent parts, would be a 3 per cent. territory, and the theatre owners in this zone would be called upon to make up 3 per cent. of the annual requirements of maintaining the national organization and its Washington headquarters.

Throughout his talk Mr. Wells endeavored to make it plain that there was no desire on his part, or those interested with him, in the formation of a zone system for the elimination either of the existing state organizations, or the M. P. T. O. A. He declared that the state organizations are necessary because they would take up local matters, and the zone unit could co-operate where there are exchange district interests at stake. He expressed the hope that once the zone organizations began functioning, the M. P. T. O. A. would be remodelled so as to conform to those units.

Max Bryant, president of the recently-formed South Carolina Exhibitors' League, endorsed the move proposed by Mr. Wells and stated that he would go back to his fellow members and try to "sell" them the idea.

"I think you can feel reasonably assured of the co-operation of North Carolina and South Carolina in this move," he said, "because I have also been authorized by President Henry B. Varner, of the North Carolina League, to pledge his co-operation. We hope to form a two-state organization within the next two or three months, and are very much interested in your plan."

Col. H. A. Cole, president of the Texas Motion Picture Theatre Owners stated that his association stood ready to join any movement that gave evidences of being able to accomplish something. He complained that the national association had been very lax in its legislative activity, and also that it had failed utterly in any effort to properly organize the exhibitor organizations of the various states.

"No Antagonism"

President Frank Durkee, of the Maryland Motion Picture Theatre Owners' Association, while expressing favor for the proposed formation of a zone which would include the states named, strongly opposed the overthrow of the present national association and declared that most of the things of which the exhibitors complain resulted from the lack of co-operation of the state organizations. Mr. Wells took occasion to say that there is no antagonism toward the present organization, but rather an indifference on part of the state organizations which has resulted in the lack of co-operation complained of by Mr. Durkee.

E. T. Crall, of Newport News, president of the Virginia exhibitor association, declared himself to be very enthusiastic over the idea advanced by Mr. Wells.

After the conclusion of the remarks, various state presidents and others in the room were asked to give their views. Judge Alfred J. Murphy, legal counsel for the past two years of the Michigan State League, who is in Washington as a delegate to the Investment Bankers Convention, brought the greetings of the Michigan organization.

"The opportunity for organization has been criminally neglected and wasted in this country," he charged. "I was at the Washington convention and saw the very high-handed tactics that, in my judgment, would have disgraced any corner political gathering."

He suggested that the exhibitors get reports from the national organization and analyze them, and also get reports on the operation of the "Movie Chats."

The speech of Judge Murphy was followed by a resolution by I. Weinberg, of Lexington, Va., authorizing the temporary chairman to name a committee to formulate a concrete plan to be presented to the meeting when convened on October 31, the plan to include a rough outline of the by-laws providing for the formation of a zone organization to include Maryland, Virginia, Delaware and the District of Columbia. The committee named by Mr. Crandall included President Frank Durkee, of the Maryland league; Louis Rome, of Baltimore; President E. T. Crall, of the Virginia league; Jake Wells, of Richmond; Maurice Davis, of Washington, and President Harry M. Crandall, of the District of Columbia league.

City Officials All Over Country Enthusiastic About Movie Day

THE Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America announces that the past week has been marked by definite accomplishments in the campaign for National Motion Picture Day on November 19. Various state units of the national body have begun to show concrete results from the preliminary meetings which have been held during preceding weeks and the entire country is pointing toward November 19 as the biggest day in the year as it relates to the public's contact with the industry.

Following the mass meeting of theatre owners in Pittsburgh, at which ways and means were mapped out, Hon. William A. Magee, mayor, urged the proper observance of National Motion Picture Day in a public proclamation, dated October 19, as follows:

"For the creation of a fund to be devoted to the efforts to secure a united organization for the betterment of motion picture entertainment, Monday, November 19, 1923, has been set aside throughout the United States as National Motion Picture Day. Many of the theatres have pledged twenty-five per cent. of the gross receipts of the day to such fund. The marvelous motion photography, now become universal in its scope, has done great things for the enlightening and education of the people, besides having always responded as an advertising agency in all patriotic and social movements. The leaders of the motion picture enterprise are ambitious to go forward, improve their art and their standards, perfect their organization and bring about a greater degree of co-operation in order to further advance this instrument of public entertainment and public good. The appreciation of the public will be of great aid in this effort. I call the attention of all of our people to this important movement, recommending support of it and urging attendance at the motion picture theatres in such significant numbers as will encourage the leaders in their praiseworthy and far-reaching enterprise."

Another endorsement of national importance has come from Hon. James J. Davis, U. S. Secretary of Labor, Washington, D. C. Mr. Davis is also Director-General of the Loyal Order of Moose. He states: "I am glad to endorse National Motion Picture Day. The Loyal Order of Moose has employed motion pictures as a means of education in many of its activities. A greater use of this agency will bring wonderful results."

In New York City, following the announcement of last week, a meeting was called by the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce and the following letter sent to committee members: "You have previously been advised by National Headquarters of your appointment on the committee for National Motion Picture Day, designated to be held on Monday, November 19. You are now summoned to attend a meeting of this committee at the Hotel Astor, Room K, on the 8th floor, on Friday, October 26, at 2 p. m. sharp.

"You will realize that the time between now and November 19 is very short and a great deal must be accomplished by the committee to make National Motion Picture Day a huge success in this territory.

"This office is advised by National Headquarters that the response of exhibitors throughout this country and Canada is very great and it would ill become the exhibitors of New York City and adjacent territories to fall behind the outlying states and territories of the United States. We must show the rest of the country that we have not merely endorsed National Motion Picture Day by a written resolution, but by action.

"It is therefore incumbent upon you to figuratively roll up your sleeves and get to work with vim and vigor and show the rest of the country what the Empire State can do to make National Motion Picture Day a genuine success, from a civic as well as a financial point of view.

"President O'Reilly will not take 'no' for an answer for your non-attendance at this meeting. A roll call of the committee will be called and it is hoped that your name will be among those present."

The meeting was held as announced and it is reported every member of the committee was present. Sydney S. Cohen, national president, Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, presided and called attention to the aims and constructive purpose of National Motion Picture Day. After Mr. Cohen had concluded his address, Mr. Harry Davis, of Pittsburgh, a member of the National Board of Directors, was called upon and told of the very practical way in which affairs were being handled in Western Pennsylvania. Mr. Davis stated that Mayor Magee, of Pittsburgh, and the president of the city's Chamber of Commerce, representing five thousand business and professional men, had issued separate proclamations of approval and endorsement for National Motion Picture Day, urging attendance at the theatres on November 19. He told of this co-operation between official and civic heads of Pittsburgh as being of an entirely mutual character, as both recognized the great value of Pittsburgh motion picture theatres as institutions for community service.

Following Mr. Davis, Charles L. O'Reilly, president of the Theatre Owners' Chamber of Commerce, voiced his enthusiastic support of the movement and urged all New York theatre owners to get behind it and make a record of which they could be proud. J. Arthur Hirsch and Hy Gainsboro also spoke in favor of National Motion Picture Day, as did Charles Steiner and Sol Brill.

Following their remarks, reports were read outlining the plans and campaigns which are being followed in other sections of the country. A special committee was then announced to act as points of contact between the exhibitors and the general committee and to take care of the special exploitation of the celebration. Comprising this committee is: Borough of Manhattan—J. Arthur Hirsch, chairman; Charles Steiner, Sol Raives. Borough of Brooklyn—John Manheimer, chairman; H. Rachmill, Samuel Sonin, Charles Schwartz. Borough of Bronx—Joseph Jaime, chairman; Henry Suchman, Benjamin Knoble. Borough of Queens—Hy Gainsboro, chairman; J. Goldberg, A. Suzzo. New Jersey—Joseph Seider, chairman; Louis Rosenthal, Joseph Stern, David Kaiserstein.

It was also arranged at this session that a monster mass meeting of all theatre owners of Greater New York be held at the Hotel Astor on Monday afternoon, November 5. Two meetings of the committee in charge of this mass meeting are being held this week. Also, for use in the Greater New York territory, special auto banners, as well as lobby signs, are being prepared and 10,000 extra one-sheets are being printed. The entire city is being districted into zones, with an exhibitor captain in each zone, who is given a set of cards, with each theatre in his zone on a separate card. For the purpose of lining up every theatre and securing from each a pledge of support, these exhibitor captains are visiting the various theatres in person.

The activities on behalf of National Motion Picture Day are constantly checked up and furthered in Southern California by means of a weekly meeting, held every Monday at Los Angeles. The latest report from that state announces that Mr. Robert A. McNeill is actively behind the movement in San Francisco and that plans are culminating for the complete success of the celebration on November 19.

The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Missouri met on October 19 at St. Louis and endorsed National Motion Picture Day one hundred per cent. Plans were immediately formulated for Missouri's participation. About seventy-five theatre owners attended the meeting, which also unanimously passed a resolution favoring the repeal of the Federal Admission Tax. Among those present were: I. W. Rodgers, J. D. Reese, Charles S. Goodnight, J. E. Smith, Mrs. M. J. Moore, Richard Stemple, L. C. Hehl, Fred Wehrenberg, Charles Warner, Joseph Mogler, Joseph J. Walsh, W. O. Reeves, John Gentner and Joseph Wagner.

Cohen Meets Rochester and Toronto Exhibitors

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, left New York on Monday, October 29, for Rochester, to meet with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western New York.

A meeting of the board of directors of the national organization is also being held at Rochester and the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America is presenting an engraved resolution to George Eastman in recognition of his public spirit and service to the industry.

From Rochester Mr. Cohen goes to Toronto to meet with the Ontario Division of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Canada, which meeting is also being attended by the officers and board of directors of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. The Canadian organization is being presented with an engrossed charter of affiliation with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

Varner Opens N. C. Theatre; Many Send Congratulations

Never was a metropolitan city theatre opened and dedicated with more fitting ceremony nor more wholesale demonstration of good wishes than that which attended the formal opening of Colonel Henry B. Varner's wonderful new theatre in the thriving little town of Lexington, N. C. Colonel Varner has long been a telling power in the industry, but not until the flowers, telegrams (and personal attendance) from all over the United States began to pour in did the Colonel really know in what high esteem he is recognized and held by the entire industry.

The Lexington is a monument to the progressiveness of Colonel Varner and his pride in his home town, and would do credit to a town ten times the size of Lexington. Constructed along the most modern lines, with a seating capacity of 1,500, it is, with possibly three or four exceptions, the most gorgeously and completely equipped theatre in the South.

For its formal opening, exchange, distributor and exhibitor representation from more than half the states in the Union were present. In addition, more than 200 expressions of good wishes in the form of flowers, telegrams and letters were received. Among those who sent congratulatory messages were the following: Richard A. Rowland, E. A. Eschmann, Louis B. Mayer, Maurice Tourneur, John Francis Dillon, John McCormick, Sylvia Breamer, Virginia Browne Faire, Colleen Moore, John McDermotte, Robert Leiber, Joseph M. Schenck, Buster Keaton, Richard Walton Tully, H. B. Schwalbe, E. M. Saunders, Adolph Zukor, Earl J. Hudson and Carl Laemmle, in addition to almost every prominent exhibitor and exchange man in the territory.

What is perhaps the outstanding feature of the opening is the fact that the clergy, represented by two able Lexington ministers, set the seal of their approval on the theatre by attending and taking part in the formal dedication.

Another monument to the industry is to be erected in the Old North State, according to present plans of the Ware-Simpson-Estridge Company, who have announced that they will erect, starting on January 1, 1924, in the town of Gastonia, N. C., one of the most modern theatres in the state. The company is composed of J. W. Ware, J. E. Simpson and James E. Estridge, and marks a combination of the interests which are at present operating the picture theatres in Gastonia, J. E. Estridge, junior member of the new company, being manager of the Gastonia Theatre and secretary-treasurer of the North Carolina M. P. T. O.

All district supervisors for Southern Enterprises theatres have now been placed. Ford Anderson, formerly in charge of Carolina theatres, goes to the Atlanta office; Arthur J. Amm remains in Florida; E. R. Rogers retains the Tennessee territory; Montgomery Hill, formerly of the booking department, becomes Carolina supervisor; E. L. Perry goes to Oklahoma and A. E. Fair remains in Texas. A. C. Cowles, who has been Public Relations representative since the resignation of Turner Jones, becomes booker in the Charlotte office; John Thomas, formerly manager of the Vaudette, Atlanta, will be with Mr. Rogers as booker; Loyless Kennedy, formerly with the Howard, Atlanta, will book for Florida theatres, and DeSalles Harrison remains in Atlanta as booker. The real estate department, of which Louis Cohen is head, will maintain offices in the Howard Theatre building, Atlanta, for some time yet.

The Orpheum Theatre, Memphis, was destroyed by fire Tuesday night of last week, the loss being $100,000.

W. D. Patrick, of Florida, was in Atlanta the past week buying service for the New Palace, at Dothan, Ala.

Among theatre men in Atlanta the past week were Clyde W. Cheek, of LaGrange, Ga.; John Snyder, Bessemer, Ala.; Montgomery Hill; Louis Kalbfield, Palatka, Fla.

Baltimore

Because eight picture theatres were opened to the public on Sunday night, October 21, and benefit performances were given to help raise funds to build the new West Baltimore General Hospital, an attack upon having such picture shows given on Sunday was made by the Maryland Baptist Union Association which was in convention at the Eutaw Place Baptist Church, and a petition was sent to the police commissioner of Baltimore City asking that he stop future performances of the kind. Approximately $2,500 was realized on the eight Sunday performances. Commissioner Gaither refused to listen to the protest of the Baptist Union.

Due to the efficient management of U. S. Brummell, house manager of the Century Theatre, Baltimore, the audience viewing the performance at that playhouse was unaware of a fire which occurred next door and caused four alarms to be sounded and twenty-six companies to respond, on Wednesday night, October 24.

Mr. Brummell ordered all the storm doors closed to keep out the sound of the arriving engines and allow no smoke to penetrate to the auditorium.

Two motion picture machines were wrecked by some unknown person at the Arcadia Theatre, 320 South Broadway, managed by James Legrande, on Tuesday night, October 23.

Washington, D. C.

Lawrence Beatus next week will celebrate the fifth anniversary of Loew's Palace Theatre, of which he is manager. In anticipation of a special program which will be put on that week, he has arranged for the redecoration of the theatre. A handsome new carpet has been laid over the entire floor space, and five musicians have been added to the already large orchestra. An order has been placed with a local florist for the further decoration with chrysanthemums, autumn leaves and fall flowers.

In appreciation of his efforts on their behalf, the members of the Managers' Association of Washington, D. C., last week presented to Charles W. Linkins, who operates the Strand and other theatres in the District of Columbia, a handsome gold watch and chain. The presentation was made by Roland Robbins, manager of Keith's Theatre, at a luncheon tendered to Mr. Link'ns at the New Willard Hotel. Twenty-six members of the association, which includes the managers of both the motion pictnre, vaudeville and legitimate houses, were present.

"Bob" Long, manager of Moore's Rialto Theatre, came prominently into the limelight October 28 when the Washington Post carried nearly a column giving a biographical sketch of this popular manager. This story was the fourth of a series of introductory sketches of the men who furnish entertainment to the Washington public. It divulged the fact that "Bob" Long, christened Robert Everett Long, has been in the amusement game twenty-three years, although he has not yet reached his 37th birth anniversary. He joined the Moore enterprises in 1918.

This story makes known the fact that Bob Long wears a wrist watch. There is a story attached to the timepiece which endears it to him, and makes it a matter of interest to his friends. On the back of the watch there is inscribed, "Robert E. Long, from Woodrow Wilson, December, 1920." It is a Christmas gift from the former president in appreciation of Mr. Long's many kindnesses in providing Mr. Wilson with movie entertainment during the serious illness with which he was afflicted toward the end of his term. Mr. Long visited the White House every morning at 11 o'clock with reels of films with which to entertain Mr. Wilson.

This Community Theatre a Success

DENISON, IOWA, has an opera house owned by a corporation in which the citizens of Denison and the farmers for miles and miles around own stock. This opera house, costing $125,000, was built ten years ago and has been a success from the first day, according to Phillip A. Schlumberger, one of the directors who was in Omaha recently on business. Picture shows are conducted there almost every day, dropping out only occasionally for a day to give place to a road show or musical comedy.

"By throwing our money together and organizing a big corporation," said Mr. Schlumberger, "we were able to build a big opera house, something that is really a credit to our town, a town of 4,000, and we are now able to get the big pictures that are shown in the metropolitan cities, something the little houses in the small towns do not get."

When the organization of this corporation was first spoken of and popular stock subscriptions were solicited, naturally there were plenty of "Doubting Thomases," but time has shown that it was a wise move, for during the ten years the opera house has been in existence, it has steadily paid a small dividend to the stock holders and has every year made a small payment on the indebtedness.

Philadelphia Exhibitor Rally to Boost Motion Picture Week

The M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland will gather on November 11 at Fay's Theatre in the final rally for making Motion Picture Week the most successful in its history. Speakers will be Dr. J. H. Schad, Charles Rappoport and George P. Aarons. In promoting the publicity for Motion Picture Week the local association has postered all the central city stores, billboards, picture theatres and other avenues for drawing attention to the event.

After many years' service in a managerial capacity with the Appel Circuit at the Wizard in York, Pa., Jimmie Kelly is now transferred to the Orpheum at Reading, Pa., where he will be engaged in a similar capacity. The Rajah Theatre of Reading, which formerly was a legitimate house, has now been converted into a picture theatre under the same management.

It is the purpose of Jack Flynn and Sam Frank, who recently took over the Palace and Eagle theatres in Hammonton, N. J., having purchased the equities of Charles Culshaw, to go exclusively into the movie field. These two houses are the only film theatres in the town and are first links in a chain which the new owners propose to control. Both men have had long experience in the film business, having been identified with the F. B. O. for many years. Under the new management the Eagle Theatre will be opened only on Saturdays while the Palace will have a six day week program during the winter and the arrangements reversed during the summer.

Having purchased the Hippodrome Theatre of Allentown, George Bennethum has made plans for converting the structure into an office and store building. Mr. Bennethum, who is associated with the Wilmer and Vincent interests, also has an equity in the Victor Theatre of that town and will continue the operation of this house under the management of Walter Reinbold. There also has been added to the Bennethum chain the Karlton, in Quakertown, Pa., and with the remodeling and modernizing of the structure and equipment, it will be placed under the direction of Manager John F. Barrett, recently assistant manager of the Pottstown Theatre of Pottstown, Pa. Manager Kline Henderson, formerly in charge of the Bennethum theatres in Coatesville, York, Harrisburg and Baltimore, has been assigned to conduct the Broad Theatre at Souderton, Pa., just added to the Bennethum chain and making a total of eighteen theatres under its control.

J. Luke Gring, manager of the Pottstown, Pa., theatres under the Bennethum control, was given a testimonial dinner by the host of friends he enjoys in the town and surroundings, when they took over the Elks Club for the celebration of his birthday.

A change of date for the opening of the new Milgram Theatre, at 23rd and South streets, has been made by the proprietor, Myer Milgram, who set the date at December 1 instead of early November.

Thanksgiving day will be devoted to the opening ceremonies as arranged by George Hurd for his newly constructed Liberty Theatre in Pen Argyle, Pa. Friends in the film and exhibitor field of Philadelphia will join in the house warming.

Roy H. Beattie, manager of the Palace Theatre, who was confined in the Jewish Hospital for several months, and who recently returned from a rest in northern Canada, is again confined in the institution suffering from a relapse of his previous affliction. His physicians venture no opinion as to the ultimate result of the relapse.

Andrew Hettesheimer, who conducts the Orpheum Theatre, a neighborhood house, has advanced his admission prices from 20 to 25 cents. Another case of high costs, but Hettesheimer says his patrons expect additional pictures and an augmented orchestra for the extra admission fee.

The Margaret Theatre, Huntington, W. Va., a new movie house, with B. N. Johnson as manager, was recently opened. The theatre cost approximately $75,000.

"The Common Law" is now in its third week at Gifts Theatre and still going strong. It will probably be held over for an additional week. "Potash and Perlmutter" is repeating at the Family for the last half of the current week, having previously been seen at the Capitol.

Jones, Linick, Schaefer May Purchase the Woods Theatre

It is reported that negotiations are under way by Jones, Linick & Schaeffer and Marcus Loew for the purchase of the Woods Theatre, where "Scaramouche" is now running successfully, from Al H. Woods, the owner. It is said to be planned if the house is taken over by the new interests, to run feature photoplays there, as the long run of "The Covered Wagon" and the present run of "Scaramouche" has proved the theatregoers of this city and surrounding territory will pay top prices for top pictures. The McCormick estate has issued a denial that the Apollo Theatre will make way for an office building.

Frank A. P. Gazzolo, manager of the Studebaker, Imperial and Victoria theatres, has purchased for $50,000 cash the 50x175 feet of ground with old improvements on the northeast corner of West Madison street and Keeler avenue. Mr. Gazzzolo has no immediate plans for improving the corner.

Work will start within a month on a $750,000 theatre, store and apartment building at the northeast corner of Archer avenue and Leavitt street, it is announced by R. Levine & Co., theatre designers and builders, and E. P. Ruppert, architect. The theatre, to seat approximately 2,250, has been leased by the Gregory Amusement Company, which now operates fifteen playhouses in Indiana and has several houses under construction. The site of the new south side theatre fronts 380 feet on Archer. The apartments are on the Leavitt street side. Completion date is set for about May 1.

The Harris Theatre, after a few weeks' occupation by legitimate shows, will go back to pictures on November 4, when "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" comes for an extended run. There also is some thought of using the Garrick Theatre, for several years the home of Shuberts' leading attractions, for movies after the run of "The Gingham Girl" is finished.

Walter Downie, the well known manager, is back in harness after a three months' illness at the American Hospital. Downie will have charge of the New Apollo Theatre at Crawford and North avenue, which opens this week. This will make three Apollo theatres in the city, one in the loop for legitimate attraetions and one on the South Side with movies.

Paul Goudron is booking vaudeville into the Edwards Theatre on the South Side and this will give the house a mixed program.

W. G. Lloyd, movie manager here, has gone to Fort Atkinson, Wis., where he has sold the Lyric Theatre to Will Grant, who will improve the house.

The many friends of Lester Bryant, lessee of the Playhouse Theatre on Michigan boulevard, will be glad to hear that he has added the Central Theatre to his chain of houses and has leased the cosy little theatre on East Van Buren street for ten years and will make many improvements in the house, which will open under the new management on November 12.

Eddie Silverman has been re-elected president of the Chicago Film Board of Trade, J. L. Freidman, vice president, H. C. Hollander, secretary, and I. Maynard Schwartz, treasurer. Installation of the officers will take place at the annual banquet on November 10.

E. M. Newman opens up his fall season at the Orchestra Hall this week and will show travel films Wednesday and Friday evenings and at Saturday matinees during the winter season.

Manager McCurdy of the Randolph Theatre has a novel display in front of his house that attracts the crowds. Last week, with "The Drivin' Fool" as the feature, he had the minlature autos race continuously on a moving belt, and with the display at the State street entrance, it proved a good ad for the film.

It is understood that the plans for the new movie house that the Masonic Association plans to erect on the site of the Colonial Theatre on Randolph street will also include the site of the Randolph Theatre, and in that event the lease Universal has on that house will have to be taken care of, as it has almost four years to run, according to an official of Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

The many friends of Dee Robinson, movie theatre manager of Peoria, Ill., will be sorry to hear of the serious illness that confines him to his home. Dee is the head of the Madison and Palace theatres in Peoria and is interested in the chain of movie houses in that part of the state, and the trade hopes for his speedy recovery.

The Bell Theatre at 2407 West Madison street has been taken over by Frank Simec, who will make some improvements. He also owns the Crystal Theatre at 2401 West North avenue and will book for both houses.

The Hartley Theatre at East Chicago will reopen for business this week after a thorough overhauling and will be operated by the Gregory Brothers, who have a chain of houses in that distriet. The house will play feature movies with adequate musical programs.

The Victoria Theatre at Sheffield and Belmont avenue will be leased for a movie theatre in the near future, according to Frank Gazollo, owner of the property, who conducted the house for many years as a legitimate theatre. At the present time he is giving all of his time to the Studebaker Theatre on Michigan boulevard, which is playing to capacity business.

The Apollo Theatre at Peoria, Ill., put over a big hit with the movie fans of that city when it played Leah Baird in person and the feature, "The Destroying Angel," last week.

His many friends in film circles will be glad to hear that Will Hollander, publicity manager for Balaban & Katz, is recovering from an illness caused by a carbuncle, which kept him at the Michael Reese Hospital for ten days.

Now it's the women who are buying movie houses out here. Mrs. Frances Peart, owner of the Peart Theatre at Gillespie, Ill., has added the Frisina Theatre at Carlinville, Ill., to her string and will make improvements in the house. Here is Mrs. Bennett of the Princess Theatre at Whiting putting on a contest among her patrons for a kitchen outfit that is bringing in the business, far and wide.

S. R. Pirtle, who recently sold a couple of his movie houses, is adding to his chain again, just closing a deal with Jules Laurent and George Skouras for the Lyric Theatre at Mounds, Ill.

Maurice Carlson of Rosenfield and Hopp is receiving the sympathy of his many friends in the trade on account of the death of his wife at the family residence in Rock Island, Ill.

W. N. McConnell is now in active charge of the Empress Theatre at Decatur, Ill., and is playing both vaudeville and pictures. He also retains his interest in the Orpheum Theatre at Quincy.

Frank B. Mead and associates plan to build another movie house at Champaign, Ill., that will seat 1,000 and cost about $100,000.

A. G. Spencer and Charles Miller are building a movie house at Highland Park, Ill., and the house will open soon with feature movies. The new theatre will seat 600 and be located on Central avenue.

The Star Theatre at Evanston, Ill., has been renamed the Campus and Will Sturdivant will have charge of the house. He was formeriy manager of the Hoyburn Theatre.

Fitzpatrick & McElroy will build another movie house at Harvey, Ill., that will cost $125,000 and be the last word in theatre construction.

James Keough, well known exhibitor here, has gone to Milwaukee, where he has been made general manager of the Saxe Enterprises.

A. C. Boshee has been made advertising man for the Senate Theatre.

The assessor is still after some of the theatres in the Loop and several of them are not even on the assessment list, according to city law department.

Grover Barnard of Springfield, Ill., has bought the interest of Anton Bianchi in the American Theatre at Auburn, Ill.

Walter Strassheim has resigned his connection with Lubliner & Trinz and now is manager of the Ben Hur Theatre in Cicero.

The Ascher theatres are celebrating their fifteenth anniversary this week with a big program in each of the seventeen theatres. The houses have all been specially decorated for the event and record crowds have been on hand.

George Hickox is putting on presentations at the Chatterton Theatre in Springfield, Ill. James Douglass, who recently returned from an extended trip to South America, is helping him. Hickox also has taken over the Princess Theatre and will make some improvements.

Ralph Kettering reports that the Rialto Theatre will open its week with a "Greater Fall Season." In addition to first run movies it will have eight vaudeville acts, one of which will be a headliner from big time. He says that prospects are bright for one of the best seasons in the history of the house.

Joe Hopp of the Rosenfield-Hopp interests has returned from a trip to New York City, where he made arrangements to show some of the largest road attractions at the Fort Armstrong Theatre in Rock Island in addition to feature movies.

The advance reservation for movies has reached this city at last and Balaban & Katz report that many advance orders have been received for the present showing of "Little Old New York" at the Roosevelt Theatre. They seem logical, too, when one sees the line of people waiting to get inside the theatre to see this feature.

L. Rudolph, who sold the Violet Theatre at Milwaukee, has taken over the Emmett Theatre at 4338 Wentworth avenue from Brunhild and Young and will improve the house.

E. W. Seeley is erecting a movie house at San Jose, Ill., and he expects to open next month. This will be the only theatre in the town and he will feature both movies and musical programs.

E. L. Reid and Charley Nassau have organized a company at East Chicago to build a theatre there in conjunction with a new Elks Home. It is expected that the project will cost $300,000.

Kansas City

There is every indication that there is some truth to the rumor that Kansas City, Kansas, is to have another large theatre. The Electric Theatre of Kansas City, Kas., is the largest picture house in the state. It is expected that definite announcements will be made soon concerning the proposed theatre project.

The Brooklyn Theatre, Kansas City, opened October 20 after being closed four months. The house is running under a new policy and 10 cents is charged.

Northwest Clubwomen Voice Their Confidence in Films

Two hundred Northwest clubwomen, during a "better films" conference held in Minneapolis last week, voiced their confidence in the motion picture industry and expressed willingness to aid both producers and exhibitors in bringing about "clean, wholesome entertainment." It was the second regional conference of clubwomen and was arranged by Mrs. T. G. Winter, president of the General Federation of Women's Clubs. The first conference was held at Atlanta, Ga.

Among speakers who addressed the two days' conference were C. C. Pettijohn, general counsel of the producers-distributors' association; Theodore L. Hays, general manager of Finkelstein & Ruben theatres, and Mrs. Winter. W. A. Steffes was unable to attend because of illness.

Thirteen Southern Minnesota exhibitors who attended a regional conference arranged by W. A. Steffes last week at Windom went on record as being opposed to any general increase in admission prices at this time. Mr. Steffes, speaking before the conference, which was held in the Wonderland Theatre, said that reports of admission increases in the East were grossly exaggerated and that if any changes are to be made the prices should be lowered.

Exhibitors who attended the conference were: Redding and Stroud, Wonderland Theatre, Windom; W. L. Nichols, Strand, Fairmont; J. J. Casselman, Colonial, Tracy; F. M. Robinson, Comfrey and Grand, Springfield; A. C. Goodman, Star, Madelia; F. J. Armantrout, Lyric, Lakefield; George J. Ehlers, Grand, Worthington; R. E. Benson, Princess, Adrian; F. J. Beecham, Lyric, Brewster; John H. Themer, Cozy, Truman; E. D. Winter, Grand, Heron Lake; J. F. Roloff, Gem, Welcome; C. N. Carver, Star, Laberton, and John Campbell, Wonderland, Minneapolis.

This was the first of a series of conferences which Mr. Steffes plans to have with exhibitors throughout the Northwest during the next few months.

Manager Christ of Pantages, Minneapolis, scored a "beat" this week when he opened Monday with motion pictures of the Zev-Papyrus race. The films were brought here by airplane.

Albert Haugerud of Sanish, N. D., has made arrangements with Minneapolis exchanges to furnish him with films twice a week. He has rented a building for the purpose of presenting screen entertainment.

Plans for a $36,000 theatre at Chilton, Wis., were announced this week by Ernest Pfeffer, Milwaukee, and Ludwig Pilcher of Sheboygan, who will build the house. The theatre will seat 700.

A new theatre at Springfield, Minn., which replaces the Opera House, was opened last week by F. M. Robinson. The new house was made necessary when the Opera House was condemned sometime ago by the state fire marshal. It has been named the Grand.

The Majestic Theatre at Mazomanie, Wis., was taken over last week by Sadie Smith of Janesville, Wis. She will manage the house.

Manager Phelps of the Hennepin-Orpheum invited uniformed members of the naval reserve to be his guests on "Navy Day," and as an added attraction presented a picture showing the navy in action.

Jack Breheny Now Manager of Lurie Theatre, Oakland, Cal.

Jack Breheny recently tendered his resignation as western exploitation manager of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" to direct the destinies of the new Lurie Theatre at Oakland, and his former duties have been taken over by M. H. Newman, general manager of the seven western theatres of Universal. William H. McStay, who has been handling the publicity work on the big Universal production, has also gone over to the Lurie Theatre and his place with the Hugo picture has been taken by W. J. Murphy, formerly house manager of the Granada Theatre.

The difficulties between theatre owners and operators at Fresno, Cal., over wages and working conditions have been ironed out and a contract has been signed embodying a 1924 wage scale. Roy Stephenson, Pacific Coast representative of the international organization of theatre workers, went to Fresno to effect a settlement after three theatres had refused to sign the union's proposal calling for an increased wage and a six-day week.

The Rivoli Theatre, on Market street, near Seventh, San Francisco, has been leased by the Western Theatre Company to William B. Wagnon and Ida M. Wagnon for a period of twelve years at an aggregate rental of $462,000. Extensive alterations and renovations will be made and a costly organ will be installed. The present lessee had a lease of three years still to run, but believed it good business to cancel this and enter into a new one, even at a great increase in rental. For several months the theatre has been operated as a 10 cent picture house.

The G. & C. Theatre Company has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $10,000 by F. A. Giesa, H. F. Curran, Peter Wilson and F. J. Curran, all well known in the local amusement field.

Another incorporation of interest is that of the Herbert L. Rothchild Corporation, with a capital stock of $10,000, the directors being E. L. Brune, A. D. Duncan, L. Dunne, E. B. Smith, F. M. Moore, M. Giguiere and J. L. Begley.

The Alameda Theatres Company, Inc., also has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $10,000, the subscribers being Louis Kaliski, Frances Kaliski, L. S. Hamm and James E. Colston. This concern will operate in an east-bay suburb.

Hats off to Charles Thall, the newly appointed assistant to A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California. Thall has been kidded for years because he consistently wears a four quart iron derby. Now he has come out with a statement that the derby is the only hat to wear and dares any one to deny it. Since all on Film Row are anxious to sell him the film the slaps and slams have ceased.

John Trigerio, pioneer exhibitor of Fort Bragg, Cal., has purchased the theatre there operated by the United Theatres, Inc., and after November 3 will operate the two theatres in that city.

John Ratto, theatre owner of Jackson, Cal., was a recent visitor. Mining operations are being resumed there on a large scale and business is showing an improvement. Jackson was the scene last year of one of the worst mining disasters in the history of the West and business was seriously affected for months.

Clem Pope, manager of the T. & D. Theatre, Oakland, Cal., is waling on air these days, his wife having presented him with a 9-pound boy who has all the earmarks of being a howling success as a theatre manager.

P. J. Hanlon, owner of the Virginia Theatre, Vallejo, Cal., where the Pacific Coast navy yard is located, will shortly make a trip to San Diego to visit his son, who is in the naval service.

Recent visitors at San Francisco have included Jules E. Smith and wife, of the Butler Theatre, Tonopah, Nev.; Frank Panero, Delano, Cal., and M. L. Keller, of Dinuba, Cal.

Contracts have been awarded for the erection of a picture theatre for Lenore C. Moulin on Foothill Boulevard, near Seminary avenue, Oakland, Cal.

Canada

Al Gillis, new western district manager of theatres of the Famous Players Canadian Corporation, Ltd., will have his headquarters in the Capitol Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba. Mr. Gillis, who is recently from Minneapolis, is making no changes in the management of various Winnipeg houses, so that Walter Fogg continues at the Capitol, Miller Stewart at the Metropolitan and Clarence Tremblay at the Province. Mr. Gillis lived for a number of years at Vancouver before going to Minneapolis. Famous Players will erect a large new theatre at Saskatoon, Sask., it is announced, for both pictures and vaudeville.

K. Kelty, formerly manager of the Strand Theatre, Yarmouth, N. S., has been appointed manager of the Capitol Theatre, a new theatre at Kentville, N. S., owned by F. G. Spencer.

The Manitoba Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association has moved its headquarters to the Marlborough Hotel from Manitoba Hall. Regular luncheons are held twice monthly. The Manitoba association is the oldest continuous organization of exhibitors in Canada.

The reopening of the Strand Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, as a combination house, has been delayed because of the new demands made by musicians and stage employes. Ed Seamons is the manager of the Strand.

The Garrick Theatre, Winnipeg, Manitoba, one of the new medium-sized houses of the Manitoba capital, now is under the management of D. E. L. Fisher, one of the largest stockholders of the Garrick company.

Mrs. Wallace Reid is including Toronto, Montreal and Ottawa in her lecture tour with the picture, "Human Wreckage." She is appearing at the Palace Theatre, Montreal, the Loew Theatre in Ottawa and the Loew house, Toronto.

Los Angeles

Two of Sid Grauman's theatres that formerly were the bulwark for Paramount pictures are showing Associated Exhibitors' attractions. Charles Ray in "Captain Miles Standish" is in its fourth week at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, while Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" has gotten away to a big start at the Metropolitan. This is the first time that any releasing organization other than Paramount has had two pictures going at Grauman's downtown theatres. Sid expects to keep Pola Negri in "The Spanish Dancer" at the Rialto indefinitely.

"If Winter Comes" has broken the records for a long run at Taley's Broadway Theatre, having gone for the four weeks.

Marion Davies in "Little Old New York" is in its fifth week at the California and still going strong, according to Roy Miller, who is also carrying Elinor Glyn's "Six Days" over for its fifth week.

Pacific Northwest Booming; Exhibitors Are Optimistic

"What is one man's loss is another man's gain." The terrible earthquake disaster in Japan, followed by the disastrous fire in Berkeley, Cal., has given added impetus to the already booming lumbering industry of the Pacific Northwest. Lumber mills are all working on twenty-four hour shifts. There is no unemployment save of the voluntary variety. New mills are opening up, employing more men. Towns of 300 and 400 population have in many cases doubled and redoubled their growth.

This naturally means for Mr. Motion Picture Exhibitor an era of prosperity. It does not mean that the situation will remain permanently, but business at the present time in these districts, particularly in Washington and Oregon, is good enough to wring a smile from the most hardened pessimist. E. A. Lamb, traveling for Selznick Enterprises out of Seattle, is just back from a swing around all the key towns of Southern Oregon. He confirms the situation as told above and states that exhibitors are reporting excellent business. A new house has just been started in the Coos Bay district and will be rushed to completion.

The Manhattan Theatre, Charleston, Wash., which has been closed for many months, is reported sold by E. E. Wright to Dr. P. G. Schmidt.

Construction on the D. & R. Theatres Company's big house in Aberdeen is progressing rapidly. Dolan and Ripley are announcing a Christmas Eve opening with "The Green Goddess."

Managing Director S. K. Wineland of the Strand Theatre has secured the services of John Henry Lyons, who is proving a popular drawing card in connection with the first of the "Sing Them Again" series, "Close Harmony." The irresistible song leader is making the house ring with harmony, and sending 'em out in high spirits.

And speaking of music, the Coliseum Theatre is welcoming Osborne Putnam Stearns as its new orchestral conductor, succeeding Jacques Beaucaire, resigned.

It is further reported that Jack O'Dale has left the console of the Strand Theatre, where he was organist, and that Ernest Russell, who shared honors as organist with the renowned Oliver Wallace at the Liberty, has resigned. Mr. Russell will go to Tacoma for the Moore Amusement Company, the Tacoma J. & V. Company.

Heralded as probably the largest single deal of the year in this locality comes the announcement that Jensen & Von Herberg have contracted for the "Eighteen Specials" of the Warner Brothers for the coming season, for their entire circuit of Northwest theatres. L. K. Brin, of Film Classics, Inc., handles all distribution of the Warner product in the Pacific Northwest. The Classics will be given lavish presentation in J. & V. houses.

J. J. McIntyre, owner of the Columbian Theatre, Columbia City, Seattle, has sold out to Wm. Petrie. Mr. Petrie plans an exploitation campaign to put himself and his house on the map. Amateur nights and country store nights will be part of the program. The Columbian was opened last May.

Robert W. Bender, popular newspaperman, exploiteer and graduate of the University of Washington, this week succeeded Harold E. Daigler as manager of the Columbia Theatre. Mr. Daigler resigned but is not yet ready to announce his plans.

John Danz and O. T. Klawitter have consolidated their south end theatres, the Florence, Gem and Star, under one organization. The Danz houses are second runs. Mr. Danz has just announced the acquisition of the Educational short subjects 100 per cent. for his chain of five houses.

A rumor states that R. H. Glenn, who owns Glenn theatres in Newcastle, Burnett and Black Diamond, sustained a loss in the looting of the box office of the Black Diamond house last week.

The Film Theatre, Craigmont, Idaho, C. A. Warnacutt, is again telegraphing exchanges: "Discontinue service as I am no longer in business."

J. G. Beckman of the Rialto, Wenatchee, "where the big red apples grow," spent Tuesday in Seattle. It was visible that the mighty director tried to speak with repression and due modesty of his locality, yet admitted with alacrity that the bumper crop of magnificent apples is not only a sight worthy of coming miles to see, but spells success for the farmers and ranchers of the district. As Beckman is not himself a ranch owner, his enthusiasm is even more contagious. Incidentally while you are in Wenatchee, he will show you a capital program of pictures at his house.

W. H. Catherman of the Lyric Theatre, Huntington, Oregon, died last week. Mr. Catherman was also the express company's agent. The house is continuing, but no details of the present management have been received here.

The Coliseum Theatre is to have the first of the new Paramount pictures sold under the demonstration plan. It will open November 17 for an extended run. Pola Negri in "The Spanish Dancer" is the picture and it will be thoroughly exploited in co-operation with H. C. Eagles, Paramount exploiteer for the local territory, who will devote his entire time to this picture.

Manager LeRoy V. Johnson has promised a wild time for Hallowe'en patrons of his High Jinks at the Liberty Theatre on October 31. A genuine high jinks with trimmings will start promptly at 11 o'clock. Lots of the best features are being kept a deep, dark secret, but it has leaked out that a twenty-minute minstrel show, a free-for-all apple bobbing contest, and prizes for the best costumes and Hallowe'en pranks of all kinds, are on the list. Tickets are being sold in advance, up to seating capacity only.

Montana

Butte's pictures theatres have been dark since October 1, when the musicians and projectionists walked out after the managers had declined to consider their demand for wage advances. The new scale proposed an increase for orchestra men to $57.50 a week from $42.50, and $77.50 for leaders; the stage hands and projectionists asked $57.50 a week, an increase of $5. The houses made no effort to operate after the date set in the ultimatum of the employes. The doors were locked and have remained so, with signs explaining the situation.

Since the closing of the theatre doors there has at no time been any indication that either side would get together and adjust their differences. Clearly the theatre managers cannot afford to run the playhouses at a decided loss. On the other hand, the musicians claim that they cannot and will not return on the old schedule of salaries. It all points to a long deadlock.

The dance halls have signed up on the new schedule of salaries demanded by the union and the Empress Theatre likewise has complied. The Empress is a stock company and is benefiting by the local conditions. The theatre loving fans of Butte are visiting Anaconda, thirty miles from here, for film entertainment.

Connie Eckhart, manager of the Marlowe Theatre, was in Butte last week in conference with Merle Davis, general manager of the Ansonia Amusement Company.

Baumann in Hospital

Walter F. Baumann, who recently resigned as executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin after three years of service with that organization, was injured several days ago when his automobile collided with another machine. Mr. Baumann at present is convalescing at the Deaconess Hospital in Milwaukee, where it was found he had suffered severe injuries to his spine and lacerations and bruises to his face and head. Just when he will be able to leave the hospital it is impossible to say, according to the attending physicians.

Mr. Baumann, upon leaving the exhibitor organization, announced that he was entering the advertising field and he was laying his final plans for activities in that direction when the accident occurred.

Milwaukee

A move to name an attorney as successor to Walter F. Baumann, who resigned recently as executive secretary of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin, has been started by Fred Seegert, president of the organization. Although Mr. Seegert denies that he has anyone in particular in view for the post and insists that the association will take its time about naming the new secretary, he has announced that he is fully convinced that it will profit the organization to have a lawyer in the office.

Since Mr. Baumann's resignation Mr. Seegert has combined the presidential duties with those of secretary and as a result speaks from personal experience when he declares himself in favor of such a step.

"An executive secretary of our organization is continually called upon for advice in regard to contracts," he declared. "Knowledge of law plays an important part in such matters. Besides, some knowledge of law also is required in dealing with the railroad rate and the industrial commissions. Lobbying is another argument for an attorney.

"By hiring an attorney for the post we would not only get the services of a secretary but at the same time would obtain the services of a lawyer, thereby killing off two birds with one stone."

With betterment of the entire industry as their aim, sixty-five members of the Film Board of Milwaukee participated in a dinner meeting on the night of October 22, discussing such subjects as the uniform contract, salesmanship, arbitration, co-operation with exhibitors, and bicycling. It was one of the greatest rallies of exchange men ever held in the city and demonstrated clearly the growing power and closer unity of the seventeen offices in Milwaukee.

Leading the discussion were George B. Levine, president of the organization and head of Universal in Milwaukee; William Aschmann, head of Pathe; Harold Fitzgerald, in charge of First National, and Attorney Ben Koenig, who has been retained as secretary of the Film Board.

When Zev walked away from Papyrus and crossed the tape a winner in the international sporting event, it ended one race but marked the beginning of another. As a result of the second race, Milwaukee was able to see movies of the Zev victory two days after it took place. International News, it is claimed, reached the city slightly ahead of Pathe. The first was shown at the Garden Theatre, managed by Leo A. Landau, and the latter was at Ascher's Merrill, managed by Roy C. MacMullen.

Saxe's Strand Theatre in Milwaukee, managed by Eddie Weisfeldt, took on the appearance of a real circus during the recent showing of Jackie Coogan's "Circus Days." Everything from the circus ticket wagon to the clowns was there, the clowns being members of the Strand's famous Synco-Symphony orchestra.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

McManus Says That Opposition Should Be an Incentive to Do Better Exploitation

DURING the past few years we have used a number of stunts from Charles F. McManus, who manages the Colonial Theatre, Tacoma, Wash., for H. T. Moore, whose theatres are in affiliation with the Jensen & Von Herberg circuit. Most of these have been sent in by the press agents, chiefly the First National, since the house uses that product as the backbone of its program.

The other day Mr. McManus licked the stiffest opposition he has had, and he made such a thorough job of it that he was moved to pass the ideas along. And while he was doing this he dipped into so many other angles and handled them so intelligently that we are not going to try to better his own language, but quote his letter intact, feeling that it must be of real help to other managers.

Note what he says about opposition. That should be in a frame over the manager's desk in every picture theatre in the world—not merely the United States, for opposition has defeated more otherwise good men than all the other causes combined.

Mr. McManus says:

Last week we featured First National's The Isle of Lost Ships. During this time the Western Washington State Fair was held in Puyallup, which is only 15 miles from here. The attendance at the fair was 200,000 and as the population of Tacoma is at present 125,000, this week was looked upon as a "jinx" by the local showmen. Notwithstanding this fact, I had a hunch that if the right kind of exploitation was used business could be done during this week.

I have always gone on the theory that the tougher the weather conditions are, or opposition is, these things can be overcome to a great extent if the right kind of exploitation is used. I have always maintained that if the right kind of good pictures were released during the summer months that the average theatre could make money. To supplement this statement, I could say I played the West Bound Limited during the month of July, in one of the hottest weeks of the year, and broke all box office records for the past twelve months. Of course this meant a lot of work and the right kind of exploitation, but it proved time and money well spent.

Started in Early

Coming back to my original subject, our business on The Isle of Lost Ships during the fair week was excellent and as far as our receipts were concerned it might never have existed. Of course to put this over meant a lot of work, but I opened up on the picture a month in advance, using a full page in our monthly announcement to announce it. Starting last June, I have announced the block of pictures to be shown each month at the beginning of the month. It seems to me that this group announcement makes a lasting impression.

The second week in September I ran the regular trailer which is exceptionally good.

The week before the opening of this picture I used a display on each side of the stage which was illuminated during the intermissions and ran a special trailer I had made. The foyer contained three atmospheric displays while I used the regular 30 x 40 oil paintings and four compo-boards cutouts that I had made in front of the theatre. From time to time I have heralded the coming of any special picture by sandwiching announcements of the production with the front I was using on the picture I was playing. When I first started this I received comments that this might hurt business as it would detract from the bill that I was running, but I have found that it does not do so because by marking everything clearly with the words, "Coming Saturday" (the Jensen & Von Herberg week starts on Saturday instead of Sunday or Monday.—Ed.), it creates a desire to see and an interest in the coming attraction.

Advance Is Best

One day of advanced exploitation is worth two while the picture is playing, so I always try to have my window displays in place at least four days before the picture starts. Also when I use a float I find that the same rule applies, so on the Wednesday before the opening of The Girl of the Golden West six window displays were in place and the float on the street.

In regard to my front: If a nice sales front is put out on the average production and the big spreads reserved for the bigger pictures, the people know that a big front means a big picture and come flocking in while our regular patrons and those sold on the star value or the title of the average production do not hesitate to come anyway. The inclosed picture of my front will give a fair idea of the display.

I think that nothing creates a better atmosphere than to costume the ushers, which I do whenever possible, as this breaks the monotony of the regular uniform and also makes a setting for the feature.

Another exploitation angle which I think helps is the using of a wall of an old building that is being torn down to make way for a new hotel. This building is situated on the main business corner of our city and very valuable. Through a special arrangement with the contractor I am enabled to hang a twenty-four sheet display without any cost to us except passes for his family.

Played Up the Pups

Police dogs for exploiting pictures have been old since Strongheart, but police puppies are still better. That's what H. C. Farley, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., discovered.

He had the proud parents chained to a cage containing a litter of police puppies and he did not really need the atmospheric lobby he threw in for good measure.

TWO STUNTS WHICH MEANT TANGIBLE DOLLARS TO THE BOX OFFICE OF THE COLONIAL THEATRE, TACOMA

On the left is a float which helped to offset the effects of a local fair of unusual importance. On the right is a sign on a blank wall next the new hotel which is the most interesting thing to residents of Tacoma just now. Getting this location ensures that a large proportion of the population will see it, most of them daily. Opposition never scares Mr. McManus.

Six Day Sales Are Help to a Feature

"Six Day Sales," with one special bargain for each day, was a real helper in selling Six Days in Washington, Pa.

Floyd Morrow, of the Regent Theatre, tied the leading stores to the idea and arranged to let them have single passes to give with each of the bargains, getting it back, and more, on the special advertising they did for the sale and the Elinor Glynn feature, not to mention the window displays.

This is a simple stunt and can be worked without the ticket angle, if desired, but where the ticket is included, these can be laid off at half price and charged to advertising, with the realization that most of them will bring in one or more full paid tickets.

Rush Campaign Was Financial Success

Because The Meanest Man in the World was a rush booking at Loew's State Theatre, Cleveland, Irving Lesser, of Principal Pictures, sent Harry D. Wilson over to help out M. A. Malancy on the job, though Malancy generally manages to put things over whether or not he has assistance.

Wilson found the stage nicely set, for George M. Cohan, from whose play the picture was made, was appearing at a nearby house in The Song and Dance Man while Lytell, the star, was a feature at Keith's Palace, not far on the other side of the State.

For a starter Wilson got out some teasers in one, three and eight sheet sizes, stating that the meanest man in the world was to be seen on a specified date, without telling the house. That is old stuff, but it never yet failed. At a proper time these were covered with block paper telling that he would be at the State, and giving plenty of space to both author and star.

The hotel where Lytell stopped was bannered in welcome and for a lobby kicker there was a bulletin board on which were displayed twenty-five telegrams from other picture stars wishing Lytell a big week in person and on the film.

Twenty thousand rotos were put out in the house the preceding week, and line drawings were used for teasers. A whirlwind campaign put the picture over to big business.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

ON the program of which "The Fighting Blade" was the feature picture were three stage presentations, one orchestral number, the Papyrus-Zev race pictures and the Topical Review, the whole running two hours and eight minutes, the average time for this house. Of these, one of the stage numbers was put on for the first time in any theatre other than the legitimate, it being from "Up She Goes," by permission.

The number from the musical comedy was "Journey's End," a ballad duet for tenor and soprano, for which Hyman used in addition eight girl dancers. It opened with a set-piece cottage center stage, backed up by a cut wood drop. Window flower boxes at the large double windows of the cottage. With this set lighted by blue borders, amber foots one-quarter, an amber spot, an orange spot and two pink spots from the sides, the eight girls came on and went through the verse and chorus with an eccentric symphony dance. At their exit the vocalists came on from opposite side, the soprano going through the number first and then the tenor, with both finishing the second chorus in duet, the girl having gone into the house, lighted the windows and opened them while the tenor was going through the verse. For the finish the girls came on with prop banjoes as if to serenade the couple. As the amber foots went to blue, the blue borders dimmed off and the orange and one pink spot were dimmed out, the lights at the window were switched off and a second later a light appeared at the upstairs window, and the shade on it was lowered as the curtains closed.

Strip lights were used at these windows, the bottom one being augmented by an orange box lamp. A long string tied to the blind of the upper window lowered it.

The Symphonized Jazz introduced "Marchita," "Bonnie," "I Love You," "Saw Mill River Road" and "Foolish Child." The silver draw curtains were closed on the small stage, and on these were blue foot lights, magenta x-rays across top and two Mestrum booth floods of light green. Two flood lights from the dome of 150 amperes were color blend on the orchestra. The transparent columns at each side of the stage were green from the top, with magenta in the base.

The Prison Scene from "Faust" was preceded by a special trailer on the screen, announcing the cast and a brief synopsis of the scene. At opening the amber foots were on one-quarter, revealing the prison interior for which a back drop was used. On a bedding of straw to the side Marguerite was seen, asleep, under a straw spot from the side. Later the blue borders came up. Four Mestrum floods, two from the booth and two from the dome, were deep blue on the orchestra and side drapes. This number ran 15 minutes, with soprano, tenor and basso.

The dancers alone were put on in the Meditation from "Thais," with the silver cyclorama as background. Over this was draped the plush cyc so that the silver showed through. The ballet was costumed in white tarletan, wore red wigs and carried bouquets of red roses. At opening the llama cloth curtains at proscenium arch were closed, opening as the dance progressed. The concert-master playing the obligato was picked up by light blue overhead spot. On the dancers were light pink, rose pink and light blue spots. Magenta floods from the booth on the orchestra and sides, and rose pink floods from the dome on the orchestra only.

Hail to the Chief!

Most of the exploitation on The Midnight Alarm at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga., was supplied by the Chief of the Fire Department. He not only loaned Frank J. Miller a spare fire engine for a perambulator, but he made an interesting exhibit of duplicate apparatus in the lobby on the grounds that it would help advertise the fire department. It was costless and very effective exploitation.

Improved Amateurs

Bettering the crude "amateur night," Cliff Denham, of the Royal Theatre, Victoria, B. C., is using in its stead "discovery night." In this the idea is to try out three or four artists on a specified night with the idea of obtaining an attraction for the following week, and the plan is useful in that it gains the support of the music and dancing teachers, who are naturally anxious to place one of their pupils for the advertising advantage accruing.

ANDREE'S FEET MUST RUN PRETTY FAR UP HER LEGS

The press agent refers to the centrepiece in this display from Pantages, Kansas City, as a picture of Trilby's feet, but why argue just where the foot ends and the leg begins. It was the centre of an effective display that got the cash. Enough!

Goes Up to Corner After the Patrons

Because of a change over to another theatre, Inspiration Pictures are going strong after the casual theatre-goer. One of the stunts is the banner across Forty-ninth street, at Broadway, which tells that the Lillian Gish picture is "right here on 49th street." Net banners are reasonably new, though Harry Reichenbach is going to spit fire if he ever reads the press agent's declaration that "never before in the history of motion pictures" has a similar banner been used.

An Inspiration Release

THE DIRECTION BANNER

As a novelty the banner simply isn't, but there is reasonable novelty in going up to the corner after patronage, though Eddie Collins did it down in Texas a long time ago.

Brought in a Claque for Special Showing

One of the drawbacks of the average special showing is the lack of applause. Special guests somehow seem to feel that to betray a real interest in a picture is unworthy of their high estate and the punch which comes from applause is lacking.

Called in the Kids

Frank Woolen, publicity agent for the Garrick Theatres, Minneapolis and St. Paul, stages a special showing of Enemies of Women in both theatres, inviting the usual officials and officers of women's clubs. In the balcony were a bunch of newsboys who for ten days had been wearing a special button badge reading with the title and theatre. These badges were their admission tickets.

Plenty of Accessories

Their enthusiasm warmed up the bunch down stairs and as a result the important guests went away with a better idea of the audience reaction to the picture than if the house had been left to them alone.

In the line of regular work 10,000 blotters were distributed along with as many powder puffs and 15,000 mailed postals. There were 40 24-sheets used and 1500 stock one sheets and 1,000 block specials. In addition three dozen dolls were displayed in as many windows with free slips on which anyone could estimate the weight of the doll and a dozen showily dressed girls distributed "we dare you to give this to your wife unopened" envelopes.

Suited One Kid

A voting contest that suited one small boy was held by the Farragut Theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y. The voting was limited to those who purchased tickets for Penrod and Sam and the properly registered candidates were permitted to invade the lobby and ask for votes so long as they did not get to be too much of a nuisance. Some 40,000 votes were cast, which gives the low down on the business the Farragut did on this picture.

The prize was—how did you guess it?—a Penrod suit contributed by the manufacturer.

Another "Largest"

Fred Miller, of the California Theatre, Los Angeles, is the latest to come forward with the "largest" billboard. He threw three 28-sheet boards into one for Marion Davies in Little Old New York, achieving an 84-sheet board. It made a tremendous flash, but it is by no means the largest on record. England still seems to hold the record.

Selling Jackie

A circus tent of compoboard, guaranteed against blow and washdowns, was built on the marquise of the Metropolitan Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., just because they had Jackie Coogan in Circus Days.

In front of this cutouts from the Coogan and other lithographs were formed into a circus parade so realistic you could almost hear the calliope. It got all the kids who were able to walk whether in first or second childhood and of course the adults horned in with the usual excuse that the kiddies needed looking after.

Uses Reichmarks as Matinee Souvenirs

The Hippodrome Theatre, Pottsville, Pa., has found a new use for the reichmark. Most houses have used them on money titles, but the Hip builds matinee business, as explained in a three seventeens.

In a nice display it announces that it has purchased one hundred million marks and will give a 10,000 mark note ("formerly worth $2,400") to all who attend the matinee on the argument that while the evening crowds have to stand until seats are vacated, there are always a few empties at the matinees. The conclusion runs:

"We are not even suggesting that they will ever be worth more than they are now, but they make an attractive souvenir, book-mark or what not, and perhaps some day your children can buy a gallon of gas for the old flivver or even a Rolls Royce, who knows?"

Marks are cheap and a novelty and they work better as souvenirs than as advertisements.

Boomed the Second

Figuring that if exploitation helped a first run it might be just as valuable to a second time, Earl Payne, of the Kentucky Theatre, Louisville, offered a bright shawl to the amateur scenarist who wrote the best new ending to the Barthelmess-Gish production. Of course he tied it to a newspaper and got a front page break for more than a week, and The Bright Shawl proved that its colors were not dimmed by age.

When more second-run managers get over this first run nonsense, more houses will make more money.

A Blanket Policy

Now the laugh insurance policy has invaded England. Horace Judge, who went to London to look after First National publicity in the United Kingdom, has taken out a blanket policy with Lloyds for £500 for each death directly caused by laughter at the antics of Douglas MacLean in The Hottentot. The insurance runs for six months.

SAYING IT WITH FLAGS OVER IN NEWARK

This is how the Fox Terminal Theatre put over The Silent Command. The use of the flag is questionable even for a picture dealing with the Navy, but the house surely made a flash. Because of the flatness of the photograph the lobby looks more crowded than it is.

Style Show Ballyhoo

Realizing that his style show would bring an unusually large patronage to the house, George A. McDermit, of the Rialto Theatre, Macon. Ga., arranged to ballyhoo for the next attraction.

With the house lights all down and a white spot on the runway, a mysterious looking man in a voluminous cape and a slouch hat walked on the stage and down the runway while the orchestra played creepy music.

Well down the run, he drew from beneath his coat a large sign written "There is romance in Strangers of the Night. Next week." For a one-timer it beat out trailers or any of the usual stunts.

Played His Cards

Buying two dozen packs of playing cards, H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., overprinted them "A gamble for big stakes—Life—in The Spoilers" with house and date. This gave him 1,248 throw-aways that were handed out to persons on the street away from the theatre. The cost was about $10, but the results justified the expense.

In painting a 20 foot banner, Mr. Farley selected a location exposed to the sun, lettering in a bright orange against a dark ground. It made a flash that could be seen much further than usual because of the color scheme and because the entire space was given to the eight letters required to spell out "Spoilers." More text would have brought him far less in the matter of advertisement.

One Third

Denying the old adage that it takes nine tailors to make a man, George E. Brown, of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, S. C., points out that he made A Tailor Made Man with only three tailors.

He had this somewhat aged First National and persuaded the three leading tailors to donate a window apiece to a display of unusual models and stills from the play, a sort of window fashion show in three acts.

Then he cut out the one sheet posting and used instead 200 window cards, which seemed to give him better results than the posters. With no special investment in exploitation, he did a nice business.

Took the Trolley

Hooking in to the annual Wheat Show in Wichita, through the United Commercial Travelers' Association, who are really behind the Kansas annual, the Kansas Theatre, Wichita, got the use of the Toonerville Trolley reproduction which, true to its type, met all trains and spent the rest of the time circulating the city streets with the Skipper and Katinka.

At the mere cost of writing the numerous signs Charles H. Barron was able to do a big week's business when similar opposition usually kills it off.

Good Display Is Not Satisfactory

Writing from the Rialto Theatre, Clinton, Iowa, Harold D. Barnes sends in a couple of displays and writes that it is seldom that the compositors give him what he aims at, even though he may mark the copy and then revise the proofs. Sometimes the printer ignores the revision marks completely. Either Mr. Barnes is sending in some super-exceptional results, or he is difficult to please. Any man, small town or big, who can coax as good as this display from a printing office should go out on the house-

tops and sing paens of joy. We can see that improvement can be made in this layout. The title can be displayed in a better face, perhaps the body type is not the precise best, but the present result is so much better than most managers get that we think Mr. Barnes is too difficult to suit. It has been a long time since better work has come from a town the size of Clinton, and Mr. Barnes does not know how truly fortunate he is. His second example is a pair of displays for Children of Jazz, evidently the two setups from the same copy by the two local papers. This is a more ambitious job. The example shown is merely three tens, with simple cut placement. The other pair drop the full length of three columns and advertise Jazz Week in conjunction with the Paramount title. Each employs the same layout with six stock cuts from the press book which admirably serve to advertise both the title and the week. In each the display is good, though not the best possible, but Mr. Barnes could get very little better in a big center. The two ads break about 50-50 in display, but both are above the average—well above—and if Mr. Barnes wants to sob on our shoulder, he will have to bring in more harrowing examples. We regard these as distinctly good, even though one printer does refer to a "spasam." We think that Mr. Barnes would get even better results if he would jolly the compositors instead of fighting them. Evidently he has two papers with better than average job men. He should put in a couple of weeks in—say Boston, and he would realize then how fortunate he is. High ideals are good things to have, but it is a saner thing to pitch the ideals closer to possible accomplishment and not try magazine standards on country newspaper offices. Mr. Barnes writes good copy and can do good work both with a running style as is shown in the reproduction and in the detached lines. He seems to be equally at home with either style. We would like more of his samples.

Shot a Dog

Borrowing a musket, said to have been the one from which the first shot was fired in a local riot some years ago, got Frank J. Miller a good dog story when To the Last Man was played at the Rialto Theatre, Augusta, Ga.

The history of the gun was written on a card for a lobby display and the additional facts supplied the reporter.

For additional lobby work a shadow box in the form of a log cabin was employed. This had a gauze window back of which a cutout was placed in the act of firing a gun through the window, lighted for a silhouette effect.

If Winter Comes Helps Fall Trade

Fifteen merchants co-operated with the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, on the world premiere of If Winter Comes, in the campaign of Oral D. Cloakey recently described in this department. Naturally the fur companies came in on the catchline, for this was made to order for them, but some of the other hook ins are more unusual. A restaurant advises that when winter comes you will enjoy their hot meals, and phonographs are offered as an entertainment for Winter evenings. A business college will be open all Winter, and automobile batteries need closer attention in cold weather. It made a fine flash at small cost to the house and was useful in that it helped to surround the picture with the suggestion of the unusually important. If Winter Comes, released in the early Fall, is a decided aid to advertising managers and if you do not care to go to the trouble of organizing a page or a double truck, pass the idea along to the advertising manager of the newspaper. He may be interested, if you are not, and will probably be willing to go out and round up the merchants himself in consideration of the additional space he will sell. We think, however, there are few managers who have not trained their merchants to an appreciation of the hook-up. This is a splendid starter for others.

This Halftone Is a Guessing Contest

Here is another example of a halftone killing off the line work. We do not know where it hails from but if we had a house in the town where this Colonial Theatre is located, we think we would swear off halftones. The space would have been very much better had this head cut been removed

Line Cuts Best for Isle of Lost Ships

Most of the halftones for The Isle of Lost Ships seem to have been made on the wrong screen. This looks like an eighty screen, where it is probable that even a sixty would have been a little too fine. It tries to crawl through the paper and succeeds in getting only half way through. This example is from the American Theatre, Columbus, Ohio, a town which should give fairly good press work, but this is muddy and uninviting, saved only by the unusually good copy which the locale and story make possible. If you read the type, and it is planned so that the larger lines lead you into the six point, the chances are that you will desire to see the production, but the line cut is not going to help much. It would be better to burnish the cut down into a silhouette—at least it would then be a decent black instead of this grey blotch. It would have been much better to have shot the cut in favor of a larger type face for the selling talk, sinking the line cut to the extreme bottom of the space and moving the type

Type and Line Cut Good Combination

Building up a supplied cut with type gives James Hart, of the Rex Theatre, Oshkosh, Wis., as nice a display as he could ask for, and the house does not have to slap on a mortgage to pay an artist's salary. This is because Mr. Hart has arrived at an understanding with the compositors and has explained to them that if they do not get the bulk of the space too black, they can get good display for house and title in what a great many printers would insist upon using for body type. He knows that it is not the actual size of the letter, but its relation to the rest of the type that makes for display, with the result that medium size letters yield a better display than would let-

More than this, Mr. Hart does not stop with type, but he gets careful copy. In this instance he starts off with a challenge—"You'll want to see Driven because." You read on to see what makes him so positive, and you stand a pretty fair chance of being sold on the argument. When so much can be done with type, it seems strange that managers will cling so persistently to hand lettering.

The Fashion Show Delights Atlanta

Because it followed Hollywood, on which considerable extra effort had been expended, Howard Price Kingsmore put on a fashion show with Lawful Larceny and distributed reichmarks in conjunction with a prominent drug store.

The window of the store was turned over to a display of the marks with an offer to give one to each purchaser of goods worth a dollar or more. A blower kept the marks in circulation and gave basis for a sign reading to the effect that marks were "up in the air." Each bill was overprinted with "If anyone steals this from you it is Lawful Larceny. Do not report Lawful Larceny to the police. Find out why at the Hoard Theatre, September 10." The marks worked so well that the store cut the dollar limit, and made a more generous distribution, figuring that here was something that would not be thrown away.

The fashion show was in three parts, displaying sports clothes, afternoon frocks and evening gowns. The first two used exteriors and the last a handsome interior with a gilded stairway down which the models made their entrances, later promenading down a runway through the center aisle. The show added considerably to the volume of press work, the co-operating stores bringing their advertising pressure to bear on the dispenser of free space to help out the theatre.

Adds a New Kick to a Punch Line

The best thing in this display for Mighty Lak a Rose from the Colonial Theatre, Easton, Pa., is contained in the circle, where the six point text reads: "There is something in this picture that you don't see on the screen—and it will get you." There is almost too much description in the panel. It is all good stuff, but the picture does not need that much, and the matter in the circle could sell by itself on a pinch. The cuts do

True to Tint

Using a blacksmith in the lobby of the Rialto Theatre gave Frank J. Miller, of Augusta, Ga., both sight and sound attractors on The Village Blacksmith. The entire lobby was masked in with a board structure about ten feet high with a door giving on the box office. A real anvil, a portable forge and a smith who struck the anvil with a sledge hammer were the accessories.

To preserve the color unities Mr. Miller used a black smith, though possibly his consideration was the fact that a darkey could be hired more cheaply than a white man.

Shocking

Even a man with an absolutely quiet conscience is apt to be a little startled when he opens a letter and a diamond engagement ring drops out—and that in spite of the fact that the diamond is decidedly yellow and rather glassy. And when he fishes out a letter telling "Dearest" that the writer is returning the ring and must never see you again those with guilty memories are apt to wonder what time the next train leaves. It takes a turn over the page to discover that it is a decidedly clever advertisement for Maytime.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

WHAT of the trailer as an advertising medium?

Should it merely announce, or tease, or sell with "reason-why" titles as well as with pictures, or should it do all of these things? Is there danger of a trailer showing too much and thus taking the edge off the picture itself? What is the ideal length of a trailer?

These and countless other problems confront the man who is preparing a trailer on a forthcoming production. We don't presume to be able to answer all of the foregoing queries, for there is no definite and final answer that will suit all cases and occasions. We merely bring them up because this is a department for discussion—discussion whose ultimate aim is the betterment of every advertising aid.

EVER since the trailer developed from its predecessor, the slide which still holds its important place as an advertising medium, the advertising brains of the industry have been competing with each other in efforts to devise trailers of such seat-selling power as to make a cash customer of every person who sees one. We have seen some mighty good trailers in our day—and some mighty poor ones. The good ones "sold" us absolutely—more so, perhaps, than we would have been sold by any other form of motion picture advertising; the poor ones made us glad that we had been forewarned of what to expect "next week." And after seeing the poor trailer no amount of newspaper advertising or any other kind of exploitation would have made us go to the theatre. And we think we are just about the same as most everybody else.

IN the film trade the trailer may be likened to the sample package of a manufacturer of a standard commodity. It is a free sample and, like most other free samples, is virtually forced upon the recipient. Thus it must first of all overcome a natural sales resistance. If the sample is good, the fact that it was "forced" on a person while that person was expecting only to be entertained otherwise is readily overlooked. Resistance is broken down and the sale is closed. If the sample is poor, not only is a prospective sale lost, but the picture patron is made sore—peeved because something was "forced" on him that he did not want to see and which was not worth looking at anyway.

BECAUSE it IS a sample, the trailer is the only form of advertising of which we know which has the power of KILLING sales unless it is good. For proof, consider, for example, a sample of soap. If the sample of soap is good, one will probably buy a cake of the soap, knowing what to expect. If the sample of soap is poor, certainly one will steer clear of soap the same as the sample. That's simple merchandising, isn't it?

Thus the sample is a more powerful, if not a more far-reaching medium than any other form of promotional publicity. A newspaper ad, a poster, a lobby display, an exploitation stunt may have the power to sell a picture, but seldom the power to unsell. It is only the sample that has that power—and in the case of motion pictures it is only the trailer which has such power.

AND, important as the trailer is in selling the picture to people ready to buy, vital as it is—especially to the neighborhood house with a "house" and not a "picture" clientele—it still remains the "houn' dog" of the advertising department. With its brother, the slide, it is allowed to shift for itself in most cases. The advertising man is "too busy" to bother with it. Rather would he spend more time in making newspaper ads or posters or something else that he can show the boss.

The fact is that, in nine cases out of ten, the advertising man seldom even sees a trailer on the production he is advertising. So the preparation of the trailer is left to some outsider—some one who may know a whole lot about cutting film and nothing at all about what constitutes the selling points of a motion picture. Often the trailer is prepared not by any individual connected with the company releasing the picture, but by an organization whose only function is the distribution of trailers.

Notice the extreme effectiveness of simplicity in both these twenty-fours. Merely further proof of the argument that over-many credit lines, tasteless display and a lot of other useless junk on a stand make it look like an order of scrambled eggs mixed with a crazy rainbow. Neither of these black and white reproductions do justice to the power of the color scheme in each.

That this procedure is radically wrong from the standpoint of the exhibitor who uses the trailer is only too obvious. For instance, a picture may have a Western angle, a thrill, a sentimental angle, a spectacular angle and a pictorial angle. Is any one who doesn't KNOW going to be able to combine all of those selling points in a trailer? And does any one who hasn't had real advertising experience in the film business know what is and what isn't a seat-selling angle? We leave the answer to those very advertising men who are in the practise of shoving off the work of getting out a trailer on some one outside of their department and organization.

We don't argue for one minute with the established practise of a separate organization distributing the trailer. That's sound and sensible. But we do register a most emphatic "kick" against the practise of allowing any outsider to prepare a trailer.

IF you, Mr. Advertising Man, do not think the trailer is one of the most important advertising aids for the exhibitor, just consider a case something like this:

A crowded house—say seating about 600. Your trailer advertises a Western picture. You have included the big thrill and just a taste of the dramatic action. Conceded, now, that you have "sold" every man and boy in the audience. What about the women? Were there not just one of two flashes that you could have included that would be particularly attractive to women? Wasn't there a shot showing some new gowns, some sentimental bit, some touching, softer moment?

Think it over when next you think of a trailer.

IT is our belief that the length of a trailer, too, has a great deal to do with its success or failure. With the over-long features and long programs today many exhibitors believe that their schedule of performances does not give them time to use trailers. Yet many of these same exhibitors permit a "stage wait" of a few moments between shows. It is our opinion that it is a much better plan to run a trailer between shows, while persons are leaving and entering the theatre and seats, than to have nothing at all going on except, perhaps, an organ solo.

Then, too, there are the exhibitors who overdo trailer and slide advertising. For instance, in some three-a-week-change houses the managers will run three trailers one after the other. Instead of closing a sale on any one of the three forthcoming productions this procedure most often succeeds only in making one or more patrons impatient for the regular show to go on. And one impatient person wriggling in a theatre seat can start a whole crowd wriggling and coughing, and put them in such a state of impatience that it takes a mighty absorbing picture to get them concentrated and quiet again.

Clips from the supplementary "news" trailer put out by First National, showing Anna Q. Nilsson being shorn of her beauty locks to play the part of a "youth" in "Ponjola." This is a darned good idea and should prove a good curiosity arouser.

BUT we digress. This is not a department on how to conduct a theatre. We were speaking of trailers. And, speaking of trailers, we hand the bouquet this week to Bob Baxter, of First National. In his own words, here's why:

"Trying to sell a feature to the public on a news-basis trailer is the new angle worked out by First National in connection with the release of 'Ponjola.'

"The plan accords with the stress laid by pictorial services and rotogravure sections upon 'news' stills and, like this branch of publicity and advertising, advocates that the public can be sold on a feature by news pictures through a trailer as well as through the newspapers.

"The theory has taken substance in a three-hundred-foot trailer prepared on 'Ponjola,' showing Anna Q. Nilsson having her hair cut to take the role of a youth in the picture. Outside of the fact that it represents an incident that probably never will be repeated, the sight of the screen star being shorn of her beauty locks has already attracted nation-wide attention, as has been evidenced by the demands made for stills of the clipping process.

"The trailer (which is illustrated in these columns) shows Miss Nilsson arriving at the barber shop, the preparations incidental to the operation and the final shearing of the locks. The humorous angle, combined with the unusual news angle, has made this trailer of unusual interest, especially when it is shown immediately following the showing of the regular news reel.

"The present plan of distribution is to have theatres show this special trailer about two weeks before the 'Ponjola' play date, and to follow it up, the next week, with the regular trailer on the picture."

NEWS" trailers, as differentiated from production trailers, have been used before with excellent results. But seldom has the news angle been as interesting to fans as the story of a star having her long locks actually clipped. More trailers with as interesting news subject matter would be welcomed by exhibitors and public alike.

We feel quite safe in saying that among the most elaborate and beautiful advertisements ever issued for motion pictures are the "de luxe" books furnished exchange managers by Warner Brothers. We have just received from Lon Young de luxe books on "Tiger Rose" and "The Country Kid."

"Long Live the King"

Jackie Coogan's First for Metro Is a Big Spectacular and Unusually Entertaining Picture

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Jackie Coogan's initial Metro production, "Long Live the King," based on Mary Roberts Rinehart's novel of the same title, is a big spectacular picture extremely rich in pathos and human interest with delightful comedy touches, which should pack any theatre, please the grown-ups and prove a delight for the kiddies.

Dealing with the story of a little prince, it has been produced on a lavish scale with big street scenes involving large mobs. There is a magnificent set of the exterior of an enormous castle, and gorgeous interiors befitting the type of story. Both from the standpoint of production and audience appeal it is one of the big pictures of the year.

Mary Roberts Rinehart's story provides an excellent vehicle for little Jackie, as the poor little orphan prince bereft of a mother's love and so surrounded by court formality and precedent that he is deprived of childish joys, the companionship of other children or even a puppy being denied him. He is a pathetic little figure and your heart goes out to him and when he eludes the palace guards and meets a typical American boy you enjoy with him his brief pleasure.

The adventures of the little prince are interesting and the melodramatic intrigue to prevent him from ascending the throne and thus bring about a revolution will hold your attention. This is enhanced by the truly fine acting of little Jackie and an excellent supporting cast. Jackie's handling of the situations, his body movements as well as his facial expression are convincingly natural and register with a bang. As an actor he again proves himself the superior of many grown-ups. His comedy moments are delightful and he seems to be enjoying them himself. Throughout he is just a real, lovable little lad, and this picture should increase many fold his already enormous following.

Victor Shertzinger, under the supervision of Jackie's father, has finely directed the picture and there are a number of clever touches. Particularly pleasing is the manner in which the comedy is used to offset the strong pathos, as for instance in the scene where Jackie is rescued from the conspirators. In an effectively melodmatic manner Jackie's guard overcomes one after another of the band in snappy hand-to-hand combat until you are inclined to feel it is being overdone, when Jackie himself takes a hand and the manner in which he puts several men out of business by breaking wine bottles over their heads will get many laughs; also tremendously effective comedy has been introduced in the scenes showing the little prince after he ascends the throne, giving orders that will make everybody happy. This comes as relief after the pathetic scene showing the lonely little boy being proclaimed king while a vast populace kneels in the street, and it leaves the spectator in a pleasing frame of mind.

Notwithstanding the magnitude of the production and the fine work of the cast, including Rosemary Theby, Vera Lewis, Alan Hale, Alan Forrest, Robert Browner and others, it is Jackie who "makes" the picture and provides wonderful entertainment.

Don't be afraid to boost this picture and by all means tell the grown folks not to forget to bring the kiddies.

Story

The king of the mythical kingdom of Livonia is old and feeble and the hope of the country rests in the tiny Prince Otto, whom a band of revolutionists strive to keep from ascending the throne. The little prince longs to enjoy himself and play like other children. He runs away, meets an American boy and has a great time. Several attempts of the revolutionists fail, then on the prince's birthday he again runs away from the palace, meets his American friend and goes home with him. The tolling bells announce the death of the king, when the prince does not appear the people arise in revolution. The little prince hears the bells, and, seeking to return to the palace, gets into the hands of the revolutionists. He is rescued by his friend, Lieutenant Nikky, and arrives at the palace in time to save the situation. On the throne he handles affairs so as to make everybody happy.

"Woman-Proof"

Paramount Presents Thomas Meighan in Highly Amusing Production Based on Story by George Ade

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Excellent entertainment is provided by Thomas Meighan's newest Paramount picture, "Woman-Proof." With the same author, George Ade, and the same director, Alfred E. Green, who were responsible for one of Meighan's best vehicles, "Back Home and Broke," it would seem that "Woman-Proof" should duplicate the box-office success of that picture.

There is nothing especially original in the theme, which revolves around a provision in a will that the hero must be married by a certain date, but in characteristic style George Ade has complicated this situation and provided numerous opportunities for effective situations by making the inheritance of the fortune contingent on not one but four persons being married by the specified time. The title and the motive for the action is dependent on the fact that the hero is apparently utterly unmindful of the predicaments of his brother and sisters and pays no attention to their frantic efforts to produce a suitable wife for him. Add to this the plotting of a lawyer who would benefit if the hero remained unmarried and you have the plot.

The picture has many amusing moments and the subtitles, many of which are in George Ade's best style, are rich in humor and provide many laughs. The result is a production that while not to be taken too seriously gets you in a pleasant frame of mind, holds your interest and will make the average spectator leave the theatre entirely satisfied. Two characters who contribute largely to produce this effect are a sour old bachelor and his friend, who unceasingly seek to warn the hero of the perils of entering into the state of matrimony.

Thomas Meighan is excellently cast in the leading role and Lila Lee does good work as the girl who finally wins him, for of course he does not turn out to be really "woman-proof." Charles A. Sellon gives a fine performance as the sour old bachelor, and the remainder of the cast, including John Sainpolis as the lawyer, Mary Astor, Robert Agnew, Louise Dresser and Mike Donlin give good accounts of themselves.

Story

The elder Rockwood, after amassing a big fortune, dies and leaves his wealth to his four children on the condition that they are all married by a certain date, otherwise the money is to be used for charity, and Bleech, a lawyer, is to handle it at a fat salary. Two girls and one boy are ready to comply with the terms, but Tom, a civil engineer, seems to be woman-proof and his family are in despair, until Louise Halliday comes along and Tom falls in love with her. Her guardian, Bleech, does all he can to break up the match and nearly succeeds. Tom starts for Europe, and in bidding farewell to Dick's English sweetheart, who is returning home in disgust, Louise fails to get off the same ship in time. She and Tom meet, all is straightened out between them; it develops that Dick is also aboard as a stowaway. The captain marries the two couples and Tom sends a wireless to his sisters, who marry in time to save the fortune.

Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle in Entertaining Selznick Drama
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Selznick's picturization of Robert W. Chambers' novel has much the same entertainment value as has been widely accredited to the book. The love affair between the artist, son of one of the first families of New York, and his model is alluringly presented, with an undercurrent of caste conflict to add to its intensity. Its box office appeal seems assured with Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle in the chief roles, and Bryant Washburn, Eliott Dexter and Harry Myers in the supporting cast.

The action proceeds smoothly against backgrounds that are exceptionally beautiful. Director George Archainbaud has made any number of rich selections for the studio, apartment and residential settings. With this advantage the story, which of itself has at least average appeal, should give the fans what most of them are searching for.

Corinne Griffith is a good choice for Valerie West, the model. She gets away from a familiar fault in the scene where she is introduced to the artist. It soon develops that she is bluffing and has had no experience in posing, but instead of the usual extreme naive innocence she has a note of wistfulness and sincerity that is more effective. Her performance, which calls for nude posing, is discreetly and artistically handled. A possible inconsistency is her elaborate wardrobe and apartment, which is pleasing enough but not commensurate with her position. Conway Tearle plays with feeling and other prominent roles are well interpreted by Eliott Dexter, Bryant Washburn, Doris May, Wally Van and Harry Myers.

"The Temple of Venus"

Allegorical Fantasy Released by Fox Has Wonderfully Beautiful Scenes But Story Misses Fire
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "The Temple of Venus," a Henry Otto production, Fox Film Corporation is offering a picture of unusual pictorial beauty. The story is an allegorical fantasy dealing with the quest of Cupid at the bidding of Venus to find if romance still exists on the earth. Cupid starts out in a swan boat and visits a humble cottage. Then unfolds a love idyl involving an unsophisticated young girl who falls in love with an artist, a rugged fisherman who is also in love with her, and an extremely worldly-wise woman, a devotee of ultra-modern jazz, who seeks to win the artist.

Into the modern romance is introduced a series of scenes where the artist, painting a picture of Echo, tells the girl the legend of how Echo, once a beautiful maiden, came always to have the last word. In filming this portion of the picture there are magnificent woodland scenes of the goddess Juno and her court, of Diana and her huntresses, of Thetis, the daughter of Neptune, and her rivalry with Juno for the love of Jupiter. It is doubtful if more gorgeous outdoor scenes have ever been pictured than these, especially the ones in a subterranean grotto, the court of Thetis with a large number of her maidens clad in filmy draperies, of the scenes showing these girls on the seashore sands or on the rockbound coast. These shots are a delight to the eye, and artistically beautiful without being really risque or daring. Some of the scenes are in color, many are beautifully tinted, the most magnificent spots on the Pacific islands have been magnificently photographed.

It would seem that the producers of this picture have staked its appeal on the strikingly idylistic angle and the presence of large numbers of beautiful girls scantily clad who indulge in wonderful diving from the cliffs or execute classical dances in beautiful surroundings, and that the modern romance has been used largely as a basis of contrast for these scenes. There is a consequent lack of interest or strongly dramatic moments. No great enthusiasm is aroused in the romance despite the excellent work of Mary Philbin, in fact this part of the picture somehow misses fire. Possibly this is due to the allegorical nature of the story which does not carry conviction and it is aided by the introduction of so many elements which, while attractive, serve to sidetrack the continuity. There are scenes at an ultra-jazz ball where the men unhook their partners' evening gowns, revealing bathing costumes beneath, there is a snappy beach party with many attractive women in up-to-the-minute bathing suits, there are striking shots of rocky coasts with myriads of birds, and of rocks on which there are hundreds of seals. These scenes with the seals introduce sequences in which the killing of a mother seal leaving her young helpless provide pathos, and the chase of the poachers over the rocks is accompanied by thrills. There are also moments of pathos in the development of the story and some thrilling action.

On the whole it would seem to be a production that will not satisfy the sophisticated, but for those who can enter into the allegorical mood of the picture, those for whom the beauties of the production outweigh its weak story, or patrons who may be attracted by the presence of a myriad of attractive girls in diaphanous draperies or snappy bathing suits, the picture should provide satisfactory entertainment. Certainly it is a picture which lends itself to advance exploitation and showmanship, and if properly handled, an exhibitor should have no trouble in getting them into his theatre.

Venus sends Cupid to earth to find if romance still lives. He goes to the humble home of Dennis Dean, whose daughter Moria is loved by Nat, a fisherman. Moria meets an artist, who tells her the mythological story of Echo and scenes in the court of Juno. Thetis, the daughter of Neptune, and Diana are pictured amidst beautiful surroundings. Then the story changes to a modern ultra-jazz ball with the women in bathing costumes. The hostess, Constance, by her lack of modesty disgusts the artist, who returns to the forest and paints Moria's picture. In the following sequences Nat learns that Moria loves the artist and, after tying him to the wave-swept rocks, goes to free him and bring him back to Moria. Cupid returns to Venus and reports that romance still lives.

Warner Brothers' Feature With Wesley Barry Has Heart Interest That Means Success
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Wesley Barry and his two small confederates give the public something in this Warner Brothers picture that always meets with a warm response. They are the three orphans in a human interest story of many laughs and a few tears. Nine out of ten will be unable to resist the appeal made by the famous juvenile star, supported by "Spec" O'Donnell and an adorable youngster, Bruce Guerin.

Director William Beaudine has emphasized the sympathetic and humorous values of the story in many incidents that make a vivid impression. The story is of children unwillingly sent to an orphan asylum from which they eventually escape. There are intensely dramatic situations, such as the two youngsters taking refuge in the attic when the county wagon comes to take them off, and being quite safe until the dog gives them away. Again when they steal the warden's lunch and escape from the asylum on the old family nag.

These are the biggest moments in a picture of many minor thrills. One of the most amusing scenes shows them consuming quantities of dried apples. Result—castor oil and tears. There are plenty of laughs, and little Bruce Guerin's facility in making faces, wry and otherwise, counts high in this respect.

Probably some will object slightly to Wesley Barry's role as being too serious and "motherly" to be typically boyish. It is true that he is given very little opportunity to be anything but pathetic. But the majority will be moved by his performance of the big brother role and anyone will grant that he has unusual appeal. The adult characters are all in capable hands, as George Nichols, Helen Jerome Eddy and Edward Burns play these parts.

Ben Applegate runs the farm which his father left him and keeps house for his two small brothers, Joe and Andy. Their Uncle Grimes is left sole guardian, and, anxious to get the children's farm, he sends them to an orphan asylum. Ben rescues them and takes them to the court house where the uncle and the head of the orphanage protest against their escape. But Ben has made two strong friends in Arthur Grant and his sweetheart who decide to get married so as to adopt the whole family.

"Big Dan"

Good Entertainment Provided in Fox Production With Charles Jones Attractively Cast
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Charles Jones' standing as a screen star has increased with each recent picture and "Big Dan" is no exception. It shows what he can do with an average role because of his naturally pleasing manner and good taste in acting. He has the ability not common with his type, of appealing decidedly to both sexes. As this particular picture plainly illustrates, he can be "the strong man" whenever the occasion demands, without ever seeming to flaunt this physical fitness, and without losing a subtle emotional appeal that is greatly in his favor.

His scenes with the children in the boys' training camp should please any audience. The pugilistic atmosphere felt in much of the picture is a popular note and the fight which is postponed until the end will be a thrill for the majority.

The love interest is perhaps the weakest feature. It will no doubt not interfere seriously with the picture's appeal because of the other important features. But the character of the heroine is not convincingly drawn. The sentimental angle has been exaggerated and the idea of the girl being so pathetically dependent upon a perfect stranger, getting into the most direful predicaments and fainting always at the critical moment seems too much like the old-fashioned melodrama, and not up to the standard of the rest of the picture. Marion Nixon however plays this part in a sweet and charming manner.

"Big Dan" is a fine vehicle for Charles Jones and is good entertainment for any program theatre. It has been very well photographed.

He rescues a homeless girl from a man who is insulting her and gives her shelter at the camp. His wife's health is so impaired that she is sent to Arizona, where Dan, pitying her, pays her expenses. A young fighter falls in love with the girl, Dora, and Dan is jealous. Another woman tells Dora that Dan is married but in the meantime he has received word of his wife's death and after a dramatic pursuit of Dora who is taken away, he wins her and tells her he is free to marry.

"Blow Your Own Horn"

F. B. O. Version of Owen Davis Stage Play Provides Good Entertainment for Average Patron

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Based on a stage play by the well-known dramatist, Owen Davis, the F. B. O. production, "Blow Your Own Horn," tells the story of a discouraged young man who achieves success and wins in the game of love by following the advice of a millionaire and "blowing his own horn" and not hiding his light under a bushel.

The picture has been produced in a peppy manner with plenty of action and should provide saitsfactory entertainment for the average patron even though the working out of the plot introduces situations which test the credulity of the spectator and seem at times rather far-fetched. It belongs to the type of productions that are built to entertain and whose themes will not bear too critical analysis along the lines of probability.

Effective comedy touches which have no direct bearing on the story have been introduced in the enmity between the tough little country lad and the pampered little wealthy boy; there are also several amusing situations arising from the efforts of the hero to "play his part" as a millionaire though he really hasn't even a cent. There is a melodramatic climax where the man of wealth who is responsible for the hero's line of action, finds himself being beaten at his own game and cuts the electric power wires, causing the intricate electrical machinery to short-circuit and nearly electrocute his own daughter.

Warner Baxter is capably cast as the hero and Ralph Lewis is effective as the millionaire who has achieved success by taking advantage of all opportunities and letting everyone know how clever he is. Derelys Perdue is attractive and entirely satisfactory in the leading feminine role. The remainder of the cast is adequate.

Story

Returning from the world war, Jack Dunbar, unable to land a job, is discouraged. On a country road he meets Nicholas Small, a war millionaire, and fixes his auto for him. Out of gratitude, Small tells Dunbar the way to succeed is to "blow your own horn" and tell everybody how great you are. Later, Dunbar wanders into an estate where Small is a visitor. To demonstrate his theory, Small introduces Dunbar as a millionaire. So successful is Dunbar in keeping up his end and adapting Small's slogan that he succeeds in convincing capitalists that young Jolyon has a great thing in his apparatus for the wireless transmission of power, helps him to perfect it and despite crooked work on the part of Small to prevent it, finally demonstrates its success. He also wins the love of Small's daughter, saves her from an explosion which Small's villainy has brought about and even wins Small's consent to the match despite the fact that Small has other plans for her.

"Forgive and Forget"

Good Suspense Is Outstanding Feature of C. B. C. Attraction with Well-Known Cast

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Most of your patrons should find this to be fairly absorbing entertainment. Because of its compact dramatic construction, there is good suspense throughout and because of the general idea and style of the production it has audience appeal.

The fate of a packet of love letters carries the interest through some rather involved situations. There is nothing new in the idea of a wife trying to get hold of letters which she fears may shock her husband or the general public. But it has been handled here with some new twists. The letters are stolen, there is a quarrel, a murder and the woman's husband is arrested. Following this is a game between the woman and the blackmailer which is unusually interesting. It has a melodramatic ending in which the effect of the blackmailer's falling to his doom from a high window ledge is well managed.

It is good program entertainment and the performances are interesting from a box-office standpoint. Estelle Taylor has any number of smart costumes which she wears in a way that feminine patrons will admire. She photographs pleasingly and has some appealing moments. Philo MacCullough as the blackmailer, Wyndham Standing as the husband and Vernon Steele as the sweetheart all give well sustained performances. The picture has been capably directed and photographed.

Mrs. Cameron has amused herself with a flirtation with Ronnie Sears which ends in a mysterious summons to his apartment by Blake, Ronnie's roommate. Blake holds her letters to Ronnie but before she has bargained for them, Ronnie enters, there is a quarrel and Ronnie is killed. Mr. Cameron follows his wife to the apartment, is arrested for the murder and his release depends upon Blake's confession, which Mrs. Cameron cleverly secures after some suspense.

"Men in the Raw"

Universal Production With Jack Hoxie has Lively Action but Meagre Plot

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

As this Universal production plays almost entirely upon your patrons' susceptibility to spectacular thrills, its appeal can best be estimated by the individual exhibitor. There is practically no story. It is a series of stunts, all of it rather obvious and not constructed so as to build up an actual drama.

Most of it seems to have been based upon the assumption that Jack Hoxie's greatest forte is as a thrill-provider. He is cast, somewhat fantastically, as a cowboy notorious for prevaricating and his own account of his skirmishes takes up a large part of the picture. What actually happens to him and what he relates of his past is rather confusedly unravelled. But, regardless of the dramatic construction, there are a number of entertaining scenes.

Among these is his fight with the heavy in which amusing photographic effects show his opponent soaring and tumbling through the air; the fight in mid stream, the slide down the snow bank, the grapple with the steer and many scenes of swift riding. Exciting action is plentiful and the smaller theatre patronized especially by men should find this a profitable attraction.

Windbag Watkins, noted prevaricator tells a stranger about a series of thrilling adventures, one of which involves trouble in Alaska where his friend Phil Hollis was killed and he was accused but made his escape. The stranger turns out to be a Federal marshal who has come to arrest Windbag, a chase ensues, Windbag locates the real murderer and makes him confess. All ends happily and Windbag returns to his sweetheart Eunice.

STRAIGHT from the SHOULDER REPORTS

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. The reports are printed without fear or favor, and no report from a bona fide exhibitor will be omitted. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

Associated Exhibitors

COUNTERFEIT LOVE. (4,850 feet). Star cast. Not a big special but a program picture that pleases most small town patrons and you don't have to mortgage your house to get it. Usual posters brought good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,300. Admission 10-25-35. A. O. Jones, Grand Theatre (250 seats), Burlington, Washington.

ALICE ADAMS. (6 reels). Star, Florence Vidor. Very much liked here. Voted a very natural and charming picture throughout, and I heartily concur with their opinion. Had fairly good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

First National

BELLBOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Not nearly as good as "The Hottentot" but a pretty good farce comedy at that. Had no kicks and no great boosts. Star and Thos Ince advertising angles. Had average attendance, drawing all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand (500), Liberty (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

BELLBOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. This picture is not nearly as good as his other one, "The Hottentot." If you have played "The Hottentot" do not advertise this one very strongly for your patrons will be disappointed. Threes, six and photos brought average attendance. Draw from rural and town of 1,100. Admission 10-30-40. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Montana.

BELLBOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. A corking good comedy in five parts; but a very poor picture to get them in on. Heralds and posters gave poor attendance. Draw neighborhood class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

BELL BOY 13. (3,940 feet). Star, Douglas MacLean. Snappiest farce for some time. All who saw it liked it but on account of rain and a county fair held here did not make much. Showed "Ropin' Fool" and "Dogs of War" with it making an all comedy program. Everyone was smiling going out and said a fine entertainment. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

BRAWN OF THE NORTH. (7,650 feet). Star, Strongheart. Excellent picture. A second run, but a mighty good one. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BRIGHT SHAWL. (7,500 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. Not one of his best but mighty fine picture. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

CHILDREN OF DUST. (6,228 feet). Star cast. A decided hit with everybody. One of the most pleasing pictures of the year. Bert Woodruff (bless his old heart) just simply took the house by storm. This dear old man, you tell the world! is an actor—yes, A actor. We know of none better. If you have a critical audience, make them feel foolish by showing "Children of Dust." Moral tone excellent; indeed it is suitable for Sunday! Had good attendance of all classes in town of 7,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

CHILDREN OF DUST. (7 reels). Star, Lloyd Hughes. Old Bert Woodruff nearly stole the starship in this. Many smiles and chuckles, with a tear interspread. It is not a special but so good that a lot of so-called specials appear weak. Will please anywhere. Just guarantee satisfaction. Had fair attendance, drawing farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

CIRCUS DAYS. (6,000 feet). Star, Jackie Coogan. Excellent picture. Very entertaining, and Jackie's latest and best picture. Large patronage, all pleased. See it. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DANGEROUS AGE. (7,204 feet). Star cast. Here is a one hundred percent attraction, one that should please all classes. It pleased my patrons well and got many compliments on this one. It will stand a raise in admission. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in small town. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

ETERNAL FLAME. (7,453 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. High class production. Over the heads of some people. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

FURY. (8,709 feet). Star, Dorothy Gish. Excellent production and very satisfactory. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GIRL IN THE TAXI. (5,420 feet). Star cast. Not much to it, just a common program picture. Will please about twenty-five percent. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in small town. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

GIRL OF THE GOLDEN WEST. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Very good production that pleased. Story well told, scenery very fine and new to us. Made a big hit, pleased the bunch, and all were happy. Paper good and attractive—helps. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing all classes in town of 7,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

HUNTRESS. Star, Colleen Moore. Excellent picture. Clean humor. Absorbingly interesting. Ludicrous to be sure, but still a worth while picture. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,944 ft.). Star cast. A dandy. Will please any audience. Draw all classes in small town. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

HURRICANE'S GAL. (7,844 feet). Star, Dorothy Phillips. This picture went over strong here. It has lots of action and that's what they want here. It is a good story, well acted, and will get over in most any kind of a town. Here they ate it up and yelled for more. Usual advertising gave good attendance, drawing loggers, farmers, fishermen in town of four hundred. Admission 15-35. L. E. Silverman, Columbia Theatre (400 seats), Skamokawa, Washington.

Fox

BUCKING THE BARRIER. (4,566 feet). Star, Dustin Farnum. This picture is not as good as any of the previous productions made by this star this year. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

CRUSADER. (4,780 feet). Star, William Russell. Just a fair program picture. Little comment either way. Advertising slants, star. Had average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand & Liberty Theatres, (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

DO AND DARE. (4,744 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Tom Mix always keeps our cashier busy, and this was no exception. More action than usual in this one and everybody got a kick out of it. Print very dirty and parts cut out. No introduction title. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

EXTRA, EXTRA. (4,160 feet). Star cast. An extra, extra good picture, very pleasing. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FAST MAIL. (6 reels). Star, Charles Jones. While print was little rainy, picture extra good. Get good print, and you will have a good picture. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

FAST MAIL. (6 reels). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Print terrible first day. New print the second day. If your patrons like thrills play this and boost it. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

LONE STAR RANGER. Star, Tom Mix. An excellent picture, well played, full of pep and action. William Noble, Liberty Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

MADNESS OF YOUTH. (4,719 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Good program picture, a little different than the usual run of pictures. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

MEN OF ZANZIBAR. (4,990 feet). Star, William Russell. If they like mystery drama feed them this and boost it. For a program picture it's extra good. Had good attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

SKID PROOF. (5,505 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. This is the most intensely interesting Jones picture I have seen. Audience appreciated it better than "Fast Mail." Good print of fine, moral picture. Usual lobby brought poor attendance. Draw factory people in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

SKID PROOF. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Best picture for action and thrills that Charles Jones ever made. In fact the best auto racing picture I ever ran. Jones no good here since he changed his name from "Buck" to Charles. They think him a new star. Had poor attendance. Draw rural class in town of 955. Admission 10-30. Fred J. Jones, Rialto Theatre (250 seats), Nelson, Nebraska.

THREE JUMPS AHEAD. (4,854 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Pleased all who saw it and believe me I had some crowd. Used ones, paper. Had excellent attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

WEST OF CHICAGO. Star, Charles Jones. Very good western, just what my patrons like. Ran a Lee Kids comedy "A Pair of Aces" with this and did best Tuesday business in months. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday in some localities. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,028. W. C. Geer, Princess Theatre, Vermont, Illinois.

WEST OF CHICAGO. (4,694 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Oh Boy! That's a real western picture. Your patrons will be more than delighted, especially those that love western dramas. Has good moral tone. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

Goldwyn

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Somewhat creepy but a good picture of this type. Lon Chaney plays two parts and resembles the same man about like "Bella Donna" resembles "Quincy Adams Sawyer." Had good attendance. Town of 3,720. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

BLIND BARGAIN. (4,473 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. The poorest picture from an entertainment standpoint, in a long time. Chaney's acting wonderful, but such grewsome "stuff" don't appeal to the masses. Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall, (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

RAGGED EDGE. (6,800 feet). Star, Mimi Palmira. Good picture. Pleased. Did good business. William Noble, Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

Is the exhibitor who planks out ten or fifteen bucks for a day's feature entitled to a print anywhere near as good, in physical condition, as the boy who dishes out fifty silver cart-wheels for the same feature earlier in its life?

Well—it depends on whether the producer figures to continue in business with the confidence of his public.

You can pay a heap of money for Turkish towels—and then you can buy them in the ten-cent store.

BUT Mr. Woolworth didn't build a fortune on selling towels with holes in them, edges frayed out, full of torn pieces.

The public is still buying towels at Woolworth's. How long will it continue to pay for picture entertainment that isn't all there?

VAN.

VANITY FAIR. (7,668 feet). Star cast. For those who had read "Vanity Fair," this was a treat, to those who had not read it, this was two hours of misery. Luckily those of our vast audience had read the story else all would have been bored to a finish. Hardly a safe bet for the picture show man. Not suitable for Sunday nor any other day. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,000. Admission 5-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

WALL FLOWER. (5,500 feet). Star cast. Played this on family night, entire family forty cents. Would class it as a good program picture, sold at a fair rental. The new Oklahoma branch furnishes brand new prints on all their pictures and their prices are fair. Draw all classes in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum Theatre (300 seats), Quinton, Oklahoma.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. (5,003 feet). Star cast. One of the oldest pictures we have shown, and one of the most entertaining according to our audience. Used this one to open the fall season and made a clean-up with it. Used lobby, newspaper. Had fine attendance. Draw working people in town of 3,500. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

Hodkinson

YOUTHFUL CHEATERS. (5,700 feet). Star, Glenn Hunter. Stay off of this. Not very harmful but insipid. Glenn Hunter can act, but he'll have to get scenarios; this isn't. Usual advertising brought poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Metro

ALL THE BROTHERS WERE VALIANT. (6,265 feet). Star cast. This picture was a knockout. It sure did please all. Satisfied the entire audience. Kept them in suspense throughout, very exciting. Did well for me. Has very good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 15-25. Joseph L. Katz, Lyric Theatre (350 seats), Woodbine, New Jersey.

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. One of the best pictures I have had the pleasure of running for a long time. Everyone praised this. Boost it. Used paper, programs, photos. Had good attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

FIGHTING' MAD. (5,436 feet). Star, William Desmond. An old one but a good one. Supporting cast helps make this western thriller a success. Nothing exceptional, but will please most of 'em. Has poor moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. An exhibitor's picture in every sense of the word. Cast splendid. A rural comedy-drama that pleased ninety-five per cent. at increased admission. Extra advertising yielded good attendance. Draw rural and small town class, town of 286. Admission, usually 10-25, raised. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

TOLL OF THE SEA. (4,600 feet). Star cast. In colors; six reels. Don't take it for four reels as listed, it's six. Wonderful picture for ladies and children. Men will not care for it. Draw family class in city of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

WOMAN OF BRONZE. (5,643 feet). Star, Clara Kimball Young. A good heavy drama. Clara is getting old but she's still good, although she overdoes the emotional scenes in several places. Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Draw rural and town class, small town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

YOUR FRIEND AND MINE. (5,700 feet). Star, Willard Mack. Can't give this much in the way of praise; it just came and went and created no ripple of excitement either on the screen or the box office. Buy it accordingly. Usual advertising brought poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Paramount

ADAM'S RIB. (9,526 feet). Star cast. This would have been a one hundred percent picture if the reflection to primitive man had been much shorter. Had this picture come in about eight reels instead of ten it would please far better. My patrons enjoyed it very much with the exception of the dragging of the part which reflects to primitive man. Fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. T. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. This is a picture our patrons like, in fact all Paramount pictures go good here in Albany. Had full house. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

BACHELOR DADDY. (6,229 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. An excellent picture for any sized town or crowd. Will hold interest for all. Pleased here one hundred percent. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,000. George E. Neel, Crescent Theatre, Woodville, Texas.

BEAUTY'S WORTH. (6,751 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Was well liked by the women. Had some good humor in it and would class it as a good program offering. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre, Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,131 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Fair program picture that pleased the majority. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. This picture registered a complete box office success, and on the whole pleased everyone. The only kick was to the effect that the story did not correspond with that of the book, but to my estimation the snow scenes are far more beautiful than the swamp scenes that would replace them, were the book followed to the letter. The price was right and had there been fess fairs in this vicinity, I would have cleaned up more money. A good feature for Sunday or any day in the week. Moral tone is splendid. Had good attendance. Used slide heralds, billboards. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A wonderful picture. Broke records with this. It is suitable for Sunday. Had extra good attendance. Draw tourists in town of 470. H. Jenkinson, Victor Theatre (250 seats), Minocqua, Wisconsin.

Preferred

ARE YOU A FAILURE? (5,700 feet). Star, Lloyd Hughes. Played this on a Saturday night. Larry Evans the author lives here and that was all that was necessary. He's a big favorite and his friends could and did fill the house. A neutral review on my part (aside from friendship for Larry), is that it is a clever idea that went wrong in the direction. At that it's a good picture and properly set on the proper day you can do well. It has some inconsistencies but as before stated that's direction. Buy this right and play it. Usual advertising brought big attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. Best since "Birth of a Nation." Everyone well pleased. Suitable for any day. Had extra good attendance. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

SALOME. (6 reels). Star, Nazimova. Did not think much of this one. Served as a good filler on a vaudeville program and brought some who wanted to see the star in "crazy" stuff as they call it. Picture is not worth running as a special feature. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

Universal

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,323 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. Very good picture with fine cast. Reginald Denny fast gaining popularity. Life drama of a fighter, suitable for Sunday (in some communities). Fine attendance, drawing middle and lower class in residential district of a big city. Admission 15 matinees, 25 evenings. J. F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,260 seats), San Francisco, California.

ABYSMAL BRUTE. (7,373 feet). Star Reginald Denny. This is a wonder picture of the class, as good as "The Flirt" from same firm. Denny has the making of a great popular star and in this, his first real picture, scores immense. Mabel J. Scott was also fine in this. Story has everything that appeals to the typical movie followers —humor, punch, action and romance. Good moral tone, suitable for any day. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Temple Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

You Bet It Helps

"Enclosed please find a Straight From the Shoulder report.

"Trusting that it will be of help to my fellow producers."—George Jacob, Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

AFRAID TO FIGHT. (4,600 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. The best Mayo picture since "The Brute Breaker." Old, but it pulled them in and pleased close onto a hundred per cent. Had a great prize fight scene which is realistic—and punchful. Good moral tone; suitability for Sunday depends on community. Above average attendance, drawing family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

BOLTED DOOR. (4,126 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. This star is popular here and all of his pictures go over well. This is not his best, nor his worst—about average. Drew us a large, pleased Sunday audience. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Above average attendance of family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre, (450 seats, St. Joseph, Missouri.

BURNING WORDS. (4,944 feet). Star, Roy Stewart. A fine Mounted Police story. The cast is good throughout. Roy Stewart looks like a good bet for exhibitors. Pleased ninety percent (rest, too sad). Regular advertising brought good attendance. Draw rural and from town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

DON QUICKSHOT OF THE RIO GRANDE. (4,894 feet). Star, Jack Hoxie. Jack sure looks like a real find for Universal. A good comedy, western drama. Pleased ninety-five percent. Has fair moral tone. I ran it on Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

DRIVEN. (5,400 feet). Star, Charles E. Mack. Here is a picture that contains the best character portrayal of any that has ever played our house. Very little padding in this one. Used posters, heralds, window cards. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,300. Admission 10-25-35. A. O. Jones, Grand Theatre (250 seats), Burlington, Washington.

FLAMING HOUR. (4,508 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. A one hundred percent program picture; a little extra expense would easily have made a special out of it. Had many favorable comments. It also made several new patrons for us. Very good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Above average attendance drawing family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre, (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

FLIRT. (8 reels). Star, Eileen Percy. This show went over nicely. The men thought it was wonderful; the women were inclined to think the heroine got off easier than she deserved; but they were all interested. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

FLIRT. (8 reels). Star, Eileen Percy. A fine picture that went over in our town with a bang. The author's name draws them in, and the cast will do the rest. A good picture for Sunday, and one that has an excellent moral tone. Used slide, ones, threes. Played to a good attendance. Be sure to get a good print on this and you're all set. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre, Chester, Vermont.

GALLOPING KID. (4,783 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Lay off this one, boys. My patrons knocked this one to pieces. Those that are strong on Hoot said it is a shame to put him in a picture like this and Hoot can't make much friends if he gets into too many of these. Fair attendance of general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

GOSSIP. (4,488 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. A dandy little flapper picture that seemed to hit the spot with our patrons. Story does not amount to much, but it had Gladys who is popular here. Played it with Baby Peggy in "The Kid Reporter" and stood them up. The kid probably did it. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Big attendance of family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats, St. Joseph, Missouri.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). Very good. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). Not as good as Mr. and Mrs. Johnson's "Big Game" picture. Too long, too many scenes about the natives, not enough about big game. If I had shown this before I did the Johnson's picture would have pulled better, while this was a good picture of its class it could not come up to the Metro picture of the same kind. Had fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

HUNTING BIG GAME IN AFRICA. (8 reels). We put this over to good business and pleased them, but we came out flat and told them what it was, practically an educational and a personally conducted tour through Africa while they were seated and comfortable; I can see where this picture, if handled differently and they were not told that there is no plot, no story, might disappoint; as it was it satisfied both the audience and the box office. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

KENTUCKY DERBY. (5,398 feet). Star, Reginald Denny. A very good melodrama. Print in poor condition and lost money. Price a little too high and had a rainy night. Had poor attendance. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

KINDLED COURAGE (4,418 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. A good "western" program picture that pleased all. Lots of action with plenty of humor. Well directed and photographed. Hoot very popular with the younger set. Moral tone good; suitable for Sunday. Drew fair attendance of general class in town of about 1,000. Admission 10-20. H. H. Hedberg, A-Muse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana,

LOVE LETTER. (4,426 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. As nice a little picture as anyone would want to see. Used ones, threes, newspaper. Had fair attendance. Draw farmers in town of 450. Admission 13-22. J. R. Rush, Pastime Theatre (240 seats), Pearl City, Illinois.

McGUIRE OF THE MOUNTED. (5,020 feet). Star, William Desmond. This is above the average for a R.N.W.M.P. story. Cast is good. Believe Desmond is going to stick for us. Has fair moral tone and not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Audience went wild over this one. Made money on this one, as I always do with Universal pictures. Have yet to run a sorry one and the rentals are always fair. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,958. R. T. Wade, Palace Theatre, Morehead City, North Carolina.

SAWDUST. (4,800 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. A nice little program picture if bought at a program price you'll not regret. Pleased here with the addition of a Larry Semon comedy which gave the program good balance. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SELF MADE WIFE. (4,960 feet). Star cast. One of their "box office" melodramas but did not work in that capacity for us. This type does not do so well as the star series that Universal puts out, yet they put this one in a higher price class. Just an ordinary movie story. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk Grand, Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

TOWN SCANDAL. (4,604 feet). Star, Gladys Walton. Very enjoyable picture. You will be glad if you run this one. I had read the story in Cosmopolitan and was more than pleased with the pictured version. Some very delightful comedy touches. A good lesson for old reprobates. Suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

Vitagraph

MIDNIGHT ALARM. (6,000 feet). Star cast. This picture went over for us in good shape; it has story, plot and action; that's what they want, these common folks of a rural town. I sense a disgust and resentment sometimes when we show a picture that is all sets and society. The farmers in the last two years have it in their heads that they are largely footing the bill for the extravagance shown as being the life led by upper strata picturized. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

Exhibitors can use tips on films as old as you run them and also on the first runs. Do your part to make Straight From the Shoulder the dependable tip department.

NINETY AND NINE. (6,800 feet). Star cast. A very good picture with plenty of action that pleased. Very good fire scene. Film in good shape. Ran Larry Semon in a "Pair of Kings" and my patrons did not hesitate to say it was an excellent program. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Warner Bros.

BRASS. (8,000 feet). Star cast. Harry Myers is himself in the comedy role; he can be depended on in anything he plays; makes his role stand out. This is a whizz of a feature, nothing better in its line have we ever shown and that is not judging it from "Take." The trouble with these good pictures, the exchange holds the price too high to be shown by a small town house until the flush of the first run advertising has died, it is then hard to put them over for a profit adequate to the rental paid. Of course the film salesmen try to tell you that a picture is not old until it has played, but anyone who has tried it knows different, especially if you are against a larger city. Arthur E. Hancock, Columbia Theatre, Columbia City, Indiana.

MAIN STREET. (9 reels). Cast includes Florence Vidor, Monte Blue, etc. A good picture, well acted and directed. Does not follow book but is an improvement on book. It has more drawing power (and will satisfy) than anything released in months. It's humorous, also dramatic. Advertising slant, give wide publicity to title of book. Draw farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

Comedies

ROLLING STONES. (Educational). This was good, especially after running Christie's "Pair of Sixes" with its bunch of tragedians. Lloyd Hamilton has any of the Christie bunch beat by a mile or two. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SATURDAY MORNING. (Pathe). A good enough comedy. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SOLID CONCRETE. (Vitagraph). The poorest one to date for us. Nothing but a couple of chases about alike. Will go over if feature is strong. Has fair moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

SOME CLASS. (Universal). Star, Brownie. This is one of the two best dog comedies we've ever had from Universal. Print poor; but say, Brownie is some dog! Regular advertising gave fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class, town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

VAGABOND. (Chaplin Pict.). One of Chaplin's old ones, but still liked by everyone. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

State Rights

FICKLE WOMEN. (D. N. Schwab Prod.). Star, David Butler. Just a fair program picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

STREETS OF NEW YORK. (Arrow). Star cast. (7 reels). Audience confuses it with the Fox story of a similar name, but this is a much better picture. Story runs easily and seemed to please the many who saw it. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

WESTERN BLOOD. (Independent Film Corp.). Star, Pete Morrison. Good, clean western action drama with a star who knows and looks the typical western movie hero. That gets over big in a house where they like that type of picture, and this is one of the good stories. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk Brand, Olympic theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Lubitsch Finishes Warner Film

According to reports received from the Warner Brothers West Coast Studio, Ernst Lubitsch has completed the filming of "The Marriage Circle," his first production under his contract with the Warner organization. The Warner Classic is now going through the cutting, editing and titling process under the skilled hands of the famous producer-director himself.

"The Marriage Circle" has aroused unusual curiosity, as the nature of the production is different than anything that Lubitsch has heretofore undertaken. The photoplay is the first production the famous producer has ever made in America using a modern setting, and it does not call for the usual massive settings and mob scenes for which Ernst Lubitsch is noted.

New Players Added To Metro Cast

Several new players have been added to the cast of "The Fool's Awakening," the Metro picturization of William J. Locke's brilliant novel, "The Tale of Triona." The entire cast of principals now consists of Enid Bennett, Harrison Ford, Mary Alden, Alec Francis, Harry Northrup, Arline Pretty, Lorimer Johnston, D. R. O. Hatswell, Lionel Belmore, John Sainpolis and William Humphrey.

The title of "The Fool's Awakening" was announced previously as "The Living Past." The new title strikes more emphatically at the heart of the story and incidentally avoids confusion with a novel, recently published, which by a strange coincidence was given the earlier title.

To Appear in Person

Kenneth Harlan, who plays the title role in the Preferred Picture, "The Virginian," will make personal appearance throughout the two-week run of that production at the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit, beginning November 11. The arrangement for the personal appearances was made by Phil Gleichman, proprietor of the Broadway-Strand, with B. P. Schulberg, producer of "The Virginian." Harlan has prepared an effective act, appearing in his "Virginian" costume.

Sets New Records

"If Winter Comes" continues to set new records for attendance and length of runs all over the United States. The Fox-Washington Theatre in Detroit is among the houses to extend the original engagement of the picture. It is now in its third week in the Automobile City.

Viola Dana Given Powerful Vehicle

Metro will present its popular star, Viola Dana, in "Revelation," as the first of a series of elaborate dramatic productions as announced by the organization a short time ago. This was decided upon partly as a reward of merit to Miss Dana, whose Metro pictures have proved unusually successful, and partly because of hundreds of requests from exhibitors in all parts of the country that Miss Dana be starred in more pretentious offerings.

"Revelation" is an adaptation of Mabel Wagnells' novel, "A Rose Bush of a Thousand Years," and will provide Viola Dana with a role that should prove the finest this capable actress has ever portrayed on the screen. The story concerns Joline, a dancer and model of the Latin Quarter, who learns that she has a soul and finally poses as the Holy Mother with such realism as to make a monk believe he has seen a miracle.

The story is one of the most entrancing ever written, absorbing and dramatic with a leading character that lifts it far above the ordinary run of screen offerings. Metro announces that "Revelation" will be given an elaborate and painstaking production, in short, everything possible will be done to surround Miss Dana with the very finest in settings, locations and a supporting cast of well-known players. Monty Blue is the only player thus far cast.

Sam Wood Starts "The Next Corner"

Sam Wood has launched the filming of his new production for Paramount, an adaptation by Monte M. Katterjohn of Kate Jordan's novel and play, "The Next Corner." "Trust to luck! Be a gambler!" This, the advice a mother gives her daughter in the story, is exactly what Director Wood is not doing. Instead of relying on fickle fate plans for the picture have been worked out with extraordinary care.

Conway Tearle, in the leading masculine role, has the part of Robert Maury, globe-trotting mining man who leaves his wife to the destinies of Paris for three years. Dorothy Mackaill, former Follies beauty who is making her Hollywood debut in the production after notable appearances in stage and screen plays in the cast, is the wife. Lon Chaney, renowned delineator of unusual types, has a leading part in the character of Serafin, intriguing foster brother of Don Arturo, a Spanish Apollo who plays upon the hearts of women and pays dearly.

Others in the cast are Louise Dresser, Ricardo Cortez and Remea Radzina.

December Date on Schertzinger Film

Victor Schertzinger has completed production on "The Man Life Passed By," one of the Premier Features on the Metro 1923-1924 program. The production is now in the cutting rooms, where it will be edited under the personal supervision of Mr. Schertzinger who, aided by Winifred Dunn, wrote it.

Mr. Schertzinger gathered a notable cast for his picture. It includes such famous names as Hobart Bosworth, Cullen Landis, Eva Novak, Percy Marmont, Jane Novak, Lydia Knott, Gertrude Short, Lincoln Steadman, Andre de Beranger and William Humphrey.

"The Man Life Passed By" is scheduled for a December release. The adaptation of it was made by Winifred Dunn and it was photographed by Chester A. Lyons. J. J. Hughes, who was associated as art director with Mr. Schertzinger when the latter directed Jackie Coogan's Metro picture, "Long Live the King," acted in the same capacity for "The Man Life Passed By."

Jane Novak was loaned for this production by Chester Bennett.

Good Reports

Grauman's million-dollar theatre in Los Angeles, Gordon's Capitol and Olympia, Boston, and Fay's, Providence, are among the many first-run houses that have reported good business with the Hodkinson picture, "Michael O'Halloran," Gene Stratton-Porter's picturization of her novel of the same name.

Under Water Views in Ince Film

After experimenting for several weeks a new method of photographing under water, work has been evolved by Thomas H. Ince for his new comedy special, "The Galloping Fish," which has just gone into production for First National. Some of the novel "punches" of the story come from shots made of "the fish" played by Freddie, a trained seal, in a mammoth tank which has been specially constructed for the picture.

Louise Fazenda, as "Undine," the diving beauty, merrily disports in the tank with Freddie, while Syd Chaplin, Ford Sterling and Chester Conklin also have unlimited opportunity to display their aquatic skill in shots of the picture made in flood waters.

"The Country Kid" Has Premiere

The new Warner Classic "The Country Kid," starring Wesley Barry, had its world's premiere at the Rialto Theatre, New York, opening on Sunday, October 28. The feature is one of the Warner Classics which has been booked by the Paramount houses and other important theatre chains throughout the different territories.

Hardly had the play date been set when the Warner Bros. Exploitation Department started work making exploitation tie-ups with prominent stores and shops dealing with the different merchandise that is included in the many commercial tie-ups with Wesley Barry.

Claire MacDowell Added

Claire MacDowell, whose screen appearances are without number, has been added to the cast of Fred Niblo's new production, "Thy Name Is Woman," which is now in the early stages of production under Mr. Niblo's direction. The cast now includes Ramon Novarro, Barbara La Marr, Wallace MacDonald, Claire MacDowell and William V. Mong.

Opens in Wisconsin

"Down to the Sea in Ships," Elmer Clifton's whaling picture, begins its premiere engagement in Wisconsin at the Alhambra Theatre, Milwaukee, next Saturday. John K. Edwards of the Hodkinson Publicity Department, left Monday for Milwaukee, where he will assist Leo Landau, manager of the Alhambra, with his exploitation and advertising campaign.

Morris and Lesser Enthusiastic After Visit to Warner Studios

Upon their return to New York, following their visit to the Warner Brothers' West Coast Studio, Sam Morris, of the Warner organization and Myer Lesser, advertising director, manifested the greatest amount of enthusiasm for the future in all matters where Warner product is concerned.

During the visit of the Warner officials, conferences were held with H. M. Warner concerning important matters for future consumption, such as distribution, future product, advertising schemes and general discussions concerning the productions that are now facing the cameras, or are about to go into production.

"I do not believe I have ever been filled with such great enthusiasm as I am now after this visit to the studio," declared Sam Morris upon his return. "Never before have conditions been so clearly brought home to me and never before has the realization come that we are building such a splendid foundation for the future.

"In the first place, the beautiful Warner Studio impressed me as a colossal monument—a monument dedicated to the accomplishments of the present and future of an organization that has sprung to the foremost ranks in an unusually short time. Then to step inside and see the marked efficiency, the different facilities that have been established to aid production, the set upon which the master hand of Ernst Lubitsch is guiding a big production and the set that John Barrymore can be found on from 8 o'clock in the morning until 12 o'clock at night, putting every ounce of his energy in making 'Beau Brummel,' a picture that will live forever—naturally, it all creates the greatest amount of enthusiasm.

"Perhaps my most impressive moments were spent on the 'Beau Brummel' set with John Barrymore, and on 'The Marriage Circle' set with Ernst Lubitsch. Barrymore is throwing everything aside to make 'Beau Brummel,' under the direction of Harry Beaumont, his greatest picture. The same can be said of Lubitsch, who works like a human dynamo with his players. Monte Blue, Florence Vidor, Marie Prevost, Harry Myers, Creighton Hale and Adolphe Menjou are all contributing remarkable characterizations.

"Exhibitors can also look forward to a fine picture in the Sidney Franklin production, 'Tiger Rose,' starring Lenore Ulric. And the Harry Rapf production, 'Lucretia Lombard,' starring Monte Blue and Irene Rich, promises much. I witnessed previews of both of these Warner Classics in Hollywood and can say that they are two of the very finest productions I have ever seen. 'Daddies,' the screen version of David Belasco's famous play of the same name, also will be an outstanding screen contribution. Under the direction of William Seiter, Mae Marsh and Harry Myers are working like clockwork together and the different flashes I saw of them at the studio made me extremely enthusiastic, and eager to see the finished product."

Ingram Has Arrived In Egypt

Rex Ingram, whose "Scaramouche" is making Broadway talk these days through its sensational popularity at the Forty-fourth Street Theatre, New York, arrived safely in Cairo, Egypt, according to a cablegram received at the Metro offices last week. Mr. Ingram's journey to Cairo was by way of England, from which point he turned into Ireland, where he visited his father, and then through Paris, where he spent several days gathering equipment.

With Mr. Ingram are Alice Terry, his wife, who plays the leading feminine role in "Scaramouche"; Marian Burton, noted scenario writer, and Curt Rehfeld, Mr. Ingram's production manager. Several noted European experts are to join Mr. Ingram in Cairo, where the entire party will make special researches for Mr. Ingram's next several productions for Metro. He and his party will return here around the first of the new year.

Smith Completes Cast

David Smith, who is directing "A Tale of Red Roses," the picturization of George Randolph Chester's novel of American city life, has completed the cast. It had already been announced that Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller had been engaged for the leading roles.

Others in the cast are Niles Welch, William Norris, Edith Yorke, Sidney De Grey, Violet Palmer, George Webb, Margaret Landis, Miles McCarthy, Milton Ross and Charles Meakan.

"Fashion Row"' in Hands of Editors

Several new players, not announced hitherto, were added to the cast of Mae Murray's latest Metro starring picture, "Fashion Row," while it was in the course of production. The entire cast appearing in support of Miss Murray now consists of Elmo Lincoln, Earle Fox, Freeman Wood, Mathilde Brundage, Sidney Franklin, Madame Rosonova and Craig Biddle.

"Fashion Row," which Miss Murray completed last week, is now in the cutting rooms where it is being edited for an early eastern premiere. This new production follows close upon the heels of "The French Doll," which now is one of the big current Metro successes. Another production, the third Mae Murray picture of the Metro 1923-1924 program, is "Mademoiselle Midnight," which probably will go into production within the next several weeks now that Miss Murray has completed "Fashion Row."

"Fashion Row" is scheduled for December release. It was written for Miss Murray by Sada Cowan and Howard Higgin. It is a Robert Z. Leonard presentation through Metro and is sponsored by Tiffany Productions, of which Mr. Leonard is director-general and M. H. Hoffman general manager.

Vitagraph Prints Arrive

Vitagraph laboratories are printing "The Man from Brodney's," the picturization of George Barr McCutcheon's famous romance, produced by David Smith and shipments are being made to the branches.

With Mr. Kerrigan in the cast are Alice Calhoun, Wanda Hawley, Miss DuPont, Pat O'Malley and Kathleen Key.

"Why Worry" Fills Each Inch of Standing Room

Reports reaching the Pathe Home Office from various sections of the country continue to relate how "Why Worry," Harold Lloyd's latest release for Pathe, is gathering them in at leading motion picture theatres.

Following the opening of "Why Worry" at the Adams Theatre in Detroit, John Kunsky wired the Pathe Home Office as follows: "Delighted to say that 'Why Worry' attendance on the opening day of engagement greatly exceeded the opening attendance for 'Safety Last.' I am hoping for record business."

Another showman who hails "Why Worry" as a "veritable sensation," is Sam Harding, of Kansas City. After the opening of Lloyd's feature comedy at the Liberty Theatre in that city, Sam Harding wired the following dispatch: "'Why Worry' at the Liberty Theatre has proved a veritable sensation. Opened to the biggest receipts ever taken in at this theatre in any one day. Look for all records to be broken this week."

Schulberg Busy Again in West

B. P. Schulberg, producer of Preferred Pictures, left New York last Sunday for Los Angeles after several weeks in New York discussing distribution and producing plans for Preferred Pictures Corp.

As soon as Mr. Schulberg reaches his studios in Los Angeles, he will start work on "Poisoned Paradise," the Robert W. Service novel to be produced by Gasnier. This production, the story of which is laid in Monte Carlo, will be one of the most pretentious of the Preferred Fifteen. The screen adaptation has been written by Waldemar Young. Casting is now under way. One of the principal roles will be given to Clara Bow, who has recently completed work in "Maytime" and "Black Oxen."

As soon as "Poisoned Paradise" is under way, work will begin on "The Triflers" and "White Man." "The Triflers," adapted from the novel by Frederick Orin Bartlett, will be a richly mounted production with its locale in Paris and the Riviera. "White Man" is a thrilling adventure story laid in the jungles of Africa.

Off At the Flash

People stood for over an hour waiting to secure standing room in the Cameo Theatre last Sunday night when "The Drivin' Fool," a Hodkinson picture, began its New York premiere. Not only the public but the critics agreed that it is one of the speediest pictures of the season.

Vitagraph to Film Sabatini's Latest

World rights to "Captain Blood," the latest novel by Rafael Sabatini, now being presented on the screen and on the legitimate stage on Broadway have been purchased for production by Vitagraph.

The purchase of "Captain Blood" was among the European missions planned by Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, who arrived in London last week. The transfer of the rights to the story was completed through the New York agents of Sabatini, Messrs. Brandt & Kirkpatrick. The announcement of the purchase was made on a cabled permission of Mr. Smith.

The price paid for "Captain Blood," it is reported, exceeds that of any novel or play purchased for the screen in the last year.

Big in Los Angeles

Tom Forman's latest Preferred Picture, "The Broken Wing," is playing to big business in Los Angeles where it opened last Sunday at Lund's New Broadway Theatre. A report of the picture's success was received by B. P. Schulberg in New York in a telegram from Larry Lund, who said:

"'The Broken Wing' opened in my theatre last night. Business more than satisfactory. Packed house. Critics mightily pleased with production. If 'Broken Wing' is criterion of what 'B. P. Schulberg Presents' means then the coming season spells success in large letters for both exhibitors and your organization."

"Gentle Julia" Done

The William Fox screen version of Booth Tarkington's story, "Gentle Julia," has been completed at the producer's West Coast Studios, under the direction of Rowland V. Lee. Bessie Love plays the title role.

Important Announcements Coming Regarding "Birth of the West"

Important announcements regarding author, star and cast of "The Birth of the West" are expected to be forthcoming within the next few weeks from Frank J. Carroll, of the Colorado Pictures Corporation. Mr. Carroll is now on his way to Denver for a series of conferences, after which he is likely to proceed to Los Angeles to complete contracts in connection with the Colorado organization's initial production.

Regarding "The Birth of the West" Mr. Carroll declared to a representative of Moving Picture World:

"The picture business has reached a stage where it is dangerous to divulge too much of story and theme until a production is actually on the screen.

"For that reason I have little to say at this time about 'The Birth of the West.' Film men who remember 'The Cavell Case' and 'For the Freedom of the World' will appreciate, however, that when I start to work on a production bearing so valuable and important a title as 'The Birth of the West' that I have in mind a picture that will measure up in every way to its wonderful possibilities.

"I have always been a believer in box office names, and when announcement is made in the near future regarding the identity of author and players I feel certain that exhibitors will grant that I am holding true to my policy.

"The rest had better remain unsaid until the picture is on the screen. You hear so much these days about spectacular scenes, effects involving thousands of people, thrilling climaxes, and so on, that the words mean little.

"When it comes to selling the picture to the exhibitor, and the exhibitor's problem of selling the picture to the public, it is the screen that gives the answer. I am willing to let the screen tell my story."

The Colorado Pictures Corporation, with headquarters at Denver, Col., is composed of many of the most representative business men of the Rocky Mountain metropolis.

Dwan Cutting

Allan Dwan is busy these days at the Paramount Long Island studio cutting and titling "Big Brother," Rex Beach's story, which he finished filming recently. Tom Moore, Edith Roberts, Raymond Hatton, Joe King, Charles Henderson and Mickey Bennett have the principal roles in the production.

Fine Tie-up for "Michael O'Halloran"

That the W. W. Hodkinson picture, "Michael O'Halloran," Gene Stratton-Porter's screen adaptation of her popular novel of the same name, offers unlimited possibilities to the exhibitor for tie-ups of nation-wide scope, was demonstrated recently at Springfield, Mass., when the Kiwanis Club unanimously indorsed the picture and voted it one of the most entertaining productions of the year.

The occasion was a special meeting of the Kiwanis Club held in the Nayasset Clubhouse. The speaker of the evening, Dr. Juniper of St. Petersburg, Florida, took as the subject of his discourse, "Be Square," the theme of "Michael O'Halloran," and emphasized the importance of this principle being brought home to every boy in America.

After the showing, the Kiwanis Club, by a viva voce vote, gave Joseph O'Sullivan, special exploitation man who effected the tie-up, a letter of indorsement and thanks to the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation.

Large Organization Is Going to Make Picture

While a complete list of the artists who will accompany Director Edwin Carewe to Algeria to make exteriors for "A Son of the Sahara" has already been announced, the production, technical and business staff has only just been rounded out.

Louis M. Jerome will have charge of the business of the company. Robert Kirrle will be chief cameraman. Wallace W. Fox, Mr. Carewe's brother, will act as his assistant. Adelaide Heilbron, who prepared the scenario on "A Son of the Sahara," will be with the company in Algeria. Miss Heilbron prepared "Mighty Lak a Rose" and "The Girl of the Golden West" for production. Rene Plaisetty will act as Mr. Carewe's co-director. Al Greene will act as second cameraman and Dick Easton will accompany the troupe as second assistant director.

Three Hodkinson Book Week Films

"The Affairs of Lady Hamilton," "Down to the Sea in Ships" and "Puritan Passions," all Hodkinson releases, have been listed by the National Committee for Better Films as "better pictures having a book source" and suggested for use especially during Motion Picture and Children's Book Week, November 11 to 17th.

The committee has urged exhibitors to show book-films during this week and suggested that they confine their showing to only book-films. When this was done last year, they state, it attracted a great deal of attention besides obtaining fine audiences.

Motion Picture and Children's Book Week offers a fine opportunity for tie-ups with schools, libraries, women's clubs, parent-teacher associations, book dealers and newspapers.

Sells Preferred Pictures Abroad

The foreign rights to all Preferred Pictures produced in the past and to all those produced in the next five years are acquired by Ben Blumenthal, president of Export and Import Film Co., Inc., as the result of a deal completed between Mr. Blumenthal and B. P. Schulberg and J. G. Bachmann of Preferred Pictures Corporation.

Export and Import Film Co., will be selling agents for Preferred Pictures Corporation in all countries except the United States and Canada as a result of this important contract.

"I have acquired the rights to a group of pictures of unusual box-office value," said Mr. Blumenthal, "and I have absolute faith that B. P. Schulberg will continue to deliver pictures of the type of 'The Broken Wing,' 'Mothers-in-Law,' 'April Showers,' 'The Virginian' and 'Maytime.'"

"Puritan Passions" Drawing Big Crowds

During the second week of its engagement at the Cameo Theatre, New York City, "Puritan Passions," the Film Guild picturization of Percy Mackaye's "The Scarecrow," did even more business than during the first. Hundreds of people were turned away the first night of the second week.

This increased business was due largely to the tremendous amount of word-of-mouth publicity the picture received and to the lavish praise of the critics. The distinctiveness and beauty of the production, Glenn Hunter's admirable acting of a role different from anything he has ever done, the weird and haunting musical score written especially for the picture by the eminent composer, Frederick S. Converse, not only brought new patrons, but brought many back the second time.

Vitagraph Will Release Blaney Stage Successes

Vitagraph announces that it will release for the screen a number of the Charles E. Blaney stage successes. These productions are made under the personal direction of Mr. Blaney, who recently organized Charles E. Blaney's Pictures Corporation. The first to be screened is "The Love Bandit."

Doris Kenyon, Victor Sutherland and Cecil Spooner are featured players in the cast which Mr. Blaney assembled for his first picture. Dell Henderson was chosen as director and the continuity was written by Lewis Allen Browne.

Blaney's stage successes include "Little Church Around the Corner," "More to Be Pitied," "The Curse of Drink," "Dancer and the King," "Across the Pacific," and "Nell of the Circus."

Pathe Official Back; Extols Companies' Coast Activities

"The production boom which hit the Los Angeles producing center some time ago continues, as far as the Pathe production units are concerned, with no immediate signs of diminishing," declared Victor Shapiro when interviewed concerning his observations during his five-weeks' business trip to the Pathe producing plants on the West Coast.

"'The Girl Expert,' Harold Lloyd's first independent venture, will be about two months more in production and should be ready some time in January. This will introduce Lloyd in a new type of role.

"Under William R. Fraser, secretary and general manager of the Harold Lloyd Corporation, affairs at the Lloyd plant have gotten away to a brilliant start. The same staff that has assisted Lloyd in his previous work has been retained, including John L. Murphy, Sam Taylor, Fred Newmeyer, Tim Whelan, Joe Reddy, Ted Wilde, and others. Tommy Gray, prominent among Broadway vaudeville circles, has been engaged by Lloyd as a gag man.

"At the Hal Roach studio I found things moving at a fast pace under the pressure of getting out one single-reeler and one two-reeler a week in addition to the feature comedy drama activities on which Hal Roach is just starting, the first subject being "The Fighting Family." Mr. Roach will shortly announce the elevation of Charley Chase to stardom to be co-featured with Blanche Mahaffey in a series of single-reel comedies.

"Will Rogers is now adapting his wit and humor of the stage to the screen, and at the time of my visit to the Roach lot was starting work on "Uncensored Movies," the third number of his two-reel series. It will be a novelty innovation. Mr. Roach said that due to the success attending the "Dippy-Doo-Dads" this series would be continued in more lavish form, special stories being prepared that will embody parodies on conventional dramatic plots, the human roles being enacted by monkeys, ducks, geese, dogs, etc.

"One of the most striking personalities that I met during my entire trip was Bob McGowan, director of the "Our Gang" comedies. In the handling of this bunch of kids Bob displays a genius of a unique order. The 'Gang,' under McGowan's direction had just completed a pirate story with the action laid along the San Pedro coastline and aboard the U. S. Battleship California. This promises to be one of the most hilarious numbers of the entire "Gang" series. Mickey appears in this offering as the blood-thirsty chief of the pirate band. McGowan talks of his diminutive players with as much enthusiasm as a Broadway producer does of his world-famous stars. Among other things, he tells the cross-orbed world that in Farina he has the greatest colored actress on the screen.

"Fred Jackman had just completed the direction of "Rex, King of Wild Horses," a story written by Hal Roach. One of the few survivors of the almost extinct breed of wild horses of the Northwest was secured by Roach for the principal role. This production is now being cut and titled and should be shipped East about the middle of November. Additional announcements concerning the Hal Roach plans are forthcoming upon the return of W. B. Frank, Roach's newly appointed Eastern representative, who leaves for the coast on November 1st.

"Sennett is now breaking in Harry Langdon, who will be featured in a series of two-reelers for Pathe release. At the time of my visit, the Sennett comedians, Harry Gribbon, Billy Bevan, and Madeline Hurlock were at work on a lighthouse location, a novel background for comedy incident and situations. Alberta Vaughn, Mack Sennett's seventeen-year-old find, is being developed with a view of making her a featured comedienne in the near future. Irene Lentz has been elevated to the position of featured player and has been cast opposite Ben Turpin "Dick" Jones, director of Mabel Normand, has just started work on a new Normand feature titled "Marianne."

"The preliminaries for the production of a serial version of the James Fenimore Cooper's "Leatherstocking Tales," under the direction of George Seitz, have been completed, and Mr. Steitz will leave shortly for Great Bear Lake to film exteriors on that location. This chapter-picture will be in ten reels with Harold Miller and Edna Murphy in the leading roles. The continuity was prepared by Robert Dillon. Another serial story in preparation is "The Fortieth Door," to be adapted from the novel of the same title. Allene Ray will share stellar honors with Harold Miller in this episodic production."

WILLIAM R. FRASER

Secretary and general manager of Harold Lloyd Corporation, under whose management the independent Lloyd producing organization has gotten away to a flying start.

Mack Sennett, producing series of two reel Ben Turpin and Mack Sennett comedies for Pathe distribution, and Vic Shapiro, Pathe's exploitation and publicity manager at the Mack Sennett lot during "Vic's" recent business trip to the Pathe Coast for Pathe.

Ruby Promoted

O. J. Ruby has been appointed branch manager of the Pathe office at Cleveland. He began with Pathe seven years ago as assistant cashier. In 1917 he became cashier and served in that capacity until he was made a salesman in 1920, except during the period when he was abroad with the A. E. F.

Universal Making Two Elaborate Productions

Within thirty feet of each other on one of Universal City's big stages, two of the most elaborate productions which will be offered by Universal Pictures Corporation in the coming year are well into production. These are "My Mamie Rose" and "The Turmoil."

"My Mamie Rose" is the first starring vehicle of the "Merry Go Round" girl, Mary Philbin. Irving Cummings is directing the filming of the Owen Kildare novel.

"The Turmoil" is the Hobart Henley production which will follow "A Lady of Quality" on the screen. It is Booth Tarkington's novel, which will be produced with the purpose of making it twice as big a success as "The Flirt," another Tarkington story which Henley made some time ago and which was an exceptional success.

Palmer Photoplay to Get Wide Publicity

Palmer Photoplay Corporation intends to have a staff of high-calibred men doing pioneer advertising and publicity work in every important center throughout the country, months before the release of its first production, "Judgment of the Storm."

Fifty-seven of these skilled publicity ambassadors are already in the field, operating out of forty-two leading cities from coast to coast. Directed by a capable, experienced field director from his office in Los Angeles, each one of these men is making an intensive drive for business at the local box-office.

Not only are they in close personal contact with Palmer Photoplay Corporation's big army of 281,000 ambitious screen writers, who are already boosting "Judgment of the Storm" as an example of an everyday individual success through taking the Palmer course in photoplay writing, but, with the numerous social facilities at their disposal, they are arousing the curiosity compelling, human interest of the general public in the persevering little woman who wrote the fine scenario for the picture. The value of this extraordinary advance publicity service to exhibitors will be apparent to every live-wire showman, Palmer Photoplays say.

Laurel Burlesques Big Features

In the new Hal Roach series of two-reel comedies starring Stan Laurel, a novel note is struck. In each a popular screen production is burlesqued. The first, "Roughest Africa," released September 30, has proved a success. It is a travesty on H. A. Snow and Martin Johnson's jungle adventure pictures.

The second, "Frozen Hearts," is a burlesque of Ibanez' "Enemies of Women," and is scheduled for October 28, while the third, "The Soilers," is a laughable travesty on the Rex Beach story "The Spoilers." The hero's remark, 'I broke him with my own hands," is said to have been made the basis of genuine laughter. It will be released November 25.

Turns to Schools

To secure suitable material for the series of Century Comedies starring Buddy Messinger, Julius Stern has sent a hundred letters to principals of schools in New York inviting the boys and girls to send in idea themes or names of stories which they believe would make good vehicles for the thirteen-year-old star.

Order Extra Prints on "Critical Age"

In order to meet the anticipated demands on the W. W. Hodkinson exchanges for "The Critical Age" during Children's Week Ernest Shipman has ordered extra prints of that picture for all branches.

This picture, which is based on the well-known Ralph Connor story, "Glengarry School Days," is especially suited for the special Children's Week programs. It is a picture of children, with swift, stirring action throughout.

Made true to the Shipman type, it is a clean, wholesome story, with a real nature background. "The Man from Glengarry" and "The Rapids," two other Shipman pictures, which the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation is distributing, are said to be of the same type.

"Mitsi" Bought for Mary Philbin

Universal announces the purchase of "Mitsi," the celebrated French novel by Delly, or Marie Petitjean de la Rosiere, published last year by Ernest Flammarion. "Mitsi" is scheduled as a vehicle for Mary Philbin.

Begin Gibson Film

Work has been started on Hoot Gibson's new special production, "Hook and Ladder," at Universal City.

Six Cosmopolitan Pictures Ready for Release Through Goldwyn Co.

With photography on "Mary of Burgundy," Marion Davies' next big super feature, practically completed, the Cosmopolitan Corporation now has six pictures for release through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan in the ensuing few months. This sextet of new films is in addition to "Enemies of Women," the Cosmopolitan production featuring Lionel Barrymore and Alma Rubens, already released through Goldwyn Cosmopolitan.

Of the six new pictures, "Little Old New York," starring Marion Davies, has had a brilliant pre-release showing at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, where it played twelve consecutive weeks, and is now playing record-breaking engagements at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago; the California Theatre, Los Angeles, and the Empire Theatre, London. "Unseeing Eyes," a screen version of an Arthur Stringer story, is now playing a pre-release engagement at the Cosmopolitan Theatre. In the latter film Lionel Barrymore and Seena Owen are featured. E. H. Griffith directed from the scenario by Bayard Veiller.

The remaining four pictures, in addition to "Mary of Burgundy," include "Under the Red Robe," "The Daughter of Mother McGinn" and "Cain and Mabel."

"Mary of Burgundy," the next Marion Davies special, is a picturization of Charles Major's historical romance, "Yolanda." It is said to be the biggest thing that Miss Davies has done for the screen, and, in lavishness of production, beauty of settings, historical accuracy and excellency of acting, is said to excel Miss Davies' epoch-making "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

The same combination which created the latter film is responsible for "Mary of Burgundy." In addition to Charles Major as author and Miss Davies as star, this combination includes Robert G. Vignola, director; Luther Reed, scenario writer, and Joseph Urban, scenic designer. The cast includes Lyn Harding, Holbrook Blinn, Ralph Graves, Maclyn Arbuckle, Leon Errol, Johnny Dooley, Theresa Maxwell Conover, Mary Kennedy, Ian MacLaren, Paul McAllister, Roy Applegate, Martin Faust, Gustav von Seyffertitz and Thomas Findlay.

"Under the Red Robe," a picturization of Stanley Weyman's famous story of the same name, has as its featured players Robert B. Mantell, John Charles Thomas and Alma Rubens. Alan Crosland directed from the scenario of Bayard Veiller, and Joseph Urban designed the settings. The supporting cast includes William H. Powell, Sydney Herbert, Genevieve Hamper, Ian MacLaren, Evelyn Gosnell, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Andred Dillon, Rose Coghlan, Otto Kruger, Mary McLaren, George Nash and Charles Judels.

"The Daughter of Mother McGinn," filmed on the Coast, is a picturization of a Jack Boyle "Boston Blackie" story. Colleen Moore is featured and the cast includes Forrest Stanley, Tom Santschi, Eddie Phillips, George Cooper, Margaret Seddon, Carmelita Geraghty, Wade Boteler and Kate Lester. George Hill directed under the supervision of Frances Marion, who adapted the story to the screen.

"Cain and Mabel," from H. C. Witwer's story of the same name, is described as the most thrilling sporting picture ever filmed. It has been filmed on a big scale and in addition to its prize-fight, includes a stirring horse race, a musical comedy in which the famous Ziegfeld "Follies" chorus appears, a realistic fire and numerous other high-lights. Luther Reed made the screen adaptation and E. Mason Hopper directed. Joseph Urban designed the settings.

Anita Stewart is featured with T. Roy Barnes and Oscar Shaw. The cast also includes Dore Davidson, Tom Lewis, Hal Forde and others. Many famous sporting and literary celebrities appear in the film, including Tex Rickard, Johnny Gallagher, who refereed the Dempsey-Firpo fight; Joe Humphreys, H. C. Witwer, Irvin Cobb, Damon Runyon, "Kid" Broad and "Bugs" Baer.

Big Bookings on Davies Success

The Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan Distributing Corporation has recently closed a number of big bookings for Cosmopolitan's "Little Old New York," Goldwyn's Elinor Glyn picture, "Six Days," and Distinctive's "Green Goddess," starring George Arliss.

Phil Gleichman has booked "Little Old New York" for a minimum of four weeks at the Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit, starting November 25. Tom Moore has booked "Little Old New York" for his Rialto Theatre in Washington, D. C., beginning November 18. C. E. Whitehurst has booked "Little Old New York" for a showing of two weeks at the New Theatre in Baltimore.

Balaban & Katz have booked "Little Old New York" for showing at the Riviera, Tivoli and Central theatres in Chicago after its run at the Roosevelt Theatre. The Marion Davies film is now in its third big week at the Rosevelt, where it broke the records of both "When Knighthood was in Flower" and "Enemies of Women." "Little Old New York" has been booked at the Capitol Theatre, Dallas, for ten days, opening on Thanksgiving Day.

"Six Days" has been sold to the A. H. Blank circuit. After doing a big business at the Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle, "Six Days" opened the Blue Mouse Theatre in Portland, where it had a most successful week. It played two weeks in Seattle, and has been retained for a second week in Portland. It was retained for a second week at Ascher's Merrill Theatre in Milwaukee, where it broke all records for week-day receipts. It has closed a big booking at the Empire Theatre in Syracuse.

Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan have just sold Distinctive's "Green Goddess" to Nicholas Schenk for the Loew Circuit in New York City. Balaban & Katz have booked it. This production was recently shown at the Metropolitan Theatre in Atlanta, where it did a big business. It has just closed two big weeks at the Capitol Theatre in New York, where it did a record business after a five weeks' showing at advanced prices at the Sam H. Harris Theatre.

"In the Palace of the King" has been booked at the California Theatre in San Francisco, beginning November 10.

Rawlinson Finishes

Herbert Rawlinson and Robert F. Hill have finished their first team product at Universal City, "His Mystery Girl." This is the first time that Hill has directed Rawlinson. Rawlinson's next will be in the film version of "Clay of Ca'lina," which Calvin Johnson wrote. L. G. Rigby has prepared the continuity.

Special Showing for "The Steadfast Heart"

By arrangement with the executive board of the Boy Scout Foundation of Greater New York, the Distinctive Pictures Corporation's production, "The Steadfast Heart," will be given a special showing for Scoutmasters and Assistants of the entire Metropolitan district. There are nearly 2,000 of these young men who exercise command over 25,000 boy scouts of Greater New York. The showing will be held at the Town Hall, New York City, on November 8.

Arrangements for the larger showing of this picture were made after a private showing given to representatives of each of the five borough councils of the Foundation. The executives assembled to view the picture were so impressed with the outstanding quality of it that they requested a showing be arranged for the entire leadership of the city.

Shortens Title

The title of the Metro picture heretofore announced as "The Man Whom Life Passed By" has been shortened to "The Man Life Passed By," according to a Metro announcement. This is a Metro Premier Feature production, written by Victor Schertzinger and Winifred Dunn and now in production at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Mr. Schertzinger.

Desmond Starring in New Universal Serial

Universal announces the commencement of production this week on a new chapter picture starring William Desmond. The new serial will be called "Hands in the Dark." William Craft will direct it.

Helen Holmes will take an important role in "Hands in the Dark." She has not been seen in Universal pictures for several years.

"Hands in the Dark" probably will be ready for release late this year. It will be in 15 chapters of two reels each.

To Be at Cameo

Emory Johnson's latest F. B. O. special, "The Mailman," has been booked into the Cameo Theatre, to open November 25 for an indefinite run.

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

Weiss Releases Big Biblical Film on Independent Market

Max Weiss, vice-president and general manager of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces that his organization will release their big Biblical production, "After Six Days," on the independent market. This announcement may come as a complete surprise to those in the industry due to the fact that this production has been rumored at different times, as being ready for release by at least three of the large chain organizations.

The picture is unique in film history, having taken several years to produce at a cost of several million dollars. Starting with Adam and Eve it ends with the immortal Songs of Solomon.

Mr. Weiss, when questioned regarding this move by Artclass, said: "We have taken some time to arrive at this decision, due mainly to the many propositions that we have had offered us by distributing organizations, and also on account of our desire to investigate the condition of the state right market at the present time. The several propositions we had with the chain organizations, while attractive, left some doubt in our mind regarding the financial advisability of this move and, after investigating the condition of the market, we came to the conclusion that if this set of exchange men were offered something really big and attractive, they not only would be willing to pay for it but had the money in hand to finance this undertaking.

"Immediately on our announcement we closed three very exceptional deals for the release of 'After Six Days'; namely, for the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory to the Kerman Films; for Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey to Standard Film Attractions, and the Dominion of Canada to Charles Lalumiere of Montreal. In addition, we have received propositions from almost every territory throughout the United States, aside from having sold every foreign territory with the exception of South Africa, India, Burma, Ceylon and the Strait Settlements, and the territory of Australia, New Foundland, Tasmania and New Zealand, all of which gives us added encouragement and leads us to believe that we have made the right move.

"The Kerman Exchange in New York is doing the most exceptional business with this production that has ever been known for an independent. They have closed some very astounding contracts both for runs and the price received.

"It has been invariably shown in over ninety per cent of the cases where the picture was booked for a given number of days, it has either been held over for an equal number of days of the original booking or booked for a return engagement and played to more money on the return than the original showing.

"The production has also demonstrated itself as the most exceptional box office record-breaker of all time. As an instance of this, the first showing of the picture in Brooklyn was held at the Premier Theatre. After the Sunday opening, Mr. John Turtle decided that the only way possible for all the patrons of his theatre to see it was first to extend the booking from a week to two weeks and secondly to add three extra shows each day. Mr. Turtle started his first show at eight o'clock in the morning and began his last at twelve o'clock midnight.

"The result was that more people visited this theatre during the run of this picture than ever before in the same number of days. This house seats over twenty-five hundred people and he ran seven shows a day.

"What is happening to the Kerman Exchange in New York is repeating itself in Eastern Pennsylvania. David Starkman, manager of the Standard Film Attractions of Philadelphia, wired me last week for five extra prints, due to the tremendous amount of business placed on his books by the exhibitors in his territory.

"It is the intention of Mr. Charles Lalumiere of Montreal to organize five road shows for this picture, dividing the Dominion in five zones, having each of the shows play every city, town and hamlet. All told, I think we have made a very wise decision because there is no question that this year is the year for big pictures and big profits, and in "After Six Days," we have one of the greatest productions from every point of view that has ever been offered on any market, particularly the independent market.

Naomi Childers Back To Screen

Naomi Childers returns to the screen in a leading role with Doris Kenyon in C. C. Burr's society melodrama, "Restless Wives," which is being directed by Gregory La Cava at the Burr Glendale Studio.

Miss Childers began her screen career some years ago at the Vitagraph studio and appeared in prominent roles for this company.

Burr McIntosh in C. C. Burr Film

Burr McIntosh, one of the best known personages of the screen and stage, has been engaged to play a prominent role in C. C. Burr's new society melodrama "Restless Wives," with Doris Kenyon, now in the making at the Burr Glendale studio under the direction of Gregory La Cava.

Jack Cohn of C. B. C. Goes to Coast with Normal Negative Cost Plan

For the past six months Jack Cohn and Joe Brandt of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation have been collecting data as to the actual earning power of motion pictures throughout the United States, primarily with a view to bringing the cost of pictures to a level with the actual rental earning possibilities of productions.

These data were secured for the object of eventually setting all the facts gathered before the directors and stars at the coast to show the fallacy of the policy of inequitable prices for salaried stars and indiscriminate expenditures on the part of directors, irrespective of the possible returns for the money they have spent.

Mr. Cohn left for the coast last week with this data in hand to confer with Harry Cohn. He will first arrange a meeting with the directors who are now making pictures for distribution by the C. B. C. Corporation. Then Mr. Cohn hopes to be able to convince his actor and director friends, who have known him and worked with him for a period of twelve years, that their present attitude on salaries is responsible for the present uncertain situation in production.

There is no intention on the part of C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to change its present plans of engaging the best possible star for every picture it makes, and to have its other producing units do the same, but Mr. Cohn hopes to be able to convince both stars and directors that they are killing the goose that lays the golden egg by continuing the costs that have prevailed.

Several big pictures which the C. B. C. have planned for the balance of the season are ready to go into work, but Mr. Cohn believes that his personal chats on the coast will at least bring about a tendency to deflate the salaries of stars and engender a more business-like attitude on the part of directors toward expenditures for the production of pictures.

It is Mr. Cohn's intention to confer not only with those stars and directors who are engaged by C. B. C. and the producers distributing through C. B. C. but also to effect a clearing house at the coast whereby the actors will receive a fair wage for their work annd a steady one.

Mr. Cohn hopes to be able to show the producing factors at the coast that the way to normal conditions of productions throughout the year is to get salaries and productions down to where they belong instead of having abnormal costs and seasonal periods of production activity.

Mr. Cohn believes unhealthy costs can be avoided if the matter is handled on a basis whereby directors and actors are made to understand the normal amount of money a picture can earn.

Providence Premiere of "The Unknown Purple"

The world's premiere presentation of "The Unknown Purple," directed by Roland West and adapted from the stage-play by Mr. West and Carlyle Moore, took place on Monday, October 29th, at the Strand Theatre, Providence, Rhode Isalnd.

Manager Reed of the Strand Theatre used an extensive exploitation and advertising campaign in putting this picture on and at the time of going to press reports the most phenomenal business of the year in Providence. Besides using space in all the newspapers Reed made an entire change in his lobby, predominating it with purple hangings and purple rays from baby spots, in keeping with the theme of the picture, distributed over fifty thousand pieces of literature and devised many tie-ups throughout the city.

"The Unknown Purple" is enacted by cast including Henry B. Walthall, Alice Lake, Stuart Holmes, Helen Ferguson, Ethel Grey Terry, James Morrison, Brinsley Shaw, Frankie Lee, Richard Wayne, Johnny Arthus and Mike Donlon. It was produced by Carlos Production and is being franchised on the independent market by Truart Film Corporation. M. H. Hoffman, vice president of Truart, and William Shapiro, of the Franklin Film Corporation, Boston, who control the Truart franchise for the New England territory, arranged the world's premiere showing at Providence.

Editorial Praise for "The Santa Fe Trail"

The Arrow Film Corporation is in receipt of a copy of the Sunday "Observer," Charlotte, N. C., date of October 14, wherein that publication praises, in its editorial columns, Arrow's serial special, "The Santa Fe Trail."

In a letter accompanying the article, Arthur C. Bromberg, president of Progress Pictures, which is distributing "The Santa Fe Trail" in the South, says: "For your information, the Charlotte 'Observer' has been the 'Bible' of a great many showmen. It has been their policy in the past to recommend and endorse very few shows or motion pictures and this editorial on 'The Santa Fe Trail' is therefore extremely interesting."

The editorial says in part: "Motion picture producers are fast coming into appreciation of what the people are demanding. The frivolities of the screen are being educational. In the Ottoway, last week, there was begun a historical story of the blazing or the Santa Fe Trail, in which the hardships of the pioneers are depicted and in which the progressive development of the country will be staged. It proves a fine school of instruction."

Burr's Latest Binney Film in Boston Debut

"Three o'Clock in the Morning," the new C. C. Burr production starring Constance Binney, has been booked at the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston by Samuel Moscow, of Moscow Films, Inc. This double booking of an independently produced picture is interesting, as Jake Lowry's houses in the Hub center have long been considered the criterion of what is best in pictures.

The C. C. Burr organization produced and distributed "I Am the Law," "Burn 'Em Up Barnes," "Sure Fire Flint," "The Last Hour," "You Are Guilty" and others that made picture history in the high spots. But big as these pictures were they were not considered big enough for the Lowry houses in Boston.

Therefore, with the booking of "Three o'Clock in the Morning" in these theatres the officials of Mastodon Films, Inc., feel they are proving their contention that their productions for the 1923-24 season would be of the first quality as to story, stars and production.

F. Heath Cobb Back from Boston with More Plans

F. Heath Cobb, director of publicity for the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation, who has been in Boston for the past two weeks with Samuel V. Grand, president, and Elliott Dexter, Bryant Washburn, Mabel Forrest, etc., has returned to New York City. Here he will carry to completion negotiations for a very well known story to be used by Elliott Dexter in a large New England feature shortly to be made for Grand-Asher.

While the Grand-Asher executives and stars were in Boston, R. William Neill, director for Elliott Dexter, toured the entire Boston district to decide upon possible locations to be used in the feature. He seemed well satisfied with the ground and believes that those places of outstanding historic interest will add to the atmosphere of the picture.

The picture will be the second Dexter has made for Grand-Asher. The first is named "The Way Men Love," from a story by Adam Hull Shirk. Cutting and titling have just been completed and that film will have a special trade showing at the Grand Ballroom of the Astor Hotel on Wednesday morning. In this picture, Elliott Dexter is supported by Mildred Harris, Anders Randolf, Grace Carlisle, De Witt C. Jennings, Sydney Bracey and Jeanne Carpenter.

Semon Prepares to Film Truart Picture

Larry Semon, who has been in New York for a number of weeks completing final arrangements for the filming of his first production under his contract with Truart Film Corporation, has left for Los Angeles to commence shooting immediately. While in New York Semon conferred with M. H. Hoffman, vice president of Truart, with reference to cast, direction and all other production details.

"The Girl in the Limousine," adapted from the A. H. Woods stage success of that name, written by Wilson Collison and Avery Hopwood, will be Larry Semon's first picture. It will probably be ready for release about January 1.

Ben Wilson to Release Ten Thru Grand-Asher

Carrying in his pocket a signed contract with Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation for ten more all-star features, which he will produce following the completion of the present ten, Ben Wilson has just arrived from New York.

"I cannot help feeling optimistic," declared Mr. Wilson, "following my discussions with numerous exchange men. It seems to me that the coming season belongs to the independents. All of my productions will be based upon the principle of common sense. The stories will be good, the pictures will be well made, the casts will be the best that I can get, and the character of the stories will be widely varied. They will be made with a view to a reasonable price."

It is understood that Bryant Washburn, Elliott Dexter, Mabel Forrest and others of the Grand-Asher organization will leave Boston the latter part of the present week and on their arrival in Hollywood will resume activities.

"Superstition" Widely Discussed in Industry

Speculation is rife in film circles as to what distributing organization will release the big independent production, "Superstition," now being cut and edited at the Hollywood Studios where it was filmed by Creative Productions.

According to W. H. Carr, general manager of Creative Productions, the picture, which is from I. W. Irving's original story, "Trapped," is one of the most lavish and entertaining independent films created this year and several offers have already been made for the negative.

"Superstition" boasts of an all-star cast, including such well-known names as John Bowers, Margaret De La Motte, Cesare Gravina, Edward Burns, Joseph Dowling, Claire McDowell, Sheldon Lewis, Spottiswoode Aitken and Martha Marshall.

Has Canadian Premiere

Hepworth's production, "Lily of the Alley," had its Canadian premiere at the Pantages Theatre, Toronto, the week of October 15. It is being released in Canada by Regal Films, Ltd., under the title, "In the Shadow of Whitechapel."

Associated Exhibitors Announces Great Lineup of Productions

By ARTHUR S. KANE,
President of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

With pride and gratification Associated Exhibitors invites attention to its fall schedule, revealing what we consider one of the greatest lineups ever presented.

In two and one-half years experience in marketing Harold Lloyds we have found that the big picture is 'the thing." In keeping, we have been moved to get big pictures of the calibre of those named in our announcement. Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry?" Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Douglas MacLean in "Going Up" and Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" are the kinds of attractions we are proud to sponsor.

When it started on its career as a purveyor of screen entertainment, the reorganized Associated Exhibitors declared its determination to obtain and serve the very cream of independent production. It pledged itself to study closely the wants of the public and to exert itself to the utmost to merit the public's approval.

We have kept the faith. The theatregoer has given his answer in a way that can be neither mistaken nor misconstrued.

We have grown consistently. Each succeeding season has seen a steady, logical advance in the quality of Associated Exhibitors product, just as we promised it should. Our productions during the season of 1921-22 were good; those in 1922-23 showed a decided forward step. Now, in 1923-24, we are going far beyond anything that has been before.

The overwhelming success of each of the offerings named in our current announcement—and every one that has been released has been put to a fair test—is evidence that they have struck the popular chord, that they are meeting the wants of the public in full measure.

ARTHUR S. KANE
President, Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

We realize the extreme difficulty of surpassing this fall's attractions. Yet we feel that with Harold Lloyd's mid-winter picture, Douglas MacLean's "The Yankee Consul," and Mabel Normand's "Mary Anne," following the current successes of these stars, together with other big product which we hope to negotiate, the season's supply will be a group of pictures as high in quality and as big in box-office possibilities as any in the market—if they are not, indeed, actually higher and bigger than any others.

Charles Ray's tremendous success on the speaking stage is at once a source of deep gratification and a promise of yet greater film triumphs. Everywhere Mr. Ray is being acclaimed as one of our greatest actors. I confidently believe that his next picture for Associated Exhibitors will reflect a further advance in his artistry, that he will return to the screen refreshed by his experience in other fields, with new and valuable ideas and a surer grasp of his great art. And, even aside from his present helpful experience, "The Courtship of Myles Standish" would, in itself, have inspired him to greater things.

In the meantime, while realizing that quality production is making a deeper appeal than ever before, and striving earnestly and—admittedly—with success—to make our contribution to that high quality, Associated Exhibitors has recruited a live, capable, enthusiastic sales force which, working under the efficient, energetic direction of Mr. J. S. Woody, our general manager, has placed this organization at the top of the heap in marketing also. Hence we have a double reason for facing the future with entire confidence.

Throughout the motion picture industry the movement is definitely forward. Great attractions will continue to be the rule rather than the exception, for in the main the producer and the distributor are in perfect accord with the exhibitor in his fixed determination to meet the public's wants. The high standard reached in recent years will be more than maintained. It will be surpassed. And the advance will continue, gathering impetus as it goes on.

In this definitely forward movement Associated Exhibitors, proud of its success and deeply appreciative of the many manifestations of approval which have met its past efforts, confidently expects to keep well in the van.

Mabel Normand Scales New Artistic Heights

It was in July last that a contract was signed under which Associated Exhibitors was to distribute the future Mack Sennett productions starring Mabel Normand. Immediately the prediction was made that with this affiliation Miss Normand would rise to new heights as a universally popular comedienne. This has been justified in overflowing measure by the reception accorded "The Extra Girl," in her first picture under the new management.

While therefore Mabel Normand had adhered closely to the portrayal of light dramatic and comedy roles, in "The Extra Girl" she demonstrates her right to be classed among the foremost emotional actresses of the screen. This is the testimony of the critics.

"The Extra Girl" was written as well as produced by Mack Sennett, who prepared it especially for her, with her particular abilities in mind during the time of writing. It tells the story of a "movie-struck" country-town girl who seeks fame and fortune in Hollywood, only to find disappointment.

All the attendance records for the Mission were smashed, not only on the opening night of the indefinite run, but consistently during the ensuing week, though the picture encountered uncommonly strong competition. The newspaper comments were unanimously favorable. "Mabel is at her best," wrote Edwin Schallert in the Los Angeles Times. "She has, for her, a perfectly believable role. It's one that matches her personality much better than Suzanna, and she doesn't have to act." "The whole play is built for entertainment," said Florence Lawrence in the Examiner, while Guy Price declared in the Herald, "You're going to thrill over Miss Normand."

Mabel Normand is much more than a comedienne in "The Extra Girl." That is one of the points that the reviewers have united in emphasizing—that she shows in her new characterization her ability to follow the laughter of one moment with tears the next. Especially in the home scenes, and again when the family is faced with disaster, there are tugs at the heart-strings, and in such situations Miss Normand rises to heights which she had little opportunity to attain in her earlier pictures.

The contract between Mack Sennett and Associated Exhibitors calls for two, but not to exceed three productions a year, these to be pictures of the super-type exclusively. "The Extra Girl" was directed and produced under the supervision of F. Richard Jones, Mack Sennett's production manager.

The second of the Normand features for Associated, which is now in course of production, is "Mary Anne," which also is by Mr. Sennett and in which Miss Normand is again to have a role giving opportunity to her irresistible personality to force itself yet deeper in the affections of screen fans.

Associated Exhibitors Pictures Are Based on Public Demand

By J. S. WOODY,
General Manager of Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Gone is the day of the make-it-and-seek-a-market-later class of motion pictures. The present is the time when the public is making its wants clearly known to the exhibitor, when the exhibitor transmits that information to the distributor, and the distributor, in turn, orders from the producer a picture to be made after given plans and specifications—for an already prepared market.

Associated Exhibitors is proud to be playing a part in this process. We believe we are giving the picture fan what he desires most. We base this belief partly on the fact that we cause to be made for distribution by us the character of production that the exhibitor avowedly requires. And the exhibitor buys pictures simply and solely on the basis of values and box-office returns.

That the public does know what it wants, that the exhibitor is heedful of the popular demand, and that Associated's policy is the correct one we consider amply attested, moreover, by the box-office reports on those of the productions named in our current announcement which already have had showings: Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish," Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl." and Harold Lloyd in "Why Worry?" Each of these has met a reception from theatregoers and critics such as is accorded only an outstanding attraction of the very first order.

Associated is proud—justly proud—of this array of product. It is product in keeping with the policy we are sedulously careful to follow—to offer no production that is lacking the stamp of either character of quality. It is gratifying to know, too, that it is just such big time entertainment as this that the public insists upon having.

J. S. WOODY
General Manager, Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

The advantage of the process followed by the independent distributor and which is the fundamental basis of the Associated Exhibitors policy are many and manifest. Our close contact with the exhibitor, maintained through a carefully-selected and well-organized field staff, enables us to know exactly—or with as close an approach to exactness as is humanly possible—what kinds of pictures the exhibitor requires. It is our constant aim to keep our hand on the pulse of the man who runs the theatre. Thus, we are in a position to transmit exhibitor opinion and preference to the producer, to supply him with a vast fund of information and data of very great value to him.

In other words, we hand the producer a pattern to cut out and make up into a finished garment—in this case a motion picture whose character is in accordance with the consensus of exhibitor opinion throughout the country. Then we endeavor to exercise extreme vigilance, to the end that all mistakes may be detected and corrected while the picture is in the progress of making. Close supervision of whatever is made for us is essential to assure our receiving and delivering to the exhibitor what he wants. In the final analysis, then, the product is virtually exhibitor-made.

The adoption by many leading first run exhibitors of the policy of indefinite runs—retaining a film as long as it continues to attract—is only one demonstration of the independent distributor's importance to the industry as a whole. For it is obvious that only product of the highest quality can be used profitably in an indefinite run, and that product is most certain to be found in the wider field of selection which the independent distributor offers.

It is an axiom in our industry—in every industry that has to do with the furnishing of public entertainment, indeed—that close association with the exhibitor is based upon confidence. That we enjoy this confidence—as evidenced by results—is a source of deep and lasting gratification to us. Confidence is predicated on delivery of the goods, on achieving results, on making good.

So, Associated Exhibitors believes that in following consistently and steadfastly along the lines it early set out for itself and to which it has always adhered it is performing a service of very real value to the industry of which it is a part; to the exhibitor; without whom the business could not exist, and to the great pleasure-loving but thoughtful and discriminating public, to which, after all, the producer, the distributor and the exhibitor alike must look for continued life and prosperity.

Harold Lloyd Working on Another Big Comedy

The Harold Lloyd comedies are progressively popular. That is to say, each succeeding one of his attractions proves a greater drawing card, a bigger money-getter than the one just before it. As "Why Worry?" is Mr. Lloyd's latest it might be said to have brought him to the climax of his fame,—had he not scaled to climactic heights several times before, and were he not even now at work on another production which, too, is certain to be a world-beater.

"Why Worry?" was the feature at the Mark Strand Theatre, New York, during Labor Day week, and it packed 'em in so thickly and regularly that it was held over for a second week to accommodate the overflow. It caused Don Allen to observe in the Evening World: "Take it from us, if you see Harold in this, his most uproarious farce for months, you won't have a cause to worry."

The Evening Telegram's reviewer found "Why Worry?" Mr. Lloyd's "greatest humorous achievement to date," though he recalled "such admirably fine works of laughter as 'Grandma's Boy,' 'Dr. Jack' and 'Safety Last.'" The Evening Mail described the picture as "another of the successes which this gifted comedian is using to climb the ladder of fame to a place all his own in film comedy."

Such comments as these are typical of thousands which are uttered throughout the country during the triumphal march of the Lloyd picture. All the Lloyds enjoy the unique distinction that they excite no adverse criticism anywhere. Not only that, but it is doubtful if any ever read a Lloyd review which was merely lukewarm in its praise. Announcement of the coming of one of Harold's films is the signal for a run on every reviewer's stock of superlatives.

Just to cite one or two instances of "Why Worry?" triumphs, in addition to that on Broadway, New York, it should be said that this latest of big comedy features smashed every known record of Eastman Theatre, Buffalo, with a total attendance for a single week of 64,923 paid admissions. And at the West End Lyric, St. Louis, it opened to a capacity house, with an overflow crowd of two thousand, and the capacity houses and the overflows continued every day of the entire run.

But while each succeeding Harold Lloyd offering sets a new high water mark, the appearance of a new Lloyd never means the rejection of others which have gone before. Each of them possesses "lasting" qualities. Thus even now, while "Why Worry?" is approaching the zenith of its popularity, "Grandma's Boy" released more than a year ago, and others of his successes continue to smash records.

For one thing, the Lloyd pictures are all "different"—so different that frequently they inspire editorial praise in leading newspapers, which, except in the case of this superlative player is almost unheard of among picture actors. Perhaps the chief reason for this is that Harold does not resort to cheap humor of the slapstick, pumpkin pie variety to put his offerings across. Each of his screen plays is based on a real story, a definite purpose. In this connection it is interesting to note that it was Harold Lloyd who gave real comedy a definite place as the feature offering in theatre programs. None of his pictures is presented as the comedy supplement to a feature of another character. It is the whole works.

Mr. Lloyd is now at work on another production. All that is necessary to say of it is that it will be typically Lloydian—hence a mirthquake.

Title Changed

The title of the William de Mille Paramount production, which, filmed as "Everyday Love," features Agnes Ayres, Jack Holt, Nita Naldi, Theodore Kosloff and Rod La Rocque, has been changed to "Holiday Love."

Charles Ray Achieves Ambition of His Career

CHARLES RAY

In producing "The Courtship of Myles Standish," the most ambitious effort of his career, Charles Ray satisfied a life-long ambition. "I have had my heart set on just such a venture as this for a long time," he confided shortly before the premiere of this super-production, " and I am getting immense satisfaction out of the prospect of giving the public a picture it will remember longer than anything else I ever attempted."

No longer as a barefoot boy does Charles Ray appear on the screen, deeply as he endeared himself to the public in that very human and appealing characterization. He has attained full stature as the central figures in one of the colossal productions of all time.

In "The Courtship of Myles Standish" Mr. Ray has entered the limited realm of independent producer-stars who are seeking to draw from the art of the silver sheet the highest expression of its powers. Based on Longfellow's epic poem, in which America's first love story is told in the legend of John Alden and Priscilla Mullins, it unfolds a thrilling chapter of American history, the Great Adventure of the Pilgrim Fathers. The picture might aptly be titled, "The Founding of America."

"The Courtship" took Los Angeles by storm at its world premiere in Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, Los Angeles. The house was packed to capacity, the audience gave audible demonstration of its pleasure, and crowds continued to besiege the box-office at all subsequent showings.

"When you see the brilliant and dramatic film which Charles Ray has constructed out of the old Longfellow poem you will stand amazed," declared Florence Lawrence in the San Francisco Examiner. "It will thrill every spectator. You will like Ray in his new characterization." "There is plenty of suspense," wrote L. B. Fowler in the Daily News. It is most thrilling. Don't miss this production. Don't pass it up."

The greatest thriller in the picture is the series of sea storm scenes, showing how the plucky little Mayflower was all but lashed to pieces in her memorable voyage to an unknown land. Such realistic scenes, declare the reviewers, never before were shown. The Mayflower, by the way, is an exact replica of the original, save that it is of steel construction, and represents a cost of $64,000. This "set" the most expensive of its dimensions ever built, is such a remarkable work of art that patriotic societies have urged that it be purchased and placed in a Los Angeles city park as a permanent memorial. From seventy to 100 men were employed for eleven weeks in this single construction.

"The Courtship of Myles Standish" is many-sided in that it makes a stirring appeal to every element of the picture-loving public. Its entertainment lure has been thoroughly attested by the newspaper and magazine reviewers. Fred Niblo, one of the most able and best known of picture directors, declared in a telegram to Arthur S. Kane that "In story, production, action, direction, it surpasses anything else in recent years."

As a literary, historical or educational document of value it probably has never been approached. Delegates to the convention in California of the National Educational Association, after witnessing a preview, acclaimed it the greatest educational work ever produced in film, and students of New England colonial history declare it shows the beginnings of America as they have never been revealed elsewhere, either on the printed page or on the silver sheet. And to the chorus of approval from students is added the testimony of the every-day picture-going layman, who finds in it a series of amazing thrills which arouse the enthusiasm of every onlooker. Frederic Sullivan, who had proved his genius in earlier offerings, directed the production.

Announcement that Charles Ray Production, Inc. had decided to make a number of super-productions, all of which would be placed with Associated Exhibitors for distribution, was one of the important news events of the past year in picture circles. Production work on "The Courtship of Myles Standish" was then well under way, and enough was known of the prodigiousness of the enterprise to give assurance that Associated had captured the picture prize of the last twelve-months. This was confirmed with the picture's premiere, in Los Angeles, a few weeks ago. The original announcement then proved of secondary importance only to the presentation of the production itself.

Douglas MacLean's Popularity on the Increase

The recent rapid rise of Douglas MacLean as a young comedian of considerable ability and deep appeal has been so marked as to attract the almost universal attention of picture-goers. He caused somewhat of a sensation in "23½ Hours Leave," and there was yet wider recognition of his sterling worth when he achieved an even greater success in "The Hottentot."

The announcement a few months ago, therefore, that he had organized his own company and was about to start independent production was greeted with enthusiasm, the public recognizing the broader opportunity to develop his ideas and give expression to his talents. Almost simultaneously came the news, likewise welcomed, that the young star had enlisted under the banner of Associated Exhibitors.

Accompanying these announcements was the information that Mr. MacLean's productions would be big comedy specials of the type of "The Hottentot," picturizations of successful plays or well known stories by noted authors. To this policy the young actor has adhered, his first independent production being a screened version of the Broadway musical comedy hit, "Going Up," and his second, now under way, being adapted from the equally popular stage success, "The Yankee Consul."

What Mr. MacLean has accomplished with "Going Up" is perhaps best attested by Frank Craven, star in the stage production, who, having seen the screen offering declared: "I want to tell you how thoroughly I enjoyed my preview of 'Going Up.' All the old laughs and situations were there and your additions to the comedy as we played it really add."

The story concerns the young author of a book about flying who is forced through a chain of comic circumstances actually to make a flight, though he has never been in an airplane. The high point of the stage drama was reached where the young author was up in the air, risking his life in a 'plane which he didn't know how to bring back to earth. Stage craftsmanship proved incapable of showing the aviator up among the clouds, trying to control his machine—side-slipping, whirling into spinning nose-dives and breath-taking loops.

In the screen version, on the other hand, Douglas MacLean is shown braving the dizzy heights of thin air, making a thousand hair-breadth escapes in a series of aerial manoeuvers which leave the spectator dazed with excitement. Thus, in his first production he not only has proved himself a star of the first magnitude but has gone far to win a decisive victory for the silent drama in the long controversy over the respective merits of stage and screen productions.

The Free Press, of Detroit, where the MacLean picture recently closed a highly successful run in the Madison Theatre, declared: "Going Up" is one of the most delightful of recent pictures and will endear this clever young actor-producer to screen producers everywhere." John H. Kunsky, the Madison's owner, added even more enthusiastic praise, inspired in part by tremendously gratifying box-office report.

In New York "Going Up" enjoyed a remarkable run and blase Broadway was demonstrative in its approval. "The laughter almost drowns out the work of the musicians," wrote the reviewer of the New York Times. "'Going Up' is a better picture than it ever was a play or musical comedy," said Harriette Underhill in the Tribune, and Robert E. Sherwood, picture critic of the New York Herald and of Life described Mr. MacLean as "one of the few adroit farceurs of the silent drama. He is suave, graceful and well-finished in his methods, he can get along comfortably without the aid of obvious gags. He is excellent all the way through."

Jack Partington wired to J. S. Woody from San Francisco: "'Going Up' is far better than 'The Hottentot' or '23½ Hours Leave.' It gave us one of the most successful weeks, artistically and financially, in the Granada's history. You have a winner." From Pittsburgh, Kansas City, every city and town, indeed, in which "Going Up" has shown, have come equally demonstrative experssions of approval—all of them affording convincing evidence that Douglas MacLean made the ten-strike of his life when he struck out as his own producer.

Mr. MacLean's selection for his second production, that other well knockout musical comedy, "The Yankee Consul," will be remembered as the vehicle which brought fame to Raymond Hitchcock.

A. S. Kane Goes to Los Angeles to Negotiate for New Product

To look after matters affecting productions now being handled by his organization, and to negotiate with producers who have in mind the making of new product of the same high calibre, is the double purpose of Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, who is leaving for Los Angeles in a few days. Mr. Kane expects to remain in California several weeks at the least.

"I have long coveted the opportunity to devote more time to production affairs," said Mr. Kane yesterday. "This has been made possible since the acquisition by Associated Exhibitors of Mr. J. S. Woody as general manager.

"Associated Exhibitors is immensely pleased with the reception accorded the 1923-24 attractions it has so far placed before the public. 'Going Up,' now appearing in every territory of the country, has given to theatres that have shown or are showing it their best weeks of the season so far.

"With Charles Ray in 'The Courtship of Myles Standish' well launched on an indefinite run in Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre, and Mabel Normand indefinitely at the Mission Theatre, Los Angeles, in 'The Extra Girl,' these two great features have started their careers in a wonderful way and proved themselves among the outstanding hits of the current season.

"Harold Lloyd in 'Why Worry?' is enjoying the greatest success ever attained by this remarkable comedian. 'Tea—With a Kick!' meanwhile, and Leah Baird in 'The Destroying Angel' are off to a great start. These attractions illustrate the standard Associated Exhibitors has set for itself and which it is determined to maintain."

"Going Up" Scores at the Big Eastman Theatre in Rochester

Everyone who has seen Douglas MacLean in his super-flying comedy release for Associated Exhibitors, "Going Up," agrees that it is his outstanding success to date and one that will take a lot of trying to produce a better, says Associated Exhibitors, and bidding for first runs among exhibitors throughout the country has been extremely keen.

During the run at the Eastman Theatre, Rochester, N. Y., recently, the manager arranged with the Eastman School of Music to lend him some of its pupils for the occasion, and several of the melodies from the musical comedy, "Going Up," were sung as a prologue to the picture.

William P. Costello said of the picture in a review in the Rochester Journal: "Mr. MacLean is splendid, as usual. Here is a young comedian who amuses quite consistently."

R. F. said in a New York letter to the Christian Science Monitor, Boston: "Played by marionettes, 'Going Up' would still be a comedy prize. Now that it has reached the screen, with the added serial adventuring that the camera makes possible and the infectious pleasantries of Douglas MacLean to boot, the film version is particularly rich in kindling humors."

F. N. Phelps Praises "Tea—With a Kick"

The Hennepin-Orpheum Theatre, in Minneapolis, is known throughout the country for the high quality of its offerings and the astuteness of its management. There is very little that gets by such a live-wire showman as F. N. Phelps, the manager. In a letter to Associated Exhibitors he praised "Tea—with a Kick" highly.

Gives Big Praise to "David Copperfield"

Under the heading, "A Model of Condensation," the Minneapolis Journal of a few days ago warmly praised the showing of Associated Exhibitors' "David Copperfield" at the Hennepin-Orpheum Theatre, and declared: "If we were Will Hays we would sentence every maker of 12-reel films to a weekly viewing of this picture." The Journal said in part:

"To film David Copperfield in sufficient detail to satisfy the confirmed reader of Dickens would be to produce a photoplay of inordinate length; even a production which included in its scope all of the numerous characters in this book strikes one as impractical, even if not inconceivable.

"The photoplay at the Hennepin-Orpheum this week has condensed in seven reels the life of David Copperfield, and because there are so few sins of commission in the picture we can readily forgive those of omission—even the excluding from the film of Little Em'ly.

"We regard the picture as a model of condensation; a picture which, if memory of the book has grown rusty in years, will pleasantly recall the characters that once sprang from its pages in flesh and blood—David, Micawber, Peggoty, Dora, Agnes, Uriah Heep, the Murdstones and others. The simplicity with which the film has been produced is admirable; big scenes and lavish sets have been entirely subordinated to the more important task of character delineation.

Darnton with Fox

Charles Darnton, who has been dramatic critic on the New York Evening World for the last twenty-one years, has joined the scenario department of Fox Film Corporation, and is now at the West Coast studios of the company.

Charles Ray Triumphs in "The Girl I Loved"

Three weeks ago Charles Ray opened his stage tour of "The Girl I Loved" at the Spreckles Theatre in San Diego, and was hailed by the newspapers as a genius in the role he portrays as the bashful farmer boy. So great was the ovation at the premiere that it almost reached the magnitude of a Broadway opening.

From San Diego Mr. Ray moved on to the Broadway Theatre, Denver. The reviewers for the papers also were flattering to Mr. Ray and the stage presentation, and the Denver audiences were more than enthusiastic. How greatly the play pleased the critics is shown by the following reviews from Denver papers:

George Loons in The Denver Express: "Charles Ray is a magnificent actor. His is the art of pantomime developed to the highest degree. But besides this he has a voice that takes its color from the situation as subtly as do the muscles of his body and the expression of his face. 'The Girl I Loved,' too, is a poignant, poetic and exquisite bit of romance. It is a faithful presentation of youth and youth's love as they used to be before youth was slain by the war. Ray's style tends toward the simple, the pathetic, the unsuccessful. And he is an artist."

F. E. W. in The Denver Post: "At the Broadway is 'The Girl I Loved,' in which Charles Ray gives one of the finest and most original exhibitions of acting I have ever seen. It is well worth seeing just for Ray's acting. * * * It is after he has grown to man's estate and has to convey to the audience, without the aid of words, the torment of his secret that he is masterful. Such pantomime I have never seen! * * * His work is probably prophetic of a new and convincing style of acting that the movies may give the stage."

Helen Black in The Rocky Mountain News, Denver: "There are certain interpretations of an awkward, shy youth who, even when he grows up, never quite achieves poise that will always be associated with Charles Ray, and the character of the farmer boy provides him with an opportunity to display all of these in addition to a dramatic ability which is best disclosed in the half-mad dreams of the half-crazed youth. Charles Ray is the whole show."

Added to Cast

Immediately after the completion of Universal's "Lady of Quality," Earl Foxe accepted the offer of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation to play the light-heavy in "Innocence." He will therefore appear opposite Anna Q. Nilsson, who was secured for the principal female role in this production.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

First of "Secrets of Life" Leads Educational's November Schedule

Included in Educational's November schedule which calls for four two-reel comedies and five single-reel subjects, is "The Ant," the first of the new series of single-reel subjects recently acquired from Principal Pictures Corporation. This series issued under the general title of "Secrets of Life," is the work of Louis H. Tolhurst, a young inventor who perfected a "cool" light process which has enabled him to secure wonderful microscopic pictures of insect life. At previews in Los Angeles and New York these single-reel subjects received great praise from the press because of the manner in which they have cleverly combined entertainment and instruction and it is predicted that they will find a ready welcome with all classes of patrons. "The Ant" will be released the first week in the month.

The four two-reel comedies are as follows: Two Christies, "Fool Proof," starring Neal Burns, released first week of November, and "A Perfect 36," released the third week of the month, starring Bobby Vernon; a Mermaid Comedy, "Uncle Sam," which is the second of this brand featuring Lee Moran and a star cast including such well-known comedians as George Ovey and Hank Mann; and a Tuxedo Comedy, "No loafing," featuring "Poodles" Hannefor, the celebrated Hippodrome clown, who was so well received in the first Tuxedo "Front." It will be released the last week in November.

In addition to "The Ant," the single-reel comedies include two Cameos, "Hang On," released the second week, featuring Cliff Bowes and Virginia Vance, and "Hot Sparks," for the last week featuring the same players. There will also be a Lyman H. Howe "Hodge Podge" entitled "The Bottom of the Sea," for release the final week, and the fourth of the "Sing Them Again" series under the title, "Memories," for the third week in November.

Grantland Rice Making Series of One-Reel Sport Films for Pathe

Another instance of Pathe's expanding activities in the short subject field is the announcement that plans have been completed for the distribution of a series of single-reel sport pictures to be known as "Sportlights." They will be produced by J. L. Hawkinson from stories by Grantland Rice, the well-known newspaper and magazine writer on sporting activities and editor of the American Golfer.

It is stated that these pictures will be different from any previous sport films and will present such phases of the different sports as are characteristically thrilling and dramatic, at the same time presenting in constructive fashion the technique that has made champions.

"Sportlights" will be released every two weeks beginning with December 16. The first will be "Wild and Woolly" which visualizes a typical western rodeo. The second which will appeal particularly to the women is "The Super-Sex," which in a humorou sand thrilling manner contrasts the girl of yesterday with the amazingly dashing and vigorous and robust out-door girl of today.

The third, "The National Rash," deals with golf, shows Sarazen, Bobby Jones and various women "champs" in action and traces the development of the game from its origin in Scotland until the present day. The fourth, "Taking a Chance," presents thrilling moments in football, horsejumping, etc., and aims to demonstrate the value of nerve at the crucial moments in creating champions.

The fifth is "Great Competitors" and shows Devereaux Milburn and Thomas Hitchcock in polo, Babe Ruth and Frank Frisch in baseball, Tilden and Johnson in tennis, Max Marsten in amateur golf, and Alma Mann in swimming. The sixth, "Stadiums and Solitude," affords flashes of quiet and secluded out-door sports like hunting and fishing contrasted with frenzied arenas of football and baseball.

Extensive newspaper co-operation is planned to assist in exploiting this series. Mr. Rice's articles are syndicated under the title applied to the series and his newspaper "Sportlights" have won a large following. This should prove of great value in winning new patrons.

Pathe's exploitation department is also preparing elaborate campaign material, and tie-ups with local sport writers will be effected in the key cities. A syndicate mat service on "Kings of Sport" will be another feature of the campaign.

Four Century Two-Reel Comedies Scheduled for November Release

For November Universal will release four Century comedies. Each is the product of a different director, and are said to be characterized by fast action and numerous original and decidedly humorous touches.

"Golfmania" heads the list as the first release. In this comedy Earle is assisted by Billy Engle in his golf antics. Both are would-be champions, who meet with a variety of comedy adventures.

"Down to the Ship to See," starring Pal, the dog comedian, was directed by Al Herman, and is said to be an exceptionally suitable vehicle for Pal. Roscoe Karns plays the leading human role in this two-reeler.

"She's a He" is Buddy Messinger's offering for the month. Buddy is cast as a plumber's assistant and he also appears in a girl's garb in certain scenes. Several of Century's popular comedians are in the supporting cast.

"Miles of Smiles," starring Baby Peggy, is said to be her most unusual offering.

"All-Stars" Liked

Hodkinson reports that enthusiastic reports have been received from exhibitors throughout the country on the series of thirteen All-Star Comedies produced by C. C. Burr, starring Charles Murray. Each of these two-reelers is based on a real plot, around which is woven comedy incidents, and continued heavy booking attest their popularity, says Hodkinson.

Novelty in "Topics"

Beginning with No. 42 Pathe announces that "Topics of the Day" will present each week a "Sketchograph" by Julian Ollendorf, the celebrated artist and creator of screen novelties. They will deal with items of timely interest.

Julius Stern Here

Julius Stern, president of Century Comedies, is in New York for consultation with his brother Abe particularly with reference to Baby Peggy features. The two brothers are also arranging details for their contemplated cross - country tour of exchange centres. Mr. Stern will remain in New York for an indefinite period.

Pathe Announces New Comedies

Pathe announces that Will Rogers' newest comedy will be "The Two Covered Wagons," a travesty on "The Covered Wagon." Rogers has a dual role, appearing in the widely different roles portrayed by J. Warren Kerrigan and Ernest Torrance in the feature.

"Ten Dollars or Ten Days" is the title of the latest Mack Sennet comedy for Pathe, starring Ben Turpin, who appears as a soda dispenser in a department store. Harry Gribbon is cast as a ribbon clerk.

Another Mack Sennet comedy for early Pathe distribution is "The Light-House," which was filmed around light-houses on the coast, and offers thrills as well as laughs. Billy Bevan, Harry Gribbon and Kalla Pasha are in the cast.

Hodge-Podge Praised

Educational reports that the series of Lyman H. Howe "Hodge-Podge" single-reelers is meeting with great success in England, and is receiving praise from the trade press. The "Film Renter and Motion Picture News" said regarding a portion of one of the issues which showed "A Hurry-Up Excursion to Washington, D. C.," it is even more exciting than a "Ride on a Runaway Train," which it resembles, and which played six times on Broadway, New York. "A more striking and entertaining short feature series has never been offered to the trade," says that publication.

Injects Novelties

Louis H. Tolhurst, whose series of single reel "Secrets of Life" are being distributed by Educational, states that the fourth subject in this series will show the most unusual scenes ever screened—that of a caterpillar transforming from its worm-like form into the cocoon stage.

Unusual Feat

In search of novelty F. B. O. has injected a pirate sequence into Episode 9 of "Fighting Blood," while in number eight of this series there is a barge fight fashioned after the historic barge battles between Corbett and Joe Choyniski and other fighters.

SHORT SUBJECTS REVIEWED IN THIS ISSUE

Dear Ol' Pal (Pathe)
Do Women Pay? (Pathe)
Goldmania (Universal)
Heads Up (Educational)
Hustlin' Hank (Pathe)
Lucky Rube (Grand-Asher)
Mark It Paid (Grand-Asher)
So Long Sultan (Universal)
Southbound Limited (Grand-Asher)
Twilight Trail (Universal)
Up in the Air (Fox)
Uncle Sam (Educational)

"Heads Up"

(Educational—Comedy—One Reel)

In this single reel Cameo comedy distributed by Educational there is, as usual, an abundance of rough and tumble action and though there are some familiar stunts the comedy throughout should prove entirely satisfactory to the average audience and get many laughs. Cliff Bowes appears as a clerk in a general store with George Ovey as the storekeeper and Ruth Hiatt as his pretty daughter. There is a good comedy sequence involving a little negro and a can of glue, a trio of village musketeers who do stunts around the store stove and a chase between the villain, who has kidnapped the girl, and the hero on a motorcycle.—C. S. S.

"Golfmania"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Amatcur golfers are guilty of amusing blunders in this comedy on the pursuit of the elusive white ball. The caddy willingly loses a loose tooth while one of the men learns while the othcr one has to do some deep sea diving to recover his ball. The game ends in the appearance of a big, black bear who creates havoc in the country club. The subject should be particularly appealing to some, and the treatment is entertaining, on the whole. Billy Engle and Jack Earl are featured—M. K.

"Southbound Limited"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

The business of concealing a dog from a train conductor's watchful eye produces a lot of fun in this Monte Banks comedy. Our hero boards the train with neither fare nor ticket, but grafts his way easily enough, until a pretty young woman hands over her dog to his charge. There are a good many laughs in this one and a vivid train wreck as a closing thrill—M. K.

"So Long Sultan"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

While this is rather obvious amusement, the harem scenes carry some appeal and Chuck Reisner's buffoonery will bring a few laughs. He disguises himself as a dancer in order to break into the Sultan's domain and gets material for a story on the paper which he represents. His deceit is detected but a "Detroit baby" comes to his rescue.—M. K.

"Do Women Pay?"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

The favorite theme of the innocent girl being lured away by a villain who locks her in a lonely cabin and then proceeds to get drunk is handled by Paul Terry in exceptionally vivid style. The mouse and his sweetheart are finally reunited after no end of melodramatic feats. All of it, including the aeroplane finish, will recall the usual screen thriller and its powers of amusement should be great.—M. K.

"Up in the Air"

(Fox—Comedy—Two Reels)

Thrills and laughs are rather abundant in this Imperial Comedy in which Charles Conklin and Harry Sweet do most of the stunts. Falling down elevator shafts and balancing on a narrow edge of a high building, they provide some highly sensational moments. The comedy has been well directed and will keep the average fan amused throughout its entire length.—M. K.

"Lucky Rube"

(Grand-Asher—Comedy—Two Reels)

Sid Smith makes the best of the material here which is only fairly amusing. It is the story of the country blacksmith, who goes to the city on a mission for his sweetheart's father and comes back with new clothes and ideas. Under his reformed sway cow-paths are discarded for motor thoroughfares and the smithy goes out of business. It has a few laughs and Sid Smith's pantomime is a great help.—M. K.

"Dear Ol' Pal"

(Pathe—Comedy—One Reel)

"Snub" Pollard and Paul Parrott in Alphonse-and-Gaston roles are the polite rivals in a love affair. The number has some good comedy and some vigorous action after the girl's pearls are stolen, and the two rivals, tied for a one-legged race at the picnic, start after the thief. The general mood is rather different and should go well.—M. K.

"The Twilight Trail"

(Universal—Western—Two Reels)

Universal is offering the usual amount of entertainment in this Western which features Margaret Morris. The plot concerns a frame-up on a rancher who fights an honest duel but is accused of murder when his opponent is mysteriously shot. There is good riding, fair suspense and a pleasing heroine to make it interesting.—M. K.

"Uncle Sam"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Lee Moran makes his second appearance in Mermaid comedies in this number in which he appears as the favorite heir of a wealthy relative who feigns death to get a line on his would-be heirs. Through the timely assistance of an onion, which another "heir" is eating, Lee weeps and wins out. The picture has an unusual comedy cast from a box-office standpoint, for in addition to Moran, Han Mann, George Ovey and Brownie, the well-known dog, have prominent roles while Ruth Hiatt appears as the girl. There are a number of clever subtitles and situations that the majority of patrons will enjoy and this comedy should prove a good box-office attraction.—C. S. S.

"Hustlin' Hank"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

Will Rogers scores again, this time as camera man to a feminist determined to get some photographs of wild life. The scenes where he pursues the bear in an effort to get his picture are hilarious, as are some of Rogers' esthetic poses and his manners at the first tea party. It is all very good entertainment, well marked with the star's distinctive personality and talent.—M. K.

"Mark It Paid"

(Grand-Asher — Comedy — Two Reels)

Joe Rock comes to the rescue of his sweetheart's father (who is going broke in the hotel business) with a clever scheme for attracting guests. He circulates the report that a fortune is concealed in one of the rooms. A rival hotel manager loses all his guests, but holds a mortgage on the prospering establishment, which our hero pays at the last minute after a hazardous journey. Billy Rhodes supports the star in this number which is lively and amusing.—M. K.

Showmen Use Big "Ad" Space for Educational's Comedies

More and more are exhibitors demonstrating their faith in the pulling power of short subjects by playing them up in their exploitation and newspaper advertising. Press critics are also devoting more space to reviews on the one and two-reelers. As an example of this, two Educational comedies recently came in for their share along this line.

Loew's State Theatre in Cleveland in its newspaper advertising featured the first Tuxedo Comedy, "Front," with "Poodles" Hanneford above the feature production, while the Allen Theatre in the same city divided its newspaper space fifty-fifty between the feature and the Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "The Optimist," and the same comedy got an even break with the feature in the electric signs for Loew's State theatre in Los Angeles.

In addition, "The Optimist" received not only an exceptional amount of space in the newspaper reviews in Cleveland and Los Angeles and other cities but also received high praise. The Cleveland Plain Dealer says it cinches Hamilton in place in the trio, Chaplin, Keaton and Hamilton, while the Los Angeles Record calls it a priceless snatch of a whimsical burlesque.

Will Rogers Two-Reeler on Pathe List for November 11

The second of the new Will Rogers series of two-reel comedies produced by Hal Roach heads Pathe's schedule for November 11. It is titled "Hustlin' Hank" and shows this easy-going comedian developing an unsuspected burst of speed and energy under the stimulus of a champion of progressive feminism.

The Ruth Roland serial "Ruth of the Range" brings the heroine to an exotic island where the constituents of the coal substitute are in a pit of lava. New perils await her here. Another of the new series of single-reel comedies starring Snub Pollard is "Dear Ol' Pal," in which Paul Parrott and Snub appear as friendly rivals for a girl, with each one determined to remain gentlemanly toward the other at all costs.

The current Aesop Fable gives an amusing version of the question, "Do Women Pay?" Pathe Review 45 shows "In the Land of the Ojibways," a study of the American Indian; "Storing Energy," dealing with the storage battery, a color section "The Crags of the Barons" and two sections, "A Singer in Siam" and "Pussy Poses," which are picturesque and distinctly humorous.

"Leatherstocking" Serial Is Under Way

Pathe announces that all preliminaries have been completed for production of the serial which C. W. Patton will make, based on James Fenimore Cooper's "Leatherstocking Tales." George Seitz will direct, and Robert Dillon has prepared the scenario. Harold Miller, who played the lead in the new Seitz serial, "The Way of Man," will have the lead in this picture with Edna Murphy playing opposite. Vernon Walker is the photographer.

Two Educationals at Broadway Houses

The current week finds two releases of Educational on the programs of prominent Broadway houses. "By Lantern Light," a Bruce Wilderness Tale, accompanies "The Drivin' Fool" during a run at the Cameo, while the Lloyd Hamilton comedy, "Extra! Extra!" is on the bill with Wesley Barry in "The Country Kid" at the Rialto Theatre.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Measuring Condensers

Wilbur J. Camlin, projectionist, Paramount Theatre, Connellsville, Pa., has the following to say:

Have been a reader of your department for three years and am interested in the advancement of motion picture projection. I want advice upon a very simple, yet to me a perplexing question.

The supply house in Pittsburgh where we get all our parts and accessories does not send the condensers we order. At present I am using a 6½-7½ plano convex combination. The 6½ lens seems much heavier than the other, and now that the preliminary explaining has been done I will get at the question which is bothering me, viz.: Is there any way in which I can measure a condenser to find its proper size? Please advise me through the department.

I had the latest edition of the handbook (Bluebook) and gave it away as a present. Have sent my order for another. It is, I think, the most complete work ever written on projection. Thanks for its help; also for the aid the department supplies.

Friend Camlin, the fact that one lens is heavier than the other is as it naturally would be, since the 6½ plano convex lens is thicker than is the 7½, hence has greater weight of glass. See figure 32, page 134 of the Bluebook, or page 96 of the Third Edition for explanation. Moreover, you may find that the 6½ lens has a thick edge and the 7½ a thin one, or vice versa, which means nothing optically, except that there will be a bit more light absorption in the thick-edged than in the thin-edged lens. See page 167 of Bluebook. It does mean, though, that there is unnecessary surplus of glass, hence added weight; also that the very thick edged lens won't fit the holder rigrtly, and in some holders will be held too high, so that its center will be above the optical axis of the lens system.

As to measuring the lenses separately, which is what I presume you mean when you say "measure the condenser," there is no method I know of by which you can measure them with absolute accuracy, because of the great amount of spherical aberration contained in the beam from such a lens. You may, however, measure with accuracy so close that the error is negligible by following the plan described on pages 153-154 of the Bluebook; also they may be measured by the method described on page 151, which is as follows: Select a room with only one window, or else darken all windows but one, leaving this one open. On the wall opposite the open window pin a sheet of white paper. Hold the lense to be measured in front of the paper screen thus established, with its flat side towards the screen, and very carefully focus some DISTANT object, such as a building or tree, on the paper screen. Be careful to hold the lens as nearly as possible square with the screen.

Having focused the object as sharply as possible, measure the exact distance from flat side of lens to screen. Next reverse lens so its curved side is toward the screen, re-focus the same object, and again measure from flat side of lens to screen. Add these two measurements together and divide by two. The result will be the focal length (NOT "size," Friend Camlin, but FOCAL LENGTH) of the lens under consideration, closely as you can measure it by this process. If you have focused the object carefully the result will be near enough for all practical purposes.

Glad you like the book and the department, but remember that the book is NOT to lay up on a shelf, but to STUDY. A good plan is to start in on those questions in the back and learn the right answer to every one of them.

Notice! Notice!

The report of the Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was laid over until the Spring meeting. It is proposed to adopt "PROJECTOR ROOM" as designating the room from which pictures are projected, instead of "PROJECTION ROOM," as proposed by the Nomenclature Committee.

The reason is that some producers call their screening room a projection room, and that is quite sufficient reason why the projectionist should stand clear, keep away and keep his hands off the name "projection room."

I want a letter from every one of you who approves "projection room" and disapproves "projector room." One local, Rock Island-Moline No. 433, has officially endorsed "projection room" and objected to "projector room." I would like to see other locals come to life and do the same, remembering that the nomenclature adopted by the S. M. P. E. will become standard.

Wake up, men, and show your interest. Write your endorsement of "projection room" on a separate sheet—as an entirely separate letter, which may be sent in the same envelope with another letter, if you wish. GET BUSY!

Weaver Douser

J. M. Jacobs, Box 484, South Boston, Mass., writes to ask the address of the maker of the Weaver Douser, described on page 870 of the Bluebook. Also what advantage I think accrues from its use.

This illustrates the difficulties encountered in the making of a book. The Weaver device looked good and was practical. It seemed that something of the sort was needed to take the place of the various make-shift devices now generally used, so, on the positive assurance of the sponsors of the Weaver that it would be promptly marketed and vigorously pushed, I allotted space to it, since which I have neither seen or heard of either the Weaver Douser or its makers.

The advantage of such a device as against the various arrangements now in use is dependability, efficiency and LOOKS. This latter is of importance in high grade installations.

Replying to friend Jacobs' question as to the address of the makers of the Weaver, I have not the slightest idea where they now are or if they now are.

Values It Highly

Allen Potts, projectionist, Strand Theatre, Miles City, Montana, orders a lens chart and says:

I just can't get along without your lens chart.

Evidently he had the old one and knows how much it helped. The new one is really a wonder in its completeness. At the late meeting of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers, one of the engineers said to me: "Richardson, that new lens chart is a wonder. It works out to perfection." I am sorry I did not make a note of his name, for I am sure it was one of the optical men.

Boulder, Colorado

E. C. Caywood, projectionist, Curran Theatre, Boulder, Colorado, shakes his fist under the editorial nose as follows:

Members of local 608 and the Boulder theatre managers read the article, September 8 issue, headed "Dangerous Outrage," with much interest.

For ten years past I have been projectionist in this theatre. In all that time I have no recollection of any film fire, or "explosion," which has even so much as excited the audience of any Boulder theatre. I thoroughly agree with you that the publication of such a misleading statement constitutes a dangerous outrage, especially in the magazine which I have subscribed to for a number of years because of its truthful projection department! (Wham! O golly, what a jolt!—Ed.).

As regards shop-worn projection equipment, we have no such animal in our fair city. Here in the Curran I have two late type Simplex projectors, a G. E. series arc M. G. set and a Westinghouse mercury arc rectifier.

The Isis Theatre projection room, which has been in charge of brother L. Brazda for a number of years, has two Motiograph De Luxe projectors and a Westinghouse M. G. set.

Will you kindly print the complete article you have from a paper published in Boulder, or else inform me as to the name of the paper? I do not remember having read any such article in any of our papers.

I begin to think friend Caywood is imbued with the idea that I've taken the truth by the neck and slammed its head against a tree—that no such article was published, and the worst of it is that I am unable to prove him wrong.

For years I kept every bit of correspondence on file for a year. It was an immense job, took lots of labor and space, and not one letter in a thousand was ever referred to. Of late years I have retained only such letters, etc., as seemed to have probable value for future reference, which the Boulder matter did not appear to have. It therefore went into the discard.

As I remember it, the facts are as follows: A paper, or one sheet of it, came from Colorado. It WAS a Boulder paper. I used the headlines of the explosion article merely as illustrative of the danger arising from such idiotic writings.

I glanced through the article. Now I am not sure—(I may have the Boulder article confused, as to particulars, with another somewhat similar thing sent in in the form of a newspaper clipping some while back)—but it seems to me the story was that there was a fire in a small theatre in some small town in that section, and that the fire was "covered" by a new reporter, or a space-writer rather, who happened to be there. Mind you, I am not certain as to this, but I think that was the Boulder publication story.

Anyhow, I am certain the fire in question was not in Boulder, and I agree that I should have said so in my article. Pardon the slip. It evidently did not occur to me that every one would assume the fire to have been in your city, and that you would not exactly approve of that.

I would give ten perfectly good dollars if I had that danged clipping now, just so I could rub it under brother Caywood's nose and tell him to go chase himself. For I do object to have a friend suspect me of lying when there is nothing to be gained by it. If I stood to accumulate, say, $111,111.00 or so by warping the truth slightly—well, that might be something else again.

The whole thing was bona fide, brother Caywood, though I should have noted the fact that the fire in question was not in your city. The publication certainly was.

Generator Wanted

C. D. Rawlins, projectionist Chrystal Theatre, Gilmer, Texas, says:

Dear Mr. Richardson:—Though I have been an interested reader of your department for several years, this is my first letter to it. The Chrystal Theatre, where I am employed, is considering the installation of a motor generator set—gasoline motor—to supply current for the entire theatre. If I have calculated correctly this will call for an eight (8) KW. output. The management has called upon me for advice.

Not having been previously interested in equipment of this type, I do not know where to obtain same, hence ask that you will turn a bit of light in this general direction.

I have rather lost track of this class of equipment of late, but will refer your letter to where it should get intelligent attention. There once was a number of outfits such as you want on the market, but they all seem to have dropped out of sight, presumably for the reason that there was not sufficient demand for them in the industry to make it pay.

If any of our readers has anything of value to suggest to friend Rawlins let them address him directly and at once.

Help for Wildwood

John A. Maurer, Projectionist Lincoln Theatre, Massillon, Ohio, says:

Forgive me for butting in again. Have no desire to monopolize attention, but feel that the letter of Ray Phillips, Wildwood, New Jersey, Sept. 29 issue, deserves attention, though considering delay in publication, etc., it will probably be too late to help him. However, others may have the same difficulty.

Obviously the trouble in his case is that his crater is too large to give him a spot of proper diameter at the distance at which his small diameter projection lens compels him to place his condenser. Looking over his data I note that he is using ¾ inch positive carbons for fifty amperes D. C., which is, in any case, inefficient, as may be seen on pages 378-387 of the Bluebook. In this case the inefficiency is aggravated by the fact that fifty amperes will form a decidedly larger crater on a ¾ carbon than it would on a ⅝ or a 9-16. In other words, in addition to being inefficient in itself, this arc is making it difficult to devise an efficient condenser combination.

By way of making a practical test I burned craters on carbons of the three sizes named for fifteen minutes each, with the ammeter constantly at fifty amperes. I believe this is amply long to determine the final crater size. You will find impressions of the craters resulting attached hereto.

Don't Blame Phillips

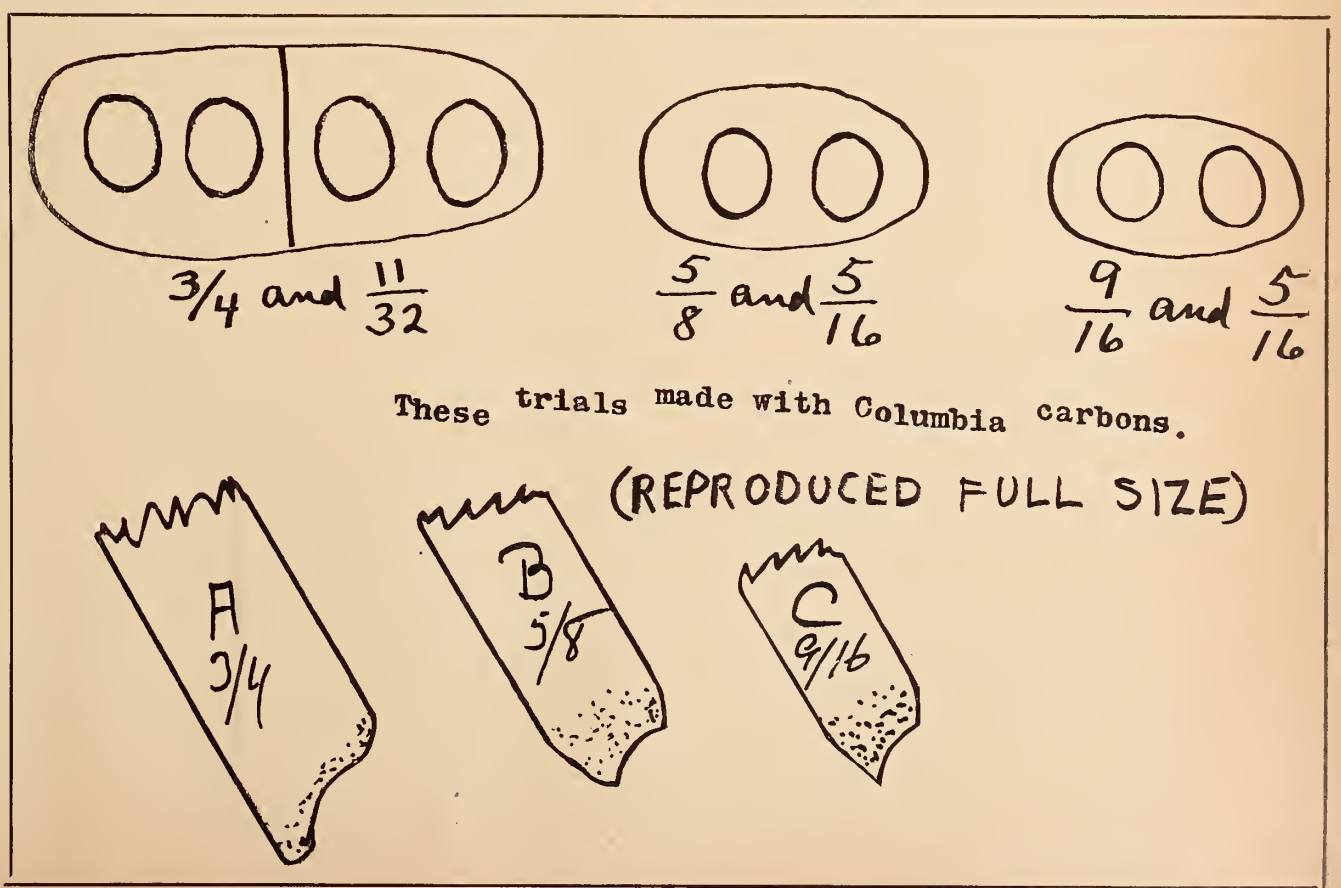
I do not blame Phillips for what he is doing because, for some reason to me incomprehensible, most carbon manufacturers recommend ¾-inch positive for fifty amperes. I believe if he will try one of the smaller sizes, and take the time and trouble to get used to handling an arc with the smaller carbon (it tends to act in a different way), he will be able to do much better with the whole proposition.

Under the condition he describes I would try a 9-16 positive and a 5-16 metal-plated negative, with a 6½-7½ M. Bi-C condenser placed 18 inches from the aperture. This should give a crater 19-64ths of an inch in horizontal diameter, and a spot of nearly the right size. He might even find that he will get better results by using 45 to 48 amperes and the 9-16 positive, than with the full fifty amperes and a ⅝ positive. This latter is suggested in case he is unable to make the 9-16 carry the fifty amperes, though I think he can with the type generator he is using.

No man need fear "butting in," because he can't when he says something I believe to be of interest to our readers, and by golly a man who writes this sort of dope should have space.

As to the crater diameters, I am myself surprised. This thing has never been brought up in quite this way before, and it is exactly the way it should have been presented years ago. I wish we might have had an outline drawing of those carbon tips. I think the lesser diameter shown by the smaller carbons is due to what I have shown, or tried crudely to show in the sketch I have made at A-B-C. My own contention has always been, and it has been borne out by tests, that the unnecessarily large carbon produces a lowered crater brilliancy per unit area by reason of the large amount of comparatively cool carbon immediately adjacent to it.

As to the other phase of the matter, I think we would all welcome discussion from men who feel competent to help. Griffith might well give up his views, and there are others we would be glad to hear from. You have, it seems to me, opened a path we may well explore to its end. It is not a new one, but you seem to have shown it in a new light.



Exact reproduction of diagrams of carbon craters obtained through practical tests by Projectionist John A. Maurer. Brother Maurer burned craters on three sizes of carbons as indicated for fifteen minutes each, with the ammeter constantly at fifty amperes.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

A Message from An Organ Builder.
A Great Little Theatre.
Putting Up a Good Front.

IN our issue of October 27, we published a communication from an exhibitor who wanted a small organ at a moderate price.

Here is what an organ manufacturer who read that letter writes.

I am interested in the letter from the Honduran exhibitor. It is in line with my views, and I am becoming more convinced that my views are correct every day and incidentally more disgusted with the modern method of advertising, so far as it applies to the theatre organ business.

* * * An organ can be produced for the smaller house that will be a real musical instrument without a fancy price. Lots of builders do it, but exhibitors are all frightened off by the published high prices of organs.

* * * I know you fellows are out to get business and doubtless you will get more money from those fellows than you would out of advertising of the builders of legitimate organs, but you would in the end get the organ business on its feet in way that the buyer would be protected.

Never mind the builder, he hasn't any rights at any rate but this method of advertising and throwing the "bull" hurts the small exhibitor.

If the conditions in the organ business, today, are as bad as the writer of the above believes them to be and if the exhibitor is delaying putting his name on the dotted line of a contract because he wants an effective musical instrument of low cost, it would appear that there is considerable business awaiting the manufacturer of moderate priced organs who will advertise them.

In fact, if our organ builder correspondent would come right out and, over his own signature in the advertising columns, tell his story to our readers in language as straightforward as his letter, we believe that he would do much to remedy the conditions of which he complains.

So far as "we fellows" of the trade press being out to get the business is concerned, none of the motion picture trade publications has ever carried any undue amount of organ advertising, which may possibly account for the fact that an exhibitor's idea as to what an organ installation would cost him in actual dollars and cents may be somewhat out of plumb.

The remedy for this is quite obvious and we will welcome most cordially to the advertising columns the organ manufacturer who will hand out the straight goods regarding prices in an announcement over his own name.

Not because we are unduly mercenary in the matter, but we feel that a campaign of this nature is something for which the manufacturer and not the editor should make himself responsible.

GIVEN all the money that he asks, an unlimited plot of ground and an order to plan a house of several thousand seating capacity, the average picture theatre architect has a comparative cinch. But when he is up against a proposition of a fifty by one hundred foot plot, and a six hundred seat house, he must do some pretty close figuring of the kind that requires experience back of it.

It is a much harder task to plan a good small house than a good big one and that's why we congratulate architect Davis on his achievement of the Peerless Theatre, which we describe in this issue and also the Messrs. Newman for giving the architect an opportunity to show what he could accomplish.

We will bet that these plans will be consulted by our readers for a long while to come.

SPEAKING of new houses, the proprietors of the St. Helen's Theatre Chehalis, Washington, the new one hundred thousand dollar eight-hundred seat house, the building of which we announced in our issue of September 8, have just shot us a photo of the architect's wash drawing so that we can get an idea of what the theatre will look like on completion.

It is such a good looking front that we believe our readers will admire it as much as we do, and, as they may find some valuable suggestions in same, we are reproducing it elsewhere.

SOME time ago, we made a few feeling remarks anent the renovation of a picture house and an expenditure for foyer chairs which was out of all proportion to that devoted to the projection room equipment.

To offset this sad state of affairs, we are joyfully spreading the glad news that we have been tipped off to a new house in which not only is the projection room a real room, but that five—yes, FIVE—projectors are installed.

Plans of Bronx Borough's Peerless Show Well Arranged 600-Seat House

THE interest in plans suitable for small houses is so great that we are more than glad to be able to present to our readers the lay-out of the six-hundred-seat Peerless Theatre, recently erected on One Hundred and Thirty-eighth Street, West of Alexander Avenue, Borough of the Bronx, New York City.

The Peerless was planned by Albert E. Davis, 258 East 138th Street, New York City, for the N. & P. Amusement Company, of which Benjamin Newman is president, Daniel B. Newman, vice president and Aaron Newman, secretary and treasurer.

As will be noted, by referring to the floor plans, the architect had at his disposal a lot fifty feet wide by one hundred feet deep. The theatre occupies the full depth of the lot and forty-two feet eight inches of its frontage. The remaining seven feet four inches being utilized as a passage way to the exits, which are located one at the front and one at the rear of the auditorium.

Seating in Three Sections

The seating is arranged in three sections with two aisles separating the sections. There are twenty-six rows of seats down the centre of the house and twenty-four rows along each of the side walls.

A central lobby, with a pair of doors at front and rear, gives access to foyer space behind the seating. At left and right, respectively, are the manager's office, and a store which latter has been rented to a confectionery. Back of the manager's office is a lavatory and stairways which lead upward to the projection and down to the basement, in which the heating apparatus is installed. A second lavatory is back of the candy store.

Typhoon Ventilated

The floors are of cement, squared off in red for the aisles. Good ventilation is assured by a ceiling twenty-five feet high and a Typhoon cooling and ventilating system, situated in a pent house on the roof, and which operates through ornamental circular ventilating panels in the ceiling.

Directly in front of the screen is an orchestral organ which reduces the size of the orchestra to one man. The organ grilles are located at each side of the screen.

As the illustration shows, the Peerless

THE 800 SEAT ST. HELEN'S THEATRE

The new $100,000 house of Chehalis, Wash., as it will appear on completion. From the architect's wash drawing.

is an extremely attractive house. The entrance is flanked by lime stone columns and, at either end of the street facade, rise square towers changing to octagon above the roof and surmounted by stone spheres and copper eagles. There is a circular marquee over the main entrance and above this a circular head steel sash, within a lime stone arch, from which radiate copper sunrays. Between this central feature and the towers are illuminated panels of unique Grecian design in olive green, old gold, pale blue, Pompeiian red and white enameled brick and tile. The panels are crowned with a limestone cornice and copper cresting.

An Attractive Lobby

The lobby and auditorium are of attractive design, beautifully decorated in maroon, mauve and ivory, robin's egg blue and moss green, rose and lavender, silver and gold.

The seats are of mahogany black and gold and arranged on the arc of a circle with a gradient of four feet to the screen, affording a good view from each seat.

In the projection room, which is located above the lobby, are two Power's, 6-B projection with governor type control and a double 70 ampere transverter.

Seattle Supply House Puts Over Good Stunt

The quarters of the Theatre Equipment Company of Seattle, Power distributors, has recently been improved with the installation of new private offices. Increased business made this expansion necessary.

Lewis and Barthel, partners in the company, report prospects excellent for the coming season.

A neat bit of advertising put out by the Theatre Equipment Company was in the form of a card bearing addresses and telephone numbers of all film exchanges, theatres, railroad depots, costume, poster, cameramen and allied interests.

While the card itself was not a new idea, the letter that accompanied it was cleverly worded in that it announced the new card as being the last word since the telephone company had made changes in many numbers, due to the installation of dial telephones, and requesting that the patron destroy "all our previous cards as they are worthless and out of date." This naturally insured the elimination of all competitive advertising of a similar na-

PRESS OF THOS. B. BROOKS, INC., N. Y.

THE TRUTH IS —

THE new pictures which Paramount announced to the trade last August have now been completed.

¶ They will be released at the rate of one a week beginning now.

¶ Prints of the first four, "THE SPANISH DANCER," "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN," "THE LIGHT THAT FAILED," "STEPHEN STEPS OUT" may now be seen at Paramount exchanges.

¶ Demonstration runs on "THE SPANISH DANCER" have proven, in all sections of the country, beyond the shadow of a doubt, that this Pola Negri picture is one of the greatest box-office draws ever released.

¶ Demonstration of "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN" in New York marks this picture as sure-fire. It is marvelously acted, sumptuously produced, has an engrossing story and is full of strong, human-interest drama. It has tremendous pulling-power. We are confident demonstrations of "HIS CHILDREN'S CHILDREN" in other sections of the country will show the same result. We ask that exhibitors watch closely its success in demonstration theatres.

¶ "THE LIGHT THAT FAILED" we believe is another great big picture. It has in it the romance, the drama, the story interest and the superlative acting that only big box-office attractions can hope to have. It has already received the Board of Reviews' endorsement as one of the two best pictures of the month.

¶ "STEPHEN STEPS OUT" speaks for itself. Is there any one who doubts the interest of the entire American public in the name "DOUGLAS FAIRBANKS, JR."?

¶ The others of the 19 new Paramount Pictures which we listed in full in this paper last week make up an output of product that is absolutely revolutionary in motion picturedom. Such stars, featured players and supporting casts, such great stories, such magnificent productions of proved in advance box-office merit could come only from Paramount.

¶ Exhibitors may rest assured that the Paramount Pictures in the months to come will be the greatest line-up Paramount has ever released.

¶ And that's saying something!

A HUMAN INTEREST STORY WITH IRRESTIBLE APPEAL

The NEW YORK VARIETY says:

> The average filmgoer is going to enjoy this picture wholeheartedly. "Michael O'Halloran" should prove a box office picture. Mrs. Porter's readers number high in the millions. This should assure the success of a film version of one of her most popular novels, particularly when it is as well done as this.

The TIMES SQUARE DAILY [N. Y.] says:

> "Michael O'Halloran" looks like a box office card.

The LOUISVILLE [KY.] TIMES says:

> A charming story, beautifully portrayed.

The RIVERSIDE [CAL.] PRESS says:

> "Michael O'Halloran" is one of the foremost human interest pictures of the year.

A MESSAGE TO PRODUCERS

THE OPEN DOOR for important pictures, whether you make one or four—that's the product policy of Associated Exhibitors.

We produce no pictures—we own no studios, no exchanges (but use 34 of them), no physical plants and properties with their heavy overheads. We devote our time exclusively to selling. From the biggest city to the smallest community, Associated men are everywhere in the never ending business of circulating product.

Producers are best served when given adequate, economical, and successful distribution for money making attractions—that's the aim of Associated Exhibitors.

Story of Laughing Memory

IN this the second Douglas MacLean Production for Associated Exhibitors our popular star has planned his most ambitious achievement.

Following a wise policy he selected for picturization another well remembered knockout musical comedy, "The Yankee Consul." This piece made Raymond Hitchcock famous on Broadway and was applauded for three years by the laugh-seeking American public.

The film story is a perfectly killing romance of the U. S. Consular Service and has a surprise with a kick that will again make the Nation literally roll in the aisles with laughter.

MacLEAN Consul,

Another Bubbling Broadway Success

NO one can look back to Henry W. Savage's production of "The Yankee Consul" without recalling its remarkable success on Broadway.

It is all the more to the credit of Douglas MacLean that he discovered the screen possibilities of this blithesome musical play.

For three years its merry melodies were whistled and danced the country over. It was a high speed laughing success from the first night and promises a knockout de luxe for the screen comedy wizard, Douglas MacLean, for release during the holidays.

WITH PATSY RUTH MILLER and cast of screen favorites.

Directed by James W. Horne. Adapted by Raymond Griffith and Raymond Cannon. From the Broadway musical comedy success by Henry Blossom, Jr., and Alfred G. Robyn.

A MESSAGE TO EXHIBITORS

TO INSURE you big pictures—to act as your agent in the production field—that's the mission of Associated Exhibitors.

We own no theatres — we are independent distributors—independent even of the necessity for getting excessive value from one picture to make up losses on another. You are served as you wish to be served—with the sort of product for which your box office hungers—big attractions that stand on their own feet.

And you buy as you wish, not to maintain a law of averages. Here's open market for you, whether you want one picture or twelve.

Dedicated to you—to serve your exact needs —that's Associated Exhibitors' idea and ideal.

My dear friends:

After reviewing the final cutting of the print of "The Gold Diggers" I was deeply gratified, as it assured me that it was possible to faithfully portray a legitimate comedy upon the picture screen.

It made me realize there was much already accomplished in the way of better productions to bring the screen nearer to the theatre.

The characters are all clean cut and distinctive.

You have indeed made a fine picture. I compliment you.

Dear Friend:-

I want to say a few words to you with regard to PONJOLA. It is very seldom that I have much to say about the products coming into my various houses, but I want to say that PONJOLA was one of the biggest successes that has ever been in the Capitol Theatre. The business has gone way beyond my expectations, and there is no doubt in mind, but that PONJOLA will be one of the outstanding successes of the year.

What you think—what we think—what a dozen men may think about the box-office possibilities of any picture is nothing compared to what the box-office proves it to be through actual demonstration.

"Ponjola" went into four big cities a possible big money getter—it came out a Tremendous Money Getter. There is an argument that cannot be turned aside easily.

That's proof—ironclad—decisive—conclusive. There is no showman in the world who can dodge or shut his eyes to such facts. "Ponjola" has definitely demonstrated to the industry, by this test, that it is One of the Biggest Ticket Sellers of the Year.

Mr. Kunsky's letter shows what it did in Detroit, at the Capitol Theatre. At Loew's State, Los Angeles, it broke the house record. At the Warfield, San Francisco, it broke another and its performance at the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, clinched the argument.

"Ponjola" has proved itself. Now it's up to you.

"GREAT AMERICAN DRAMA"

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

The Editor's Views

HERE's a strange condition:

The industry is faced with this situation: Shelves are overstocked with product. Or, rather, completely stocked, and selling is sluggish.

The logical remedy is more selling, faster selling, better selling. Synonymous with: More advertising, better advertising.

But what is happening?

The first move: "Let's close down the factories." The second step: "Let's cut down the trade paper advertising."

Can you beat it?

Well, yes. Here's a stranger order:

"Don't touch the national advertising. That must be kept up in full force."

THE above is a condition that is peculiarly "taken for granted." It is something that we never stop to analyze or question. But supposing we do:

The most prosperous years that ALL BRANCHES of this industry have ever known were those following upon 1918—when trade paper advertising reached its greatest heights. When national advertising was a seldom-tried experiment.

In the last two years national advertising has been given a one hundred per cent trial. Nothing has been stinted; neither in brains nor in money.

Fine copy has been seen; consistent space has been used; appropriations have climbed to the six-figure mark.

National advertising, we have been told, creates consumer demand; even more important, it AROUSES RETAILER INTEREST, and moves the goods.

BUT THE GOODS HAVEN'T MOVED!

And we are starting to shut the factories down.

* * *

IN these same years trade paper advertising has been an orphan step-child. Like the word "quota," the phrase "Trade paper advertising" was something that went into the distribution contract "for no particular reason."

The attitude has been:

"Use just enough trade paper advertising to get the publicity by and to let the salesmen know that we are still in business. When we get some real cash we'll take up advertising seriously and go into national magazines."

AND THE GOODS HAVE FAILED TO MOVE!

Think it over—a long, long time.

WE don't mean to discount national advertising as something less than zero. That would be as idiotic as the attitude of the many who consider trade paper space a "necessary evil" rather than an efficient merchandising weapon.

The difference in attitudes is that national copy is considered ADVERTISING, bought and sold as such; the definition of trade paper space in many quarters ranges all the way from a "sop" to a "nuisance."

But here is a thought:

Get away from the spell of the rounded phrase, the impressive statistics, get away to this important point: In any business where the retailer can handle only ONE MANUFACTURER'S PRODUCT AT A TIME your chief problem is to sell the retailer.

In this business, the RETAILER MUST BE SOLD.

Well, think over this:

I defy any man to spend seven thousand five hundred dollars IN ONE WEEK on trade paper advertising for a single picture and not find his goods moving from the shelves.

I know of a lot of seventy-five-hundred-dollar pages that haven't disturbed a speck of dust on the shelves.

Think it over.

Why Loew's Resignation Was Accepted and Fox's Declined

By TOM WALLER

IF "Enemies of Women" had been the only picture in this world, I would rather have had my houses in darkness than have played it, knowing the circumstances as I now do." This statement, the substance of which was embodied in the resignation which he tendered, is credited by an authoritative source with being the primary factor which moved the Board of Directors to decline the offer of William Fox to withdraw from the ranks of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce. Mr. Fox interposed no defense. Neither did Marcus Loew a few weeks ago, but his resignation was accepted the same afternoon it was tendered. Such outwardly similar conditions of these two big producer-exhibitor violators of an organization ruling on the Cosmopolitan picture, and such outwardly discriminating decisions have aroused considerable curiosity in the industry, especially throughout Greater New York.

First-hand information regarding these executive sessions of the Board of Directors is out of the question. As is generally known, the word "executive" closes the doors of the meeting room to the press. Such news, in this respect, countenancing any credence, is that emanating through authorized channels.

Accordingly, we learn that, although Mr. Fox and Mr. Loew both pleaded guilty to the T. O. C. C. indictment charging them with showing "Enemies of Women" under a Goldwyn contract, instead of giving preference to holders of Famous contracts, as the first distributing agency for that picture, the explanation in Mr. Fox's proffered resignation is termed "1000 per cent. better" than that of his brother producer.

Fox's statement is described as "wonderful"; as one which placed him outside the pale of all the other violators. In it he is said to have resorted to nothing which could be interpreted as suggestive of subterfuge. He personally, it is said, claimed he knew nothing of the preliminaries leading to the booking and playing of the film at his Washington Theatre, New York. The fact that a producer-exhibitor of his magnitude entered such a humble plea had great weight with the directors, it is gleaned.

When Loew appeared before the Board of Directors he is credited with having justified the T. O. C. C. in its stand against him; "but that business interests in which he was involved caused him to act accordingly."

The quotation is an excerpt from a story concerning the acceptance of Loew's resignation which appeared in a recent issue of the MOVING PICTURE WORLD.

The T. O. C. C. has sought the aid of Will Hays in the contract situation of "Enemies of Women."

Laemmle Optimistic

Closing of Studios Merely Annual Occurrence, He Says

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Pictures Corporation, arrived in New York from the West Coast early this week in an exceptionally optimistic mood. He said:

"If it is true that a pessimist is a man who has to live with an optimist, you may now turn pessimist because I think it is time for a little optimism in the moving picture business. Just at present there seems to be tremendous stir because the industry is trying to curb expense. Every Moses outside the industry has been telling us we are guilty of extravagance, but as soon as steps are taken to stop extravagance, a thousand different meanings are read into the action, and the result is the tempest in a teapot. It's a case of damned if you do and damned if you don't.

"The closing down of studios is not new. Many companies have done it almost every year, especially during the California rainy season. By that time of year, the average producer has plenty of pictures on hand and it is a highly profitable thing to shut off expense and coast along for a time while cashing in with goods on hand.

"But as for the solidity of the business as a whole—and I can speek freely because Universal stock is not on the market—let me tell you how it is viewed by one of the keenest bankers in New York. This banker knows the picture business thoroughly. He said to me:

"'You producers have always spoken of your business as more or less of a gamble. Perhaps an individual picture is a gamble, but a going concern with a regular output of pictures and a proper distributing organization looks to me more like the safest business in the world than a gamble. I'll tell you why. When a grocer or a merchant liquidates his business, he sells out his stock and then he is through. He has nothing left to sell. But when a picture company wants to liquidate, it does not sell its pictures. It leases them. Then after a period of time it takes the same negatives, makes new copies and re-leases them or, as you term it, re-issues them. You still own your goods after you have sold or leased them. If other lines of business could do that, business failures would drop low in the percentage columns.'"

National Motion Picture Day Finds Official Approval in New York City

THE support and co-operation of the public in making National Motion Picture Day on November 19 a celebration of widespread importance is urged by Murray Hulbert, Acting Mayor of New York City, in a public proclamation issued from City Hall on Monday.

By this action official recognition has been given the event of the theatre owners, which promises to outstrip in magnitude any event ever sponsored by any part of the industry. Elaborate plans for a giant parade and pageant are under way, with special programs in all theatres and added attractions which direct attention to the progress of the motion picture theatre as an institution for civic and social progress. The last word from the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America states that the entire country is similarly aroused, and, from the largest cities down to the small towns and villages, National Motion Picture Day is being celebrated by theatre owners energetically and enthusiastically.

Mayor's Proclamation

The proclamation follows:

"To the people of the City of New York:

"The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have performed a distinct public service in designating a particular day upon which to concentrate public attention upon the significance of motion pictures and in particular the value of this form of expression in the work of social and community welfare. Monday, November 19, 1923, which has been set apart as National Motion Picture Day, is worthy of widespread observance.

"No one will deny that the motion picture has made a decided contribution to the entertainment of the people through the cinema of some 16,000 theatres throughout the United States. The possibilities of still greater usefulness of the motion picture through co-operation with public and private, social and civic agencies must receive an acknowledgment no less sincere.

"What the city, the state, the nation and the world are doing, and the advancement of science in harnessing the forces of nature to the need of man are information to which the public is entitled. But it is information that should be imparted in an attractive way. As this is the announced purpose in the celebration of National Motion Picture Day my official recognition and endorsement are cordially extended.

Our Public Service

"Undoubtedly what the people need is recreation of a decent and proper kind. The movies have met this requirement commendably and efficiently. That the type of entertainment has been unmistakably welcome is attested by an ever-increasing patronage. The people are morally minded and if the movies did not measure up to this popular standard in providing diversion they would long since have been headed toward oblivion.

"But there is an educative as well as a recreative side to the motion picture. The quickest way of communicating ideas and knowledge is through the eye. An impression good or bad is immediately registered on the brain through that organ. Of what immense potential good, therefore, from a social as well as a cultural standpoint is the motion picture? To the boy and girl ready to receive impressions that may affect their value as individuals and as citizens and to all adults who would know of the happenings in Smith's Corner, their own city or in any quarter of the globe, the movie is the great teacher whose service is within the compass of everyone's time and purse.

"Attendance at the movies on National Motion Picture Day should be the effort of all the people in this city. There will be given a demonstration of the wider sphere of usefulness of the motion picture that should prove very appealing. As particular emphasis will be placed upon the public service possibilities of the movie, and the educational authorities through the United States have been enlisted toward this end, I would suggest that every co-operation be extended by the public. If an additional reason for attendance were necessary I would add that it is planned to have special programs of entertainment in all motion picture theatres on that day that will transport one as by a magic carpet to the temples of delight."

Circuits Line Up

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, returned to New York this week with glowing reports of the special meeting held by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Western New York at Rochester. National Motion Picture Day was endorsed unanimously, with every theatre owner present pledging his written support to participate in the country-sweeping celebration on November 19. Another high light of the meeting was the speech of Congressman MacGregor, in which he promised to reintroduce his Admission Tax Bill. Congressman Snyder in a spirited declaration pledged his aid to the bill amid the applause of the body.

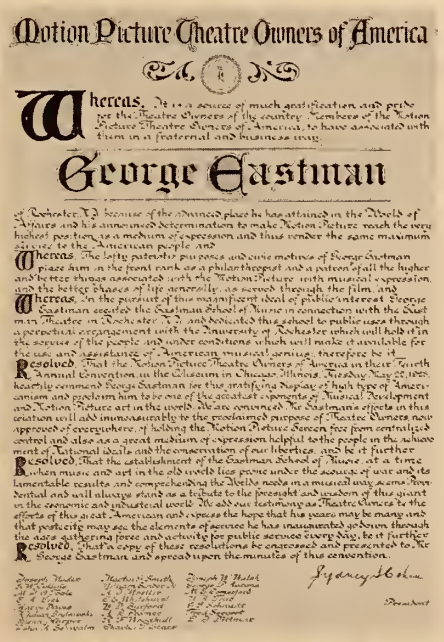
A meeting of the national officers and board of directors of the M. P. T. O. A. was likewise held at Rochester. This body presented an engrossed testimonial to George Eastman in appreciation of his services to the industry. It was voted to hold the next officers' and board of directors' meeting at Washington, D. C., in December at the time Congress convenes. This meeting will also be attended by state leaders and prominent theatre owners.

Another development of importance occurred during the past week in which several men of national standing in the industry, who control circuits of theatres, pledged their support to National Motion Picture Day and agreed to turn over to the national treasury of the M. P. T. O. A. 25 per cent of the day's receipts from all their theatres. This list includes, among others, Wilmer & Vincent with twenty theatres, Rowland & Clark with twenty-five theatres, M. E. Comerford with fifty theatres, Robert A. McNeill of San Francisco with thirty theatres, Charles E. Whitehurst with all the representative houses of Baltimore; Poli's Circuit with approximately twenty theatres in New England and W. C. Hunt with a string of houses in Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Various Mass Meetings

A giant mass meeting of theatre owners of all New England is being held in Boston on November 8 for the purpose of centering on a definite campaign the enthusiasm which animates the theatre owners of New England. This will be attended by President Cohen of the M. P. T. O. A., Harry Davis of Pittsburgh, C. E. Whitehurst of Baltimore, R. F. Woodhull of New Jersey and E. M. Fay of Providence, R. I., officials of the national body.

A similar gathering is being held in Cleveland on November 9. A telegram signed jointly by David L. Schumann of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio and O. E. Belles, president of the Cleveland Exhibitors' Associa-



Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America

Whereas, ... George Eastman ...

Resolved, That the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in their Tenth Annual Convention in the Coliseum in Chicago, Illinois, Tuesday, May 29, 1923, heartily commend George Eastman for this gratifying display of high type of Americanism and goodwill ...

Resolved, That the establishment of the Eastman School of Music at a time when music and art in the old world lies prone under the scourge of war and its lamentable results and comprehending the ideals needs in a musical way ... be it further

Resolved, That a copy of these resolutions be engrossed and presented to Mr. George Eastman and spread upon the minutes of this convention.

Sydney S. Cohen
President

Engrossed testimonial presented by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to George Eastman in appreciation of "his announced determination to make Motion Pictures reach the very highest position as a medium of expression." Mr. Eastman designated William Fait, manager of the Eastman Theatre, to accept it in Mr. Eastman's absence on an extended trip.

CHARLES SCHWARTZ

Owner of several large motion picture houses in Brooklyn, who, as chairman of the National Moving Picture Day Publicity Committee, has worked strenuously to make that day a pronounced success

tion, has been received by Mr. Cohen which states: "All exhibitors in Northern Ohio heartily co-operating in National Motion Picture Day movement. Hope to have you at Winton Hotel meeting Friday, November 9, afternoon." Mr. Cohen is attending this meeting together with Mr. Davis, John A. Schwalm of Hamilton, Ohio, and other national leaders.

Work is under way to duplicate in Boston and Cleveland the campaign which has been put over in Pittsburgh, where Mayor William Magee has endorsed the day by public proclamation, and the Chamber of Commerce is campaigning on behalf of the theatre owners, in recognition of their service in promoting movements of civic importance.

New York's Campaign

The giant campaign in New York will overshadow all other events on November 19. A meeting of theatre owners was held at the Hotel Astor on Monday, November 5. In New York the campaign is being taken direct to the public on behalf of the theatre owners, whose participation is assured by the active work of a "Flying Squadron," appointed by the committee in charge, to cover every theatre in the territory, which is organized into zones and districts. Arthur M. Hirsch is chairman of the general committee and Charles Schwartz is in charge of the exploitation end, creating the parade.

With the co-operation of the exploitation men of the various producers and distributors, who are working at top speed on behalf of the exhibitors, a monster street parade is planned for November 17, consisting of bands, floats representing the advance of the industry, representations from all divisions of the industry, banners and all similar exploitation. This parade will be the biggest thing of its kind ever held in New York and probably a mile long. Free prints of the parade will be furnished all exhibitors for use on Motion Picture Day. During the week preceding National Motion Picture Day news of the event will be broadcast daily from all of the sending stations in and near New York City and talks on motion pictures will feature their programs.

In addition a corps of speakers from the American Legion will visit the various theatres and deliver short addresses on the importance of the motion picture and the purpose of National Motion Picture Day. Canvas banners for the backs of automobiles will be furnished all theatre owners, as well as a special supply of one-sheets and window cards. Stickers will be used on taxicabs and all vehicles.

For the actual show on November 19 the theatres are preparing special programs of outstanding excellence. Many will present an "Old-Fashioned Movie Show," in which the presentation of a complete show of ten years ago will be contrasted with a typical program of today. Old-time single reelers, with all the accompanying methods of years gone by, will be used again. Lobby displays will likewise contrast the old and the new. As far as it is possible, depending upon their presence in New York, several stars will visit the theatres for personal appearances. Music publishers will provide special musical programs of novel interest.

New Jersey is showing great progress. Mass meetings of theatre owners are being held in every county of the state and special plans of participation are being formulated there, as in practically every section of the country.

Messages of Support

Secretary of Labor James J. Davis, who has endorsed the theatre owners' movement in glowing terms, this week wrote President Cohen as follows:

"The work of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America in the advancement of many movements for the betterment of mankind is worthy of the highest commendation. The screen has come to be an important factor in our national life, particularly in relation to the education of the people. National Motion Picture Day will, I am sure, do much to emphasize the importance of the film theatre in the daily life of America. A great opportunity lies before the motion picture theatres of the country for public service. I am sure they will take advantage of it."

Messages of support and the reassurances of active participation have come from various state units. Billy Connors, secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Indiana, wired as follows: "Indiana solidly behind you on National Motion Picture Day. Pass the good word to Bill Bender."

Jay Allen Glenn of Hendersonville, N. C., who is directing the destiny of National Motion Picture Day in that state, has written a letter to every theatre owner urging them to write their Senators and Representatives and to support Motion Picture Day as a part of the campaign for the repeal of the admission tax.

Letters to Congressmen

The attention of theatre owners is being definitely directed to the campaign for the repeal of the admission tax and, as a definite part of the campaign for National Motion Picture Day, every theatre owner in the country has been supplied with two suggested letters with the idea that each owner of a theatre copy one of the letters on his own letter head and mail it immediately to his Congressman.

The letters call attention to the evil which is brought about by the admission tax and directs the attention of Congressmen to the importance of their support in the coming legislative session. The Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America have instituted a sweeping campaign and have stimulated the interest aroused by National Motion Picture Day into a plan of definite action against the admission tax.

Following are the letters which theatre owners are asked to mail to their Congressmen:

Dear Sir:

I am sure that you, the representative of your large and important constituency, will appreciate the position which I, in my small way, occupy as representative for the public in the community which composes the audience at my theatre.

To serve my own interests, I must serve them, and in serving them faithfully, I win their commendation, support and approval.

So it is that at this time I am addressing you regarding the Admission and Seat Tax Laws.

These two levies were made against the theatre owners of the country as war measures. They were passed at a period when every interest in the United States was keyed to a high pitch of patriotism and no individual or body disputed the wisdom of any tax law which would bring to the government the revenues then required.

As you know, many emergency levies and war taxes have been repealed. The two affecting Admission and Seat Taxation are still in force. With the changing conditions of our industry since the laws were passed, I can definitely assure you that they are proving increasingly burdensome upon motion picture theatre owners as a class, and increasingly irksome to the general public, with which we are in close and continuous contact.

I appeal to you to give this important matter careful scrutiny before it is brought up in the next session of Congress. I would deem it a favor to be permitted to supply you with facts, figures and informative data and to keep you informed regarding all current developments. I am satisfied to rely on your fairmindedness in giving careful consideration to our cause and to your legislative judgment in lending your valuable influence toward bringing about the repeal of these measures.

Sincerely yours,

Dear Sir:

Two of the remaining war taxes affecting millions of Americans in an adverse manner are the levies on theatre admissions and on theatre seating capacity.

It is the purpose of the theatre owners of the United States, if possible, to effect a repeal of these taxes as the same are now of a burdensome nature and bear so heavily upon theatre owners and public as to materially reduce the attendance at our theatres, and in many instances has forced theatre owners to close their establishments.

I know that you realize and appreciate the importance of the motion picture theatre as a community service institution. Its great utility in all communities in advancing progressive public programs and otherwise providing entertainment and relaxation for the people is certainly very obvious to you, and I feel sure that you will do all you can to keep this line of service intact by enabling theatre owners to remain in business, so that this great service institution will remain with us.

An effort will be made in the next session of Congress to bring about relief from the Admission and Seat Tax Laws. I respectfully solicit your consideration in this matter with a view to helping the theatre owners in bringing this result about, if the same meets with your approval.

If you need any additional information on the subject from our viewpoint or would like to communicate with our national office, I would be pleased to make arrangements accordingly, so that we may have the benefit of your very best judgment on this matter as a Member of Congress.

Sincerely yours,

In a statement issued this week William Brandt, president of the M. P. T. O. of New York State, denies that the organization has placed the seal of approval on National Motion Picture Day, saying that it is not committed "to any policy or action with regard to this matter in any form."

Beauty Contest Aids Movie Day

One of the best of inducements for a box-office line-up on movie day is advanced by Joe Jame, owner of two theatres in the Borough of the Bronx, New York City. His plan, which met with great enthusiasm when outlined at the Hotel Astor mass meeting this week, is a beauty contest.

Bronx exhibitors already are accumulating the photos of all the pretty girls in their respective neighborhoods, placing them on display in the lobbies. This contest opens on November 19. Every patron going in any of these theatres gets as a starter 100 votes to ballot for his or her choice. This Jame said, is bound to secure record attendances at all Bronx movie houses on the industry's big day.

But the contest does not stop on November 19. It keeps right on until Thanksgiving Day when the winner in each theatre is announced. She assumes the name of the theatre with the prefix "Miss" until the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce ball. On that occasion all of the winsome "Misses" assemble at the ball and pass in review before a Board of Governors composed of Bronx exhibitors. The board picks the winner and she is announced Movie Queen of New York's home section.

New M. P. T. O. Organization May Be Outcome of French Lick Meeting

OFFICERS, directors and congressional district representatives of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana will act as hosts to the officers and directors of exhibitor organizations in Ohio, Kentucky, Illinois, Michigan, Wisconsin and Minnesota at a joint meeting at French Lick Springs on November 14 and 15, it was announced this week. The meeting, which was arranged by the Hoosier exhibitors, is expected to be of national importance.

Although called primarily for the purpose of perfecting plans for fighting some of the taxation now imposed on the exhibitors, it is reported in Indiana moving picture circles that the conference likely will lead to the formation of a Middle Western exhibitor organization. The exhibitors in the states of the Central West are said to feel that their problems are different than those of exhibitors in other localities and in view of this should have their own individual organization. It is probable that if a separate organization is formed it will affiliate with the national body but will conduct its own affairs as it sees fit to do so.

The meeting at French Lick will be open only to the officers and directors of exhibitor organizations in the states named and to the officers, directors and congressional representatives of the Hoosier organization. The visiting exhibitors will be officially welcomed to the meeting by Lew Shank, mayor of Indianapolis, and now a candidate for Governor of Indiana.

The Hoosier exhibitors say the admission, seat and music taxes will be among the principal matters discussed. They regard the admission tax as an evil that is causing considerable damage to their business and they hope the proposed meeting will result in a definite plan of action against the tariff. The levy imposed by the American Society of Composers, Authors and Publishers under the copyright law for songs written by members of the organization and played in theatres, also will be given considerable attention at the meeting.

"This levy is the bane of our existence," said one Indiana exhibitor. "We are not opposed to a tax for the composers, authors and publishers, but we believe it is in the wrong place. We feel the tax should be on sheet music. As it is now it appears to us that we are being unjustly discriminated against."

The government seat tax also will be discussed with a view to taking definite action toward its elimination, it was said. Other matters, including the proposed uniform contract, lower film rentals and final plans for observance of National Motion Picture Day, to be celebrated November 19, also will be discussed at the gathering.

Plans for the affair at French Lick were discussed at a meeting of officers and members of the board of directors of the Hosier organization at the Hotel Severin in Indianapolis, Wednesday, October 31. The officers of the Indiana organization are Frank Heller, of Kokomo, president; William Connors, of Marion, secretary, and Gustav G. Schmidt, of Indianapolis, chairman of the board of directors.

According to plans outlined at the Indianapolis meeting, National Motion Picture Day will be fittingly observed by exhibitors in every section of the state. With "Indiana leads—others follow" as their slogan, the Hosier exhibitors are preparing to see to it that the day is celebrated in a big and constructive way.

"We have used our screens and theatres in assisting practically every campaign or public movement of any kind since the beginning of the war," said an Indianapolis exhibitor, "and we feel that National Motion Picture Day can be made a day whereby those who have profited by what we have done for them can reciprocate. We regard it also as an excellent opportunity for perfecting a closer and more cordial relationship between the exhibitor and the public."

Additional plans for carrying out the campaign will be perfected at another meeting to be held at an early date. The national organization of theatre owners, which is sponsoring the event, will assist the Hoosier organization in building up public interest.

Organization Named

Motion Picture Exhibitors' Alliance Formed in Washington

The second day's session of the exhibitors in convention in Washington, D. C., last week produced a name for the new organization. It will be known as the Motion Picture Exhibitors' Alliance, Washington Zone, and its announced intention is "to establish a closer co-operation among the members of the motion picture exhibitors' organizations of the states of Maryland, Virginia and the District of Columbia." The time of meeting is set at every six months, "or oftener," and the executive council will consist of nine members. This will meet the last Wednesday of every month in Washington.

Because of the distance from Washington and the fact that distributing companies are beginning to transfer service for its theatres to Philadelphia, it was decided not to include Delaware in the Washington zone, leaving the state free to join Pennsylvania, where its interests are more directly centered. In much the same way North Carolina was left to affiliate with South Carolina. President Henry B. Varner, of the North Carolina exhibitors, said he would effect the organization of the two states in zone No. 2.

Among important matters discussed at the sessions were non-theatrical competition, excess footage, admission taxes, seating capacity taxes and the music impost. The convention wound up with a banquet at which Harry M. Crandall was toastmaster.

Watch Admission Tax Returns!

Washington, D. C.—Strenuous action is to be taken by the Bureau of Internal Revenue to stamp out the practice of exhibitors and others making improper admission tax returns, according to officials of the bureau, who declare that a large number of business men have made it a practice to send their returns in in such a way that they could not be accepted. They believe, it is said, that this is done sometimes innocently, and sometimes for the purpose of delaying payment.

It has been announced that hereafter, where a return is accompanied by an unsigned check, and a properly signed check is not received prior to the expiration of the legal period of payment, a penalty of five per cent. will be imposed.

The bureau will not accept tax returns sworn to by the name of a company or firm, but the oath must be made by an authorized individual, who should follow his name by some descriptive word such as "owner," "partner," "treasurer," etc. When a return received within the legal period is returned to a taxpayer for proper execution and the necessary action is not taken within the period of ten days, a penalty of 25 per cent. will be imposed if the corrected return, when received, is delinquent.

Saunders Re-Assigns

Paramount Exploitation Representatives

Claud Saunders, director of exploitation Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has made the following re-assignments of the field force of his department:

Leon J. Bamberger, assistant manager, with headquarters at the home office in New York, to cover the New York, New Jersey, Philadelphia, Washington, Albany and Wilkes Barre exchange territories.

Russell B. Moon, Boston—Boston, New Haven, Portland, Me.

Arthur G. Pickett, San Francisco—San Francisco, Seattle, Denver, Los Angeles, Portland, Salt Lake City.

Rick Ricketson, Omaha—Omaha, Des Moines, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Kansas City, Sioux Falls.

William Danziger, Chicago—Chicago, Cincinnati, Milwaukee, Detroit, Indianapolis, Peoria.

Leslie F. Whelan, Pittsburgh—Pittsburgh, Columbus, Cleveland, Buffalo.

Kenneth O. Renaud, Atlanta—Atlanta, Oklahoma City, Dallas, New Orleans, Charlotte, Memphis, Jacksonville.

Doolittle Weds

William C. J. Doolittle, of Utica, N. Y., and New York City, president of the Selznick Distributing Corporation, was married on October 23 to Miss Georgette Leiter, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. George B. Leiter of Kansas City, Mo. The ceremony was performed in St. Agnes' Church, 92nd Street, New York.

McCabe Appointed

Vincent J. McCabe was this week installed as resident manager of the Goldwyn Cosmopolitan branch exchange in Buffalo. He succeeds Thomas Brady.

Mr. McCabe has recently been connected with the Goldwyn home office and was formerly connected with the Fox and First National organizations in Canada.

Loew-Metro Ball Splendid Event

With all the glorious glitter and gorgeous splendor of an old-world Court Ball, the Fall film social season opened on Thursday night, November 1, at the Hotel Astor. The occasion was the first annual ball of the Loew-Metro Club, and any one of the three thousand or more persons who took part in the festivities in the Grand Ball Room that night—and the following morning — can bear witness that the affair was the greatest sendoff that any season ever had.

One could tell in a very few lines who, in any branch of the industry, wasn't there; one couldn't tell in three volumes who was there.

Dancing to the irresistible pulsations of two unbeatable jazz orchestras began early in the evening. Supper proved a delightful forerunner to one of the most elaborate entertainments ever presented, in which Broadway celebrities by the score took part.

Need more be said—COULD more be said?

Meighan's Father Dies

John Meighan, father of Thomas Meighan, Paramount star, died Monday morning at his home in Pittsburgh, Pa. Death came as the result of a complication of diseases. He was seventy-four years old and left a family of seven children: Thomas, John, William, James, King, Mary, and Margaret.

Elder Joins Universal

Herbert E. Elder, formerly assistant sales manager in the home office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation and who worked with the legal department of that company as sales expert during the Federal Trade Investigation, has been engaged by Universal to be special representative for E. J. Smith, general manager of sales.

Drying Pennsylvania

Governor Pinchot of Pennsylvania, apparently inspired by Presidential aspirations to seek to make the state thoroughly "dry," and thwarted in his crusade, now turns his attention to "drying up" motion pictures. The censors hereafter will ban film scenes of bacchanalian festivities, the symmetrical wine glass, the plug-ugly beer stein and pictures in which any mention is made of artificial exhilaration. That is why a flask-breaking scene in a recent Chaplin picture was snipped. It must afford the governor a poor consolation.

"Birth of the West" in the Real Settings

The Colored Motion Picture Corporation's production of "The Birth of the West," which is to be made with Frank J. Carroll holding the reins, will be staged in the country that is actually part of the story's action.

After starting for Los Angeles last week to complete contracts in connection with the production Mr. Carroll left the train at Denver and is now on an automobile trip through the Colorado and Wyoming country arranging for locations for the production.

Many of the best known figures of Western history will be concerned in the story and the cooperation of scores of prominent citizens is being given Mr. Carroll in his preparations.

Again Director General

Cecil DeMille Resumes Duties He Gave Up

A joint statement, issued recently by Adolph Zukor and Jesse L. Lasky, announced that Famous Players-Lasky Corporation had signed a new agreement with Cecil B. DeMille covering all his future productions. The agreement, which has no time limit, provides also that Mr. DeMille shall resume active duty as director-general of the company, duties which he was relieved of three years ago at his own request.

To Honor Reichenbach

The many friends of Harry Reichenbach, in recognition of the service he has rendered to the industry on many occasions, have decided to give him a dinner on Thanksgiving Eve, Wednesday, November 28, 1923, at the Ritz-Carlton Hotel, in the Crystal Room.

Kann Opens Offices

George E. Kann, whose resignation as head of the foreign department with the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, became effective on Nov. 1, now is engaged in launching his new enterprise, the George E. Kann Corporation, with offices at 220 West Forty-second street. The corporation will deal in the international distribution of negatives, a field in which Mr. Kann is unusually well grounded.

Sails for Europe

Ike Blumenthal, special representative of the foreign department of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, sailed for Europe on the Majestic Saturday, November 3, to resume his duties abroad after a visit of several months in the United States. He will divide his time among the Paramount offices in London, Paris and Berlin.

Will Build Theatre

Adolph Zukor in a newspaper announcement denies that Famous Players-Lasky will abandon its plan to erect a $2,500,000 Broadway theatre, thus stilling a rumor that a decline in the value of the corporation's stock and the suspension of production make the theatre impractical.

"We have no intention of abandoning the plan to erect the new house," said Mr. Zukor. "Plans for the new structure have been completed by Rapp & Rapp, architects, of Chicago, and it is our intention to go ahead with the construction as soon as the last lease on the property expires on May 1, 1924."

It's a New "Eternal City"

Samuel Goldwyn's latest production, "The Eternal City," was shown privately Thursday morning at the Strand Theatre, New York. It's a new "Eternal City" that George Fitzmaurice and Ouida Bergere have evolved in collaboration with Sir Hall Caine. World War events, the Fascisti and other modern trends in Italy have been made use of to serve as backgrounds for the same love conflict and drama. Mussolini, the dictator, appears in a real part; King Victor is seen for a moment. The production has been staged lavishly, it is pictorially dazzling, and reaches real heights in the whirling mob scenes. Barbara La Marr's portrayal of Roma will be remembered as a triumph of emotional work.

ROBERT E. WELSH.

Off to Japan

Tom D. Cochrane, in charge of the distribution of Paramount pictures in Japan, will leave New York November 11 to return to Kobe, where new Famous Players-Lasky headquarters were opened following the earthquake. En route home he will visit relatives at Toledo and Chicago and will sail from Seattle on November 22, arriving in Kobe about December 6.

Paramount Policy Unchanged

Famous Players-Lasky, an official announced today, November 8, with the exception of a few readjustments, has no intention of changing its newly announced policy.

Demonstration centers, in conformance with the new Famous edict, are now in some fifty key cities. The informant stated that Paramount has experienced no lack of co-operation from the selected houses in smaller cities, excepting that a few of them have made some changes in their original basis for receiving Famous product. These, however, he said, are in a very small minority.

Famous has no intention of eliminating the smaller towns as demonstration centers as long as they perform in accordance with the new policy, it was emphasized.

Court Decides Against Re-editing of Old Douglas Fairbanks Pictures

ONE of the most important legal decisions ever rendered in regard to property rights of motion picture stars in connection with their old film is that just handed down by the Appellate Division of the Supreme Court, New York, granting Douglas Fairabnks a temporary injunction against Hyman Winik, the Leader Film Corporation, the Majestic Motion Picture Company and the Triangle Film Corporation.

The order restrains Winik and the Leader Film Corporation from re-editing and reconstructing certain Douglas Fairbanks pictures "by reducing their length and changing them into shorter pictures of two reels each and with a connection or sequence, if possible, between each of the pictures, so as to constitute a more or less continuous serial picture made up of separate pictures of two reels each.

"Deponent expected to accomplish this," the court opinion says, "by cutting certain scenes in Fairbanks' negative and changing the order in which the scenes were shown on the screen."

The pictures named in the restraining order are "The Lamb," "Double Trouble," "His Picture in the Papers," "Habit of Happiness," "Good Bad Man," "Reggie Mixes In," "Flirting With Fate," "Mystery of the Leaping Fish," "Manhattan Madness," "American Aristocracy," "The Matrimaniac," "The Half Breed" and "Americano."

Counsel for Mr. Fairbanks, Messrs. O'Brien, Malevinsky and Driscoll, set forth that their client had made a contract with the Majestic Motion Picture Company under which he was to make pictures which should be supervised by David W. Griffith; that he made the pictures, and that when Mr. Griffith severed his connection with the Majestic company he also exercised his rights under a clause of his contract and refused to make more productions for that organization.

The rights and assets of the Majestic company were acquired by the Triangle Film Corporation, which assigned to Hyman Winik the alleged right to re-edit and reconstruct the Fairbanks films; Winik then organized the Leader Film Corporation and assigned to it the alleged rights obtained from the Triangle concern. Next came the announcement that the Leader film organization would reissue and reconstruct the aforenamed pictures.

Mr. Fairbanks contended through his counsel that the pictures made under the contract with Majestic were each composed of five or more reels, and affirms that their reproduction in the form proposed by Winik will be "detrimental to plaintiff's standing in his profession, in that he has never appeared in a two-reel picture, but has appeared only in feature pictures of five or more reels"; also that "said acts would be violative of plaintiff's property rights in the picture as originally produced, and of his rights under his contract with the Majestic corporation, insofar as said contract provided for the supervision of direction by Mr. Griffith."

The judicial opinion, which was written by Justice Edward R. Finch, and concurred in unanimously by others of the Appellate Division, namely, Justices John Proctor Clarke, Victor J. Dowling, John V. McAvoy and Francis Martin, concludes as follows:

"It is clear that the plaintiff at all times considered the supervision of Mr. Griffith a very important factor in his work, and that his contract with the Majestic corporation was originally conditioned upon his having the benefit of such supervision.

"In view of the contractural obligation concerning the supervision of direction by Mr. Griffith, the approval of the stories to be filmed and the right of inspection of the completed photoplay by the plaintiff there is sufficient shown to restrain the threatened action of cutting down the five-reel plays into two-reel plays, and to hold the rights of the parties in statu quo until evidence at the trial can resolve more fully the respective rights of the parties. The matter is obviously important to both sides, and confidence that full justice is being meted out cannot be had until the complete record is made upon a trial."

Mr. Fairbanks, in answering the contention of opposing counsel, Messrs. O'Brien (Morgan J.), Boardman, Parker and Fox, who appeared for the Triangle Film Corporation, affirmed, in parts, as follows:

"From years of experience in this industry I know—and it cannot be gainsaid—that David W. Griffith stands pre-eminent, and the fact that he supervised the pictures that I made under the Majestic contract has always been considered by the motion picture world as one of the things that gave me impetus and momentum as a motion picture star. Those pictures as originally produced are splendidly produced, and if the defendants are permitted to interfere in any way with said pictures and to remake them it cannot but be to my disadvantage.

"I respectfully present to the court that by reason of my work with the Majestic Motion Picture Company and by reason of the pictures I have since produced and had distributed I have attained a position in my profession of great monetary and artistic value to me.

"It is essential that I maintain and secure that position. The distribution of any picture of an inferior character would cost me great loss in my business. It would be difficult to ascertain the damages that I would suffer. I am advised by counsel that there is no rule of law by which the damages that I would sustain may be measured or determined.

"Such damages might amount to a hundred thousand dollars; they might amount to many millions of dollars.

"It is my purpose to maintain my reputation and to continue in the motion picture industry. My damage and loss would be irreparable, and I have no adequate remedy at law whatsoever.

"Unless the defendants are immediately restrained and enjoined my rights and remedies will inevitably be prejudiced and curtailed.

"Said motion pictures (those heretofore named) were distributed throughout the world and have long since lost their interest for the public, having completed what is known as their life and run; that said pictures are not now physically capable of further successful distribution."

Censors Reverse Decision

"They shall not pass" apparently has been adopted as a slogan by the Ohio Board of Censors at Columbus in connection with the pictures scheduled for showing in the Buckeye State, and it is being rigidly adhered to.

The aforesaid august body of picture potentates passed upon the Griffith picture, "The White Rose," as of July 17, without making any changes or eliminations whatsoever, and the picture was accordingly shown at Cleveland, Cincinnati, Columbus and Toledo for various length runs.

However, the board has now reversed its previous decision, recalling the picture on the ground that it is immoral.

This picture cannot, therefore, again be shown, either whole or in part, within the State of Ohio, until such time as the board again reviews it, and eliminates such portions as are now considered objectionable.

There is an Ohio law which vests in the Board of Censors the right to recall a picture, and prohibit its further showing, even though it may have previously sanctioned and approved it.

And thus endeth another chapter.

Pathe Seeks Injunction

Wants to Restrain Fox from Showing Zev-Papyrus Race

Pathe Film Company has applied to the London courts for an injunction restraining Fox Film Corporation from showing the pictures of the Zev-Papyrus international race in England and the British Isles. The news of the action was cabled to this country last week. It was stated that Justice Astbury in the Chancery Court of London was hearing arguments in the case.

At the Fox home office in New York the opinion was expressed that in making the racing pictures at Belmont Park the Fox Corporation was entirely within its legal and ethical rights as producers and distributors of motion pictures, despite the special privilege plea of Pathe.

H. C. Borger, long recognized as one of the most progressive young men in the Universal sales force, has been appointed assistant to E. J. Smith, general manager of sales for that concern.

EXHIBITORS' NEWS AND VIEWS

EDITED BY SUMNER SMITH

W. S. Barbee, of Chicago, Files Voluntary Bankruptcy Papers

A voluntary petition in bankruptcy, filed on behalf of William S. Barbee, former owner of Barbee's Loop Theatre, 59 West Monroe street, lists liabilities of $232,550 and assets of $100, which include only personal belongings. Among the debts is a bill of $26,000 due the architects for the plans of the playhouse, now known as the Monroe.

The six-story-and-basement building at 1836-40 South Wabash has been leased by Elizabeth Numenaker to George Christos and from November 4 to December 31, 1933, for a term rental of $91,400. The property is to be used for motion pictures exclusively.

Manager Leo Salkin is giving the patrons of his nifty little theatre, the Kenwood, at Kimbark and 47th street, some real music these days, as he has just added a six-piece orchestra. With feature pictures and plenty of good music he is bringing them in, so that the S. R. O. sign has to be hung often.

The big event in film circles last Sunday was the premiere at the Harris Theatre of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame." A professional matinee was put on Sunday afternoon and a packed house from the theatrical people were on hand, while the night show was sold out early to the general public. This makes the third time this fall that the Harris Theatre has been the home of feature pictures, and it appears that this fine playhouse may yet become a permanent picture house.

The new Orpheum Theatre opened the Chicago premiere of Mary Pickford in "Rosita" last Saturday night. Early in the evening the line began to form notwithstanding the bad weather. The house has played to capacity all week.

The many friends of L. C. Howard of the Alamo Theatre of Lebanon, Ill., will be sorry to hear of his death last month after a short illness. His wife will conduct the house for the present.

Manager V. R. Landon of the Avon Theatre at 3327 Fullerton avenue is using a lot of printers' ink these days to put over his programs and is winning out with his patrons.

Manager Barry of the Vernon Theatre at 436 East 61st street has bought an interest in the Prairie Theatre at 5748 Prairie avenue, under the management of Ludwig Seigel, who in turn has taken an interest in the Vernon Theatre. Both houses will be operated jointly in the future.

Another new movie house is projected for the North Shore district. The latest project is to be financed by John Mangel and John Langer, who plan to put up a 2,000 seat house at Ridge and Howard avenue, the dividing line between the city and Evanston. The plans call for a Spanish type with a red tile roofed dome, and the exterior will be of light brick with a terra cotta trim. The house will be known as the Ridge and it is hoped to have it ready for an early spring opening.

Manager Rosenblum and Publicity Manager Ralph Kettering are putting out a snappy Rialto Review weekly.

The Woodlawn Theatre, Drexel and 63rd, has increased weekday matinee attendance by making afternoon prices half the regular evening admission charge, and by putting on feature programs with plenty of music under Prof. Armin F. Hand.

R. H. Healey of the Monogram Theatre at 3520 Halsted street has added a new $6,000 organ to his orchestra, and with tiptop film programs is doing a good business these days in the stock yard district, as everybody is working and they get good wages.

Johnny Ahamnos has taken over the New Brookline Theatre at 7107 South Chicago avenue and made some improvements. The house has reopened with popular prices.

The management of the Schindler Theatre at 1009 West Huron street has boosted attendance by putting on a song contest among the singers of the neighborhood and by making the afternoon prices 5 and 10 cents.

J. O. Connolly has been made assistant manager of the new Monroe Theatre on West Monroe street.

Lester Bryant is hurrying the opening of the new Central Theatre on Van Buren street, near Michigan, and hopes to open for business on November 11.

John Dromey has named his new theatre in North Chicago the Sheridan and will open Friday of this week. The house is one of the coziest little movie theatres on the North Shore. He is making great preparations for the opening, having invited quite a crowd from Film Row.

When it comes to exploitation, you have got to hand it to Clarence Lantenslager of the Grand Theatre, 3433 West North avenue, who invaded Film Row last week with a rakish pirate lid advertising the current attraction at his house. He believes in putting plenty of punch into the program to keep them coming regularly.

WILLIAM ROSENBLUM
Energetic, Resourceful Manager of the Rialto Theatre, Chicago

"The Spanish Dancer" was held over for a second week at McVickers Theatre.

Frank A. P. Gazzola, manager of the Studebaker and other theatres, has bought a lot at the northwest corner of Madison and Keeler avenue at a cost of $50,000 and may build another house in that part of the city.

Five of the Ascher chain of theatres are showing vaudeville. They are the Chateau, West Englewood, Crown, Frolic and Lane Court theatres. Mixed programs are proving popular throughout the city.

The management of the Stratford Theatre on 63rd street put on a Jazz Week that packed the house to the doors. It is planned to make use of vaudeville in conjunction with the picture program.

Louis Newhafer, general manager of the Ascher circuit, has returned from a business trip to the houses of the chain that are out of the city, and reports the fall business as up to expectations.

W. W. Holiday has been named manager of the Grand Theatre at Mattoon, Ill. He formerly was located at Decatur with the Avon Theatre. R. W. Watts of Rockford has been made manager of the Avon.

Manager Sam Atkinson of the Calo Theatre on North Clark street has tied up with the merchants' association of his district and will give prizes at the theatre the last of the month. Needless to say, the retailers are plugging for the house.

St. Louis

Harry Niemeyer, manager of the Delmonte Theatre, St. Louis, on behalf of Fred L. Cornwell, owner of the house, has issued a statement explaining the relations between the Delmonte and William Goldman's King Theatre, Kingshighway boulevard near Delmar boulevard, St. Louis, which have been playing day and date since the beginning of the winter season. Niemeyer stated emphatically that no combination of the houses financially or otherwise has occurred except that they have entered into a joint booking arrangement on feature and other pictures.

"It is simply a booking arrangement," he said. "Cornwell some time ago contracted for the entire Metro output for St. Louis and St. Louis county for a period of two years. The Delmonte had been showing these pictures first run exclusively. Then Mr. Cornwell made a proposition to Goldman to take some of the Metro pictures to be played day and date at the Kings with the Delmonte showing. Goldman agreed and when he in turn offered Cornwell six of the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan pictures for which the Kings held the St. Louis first-run privilege, Cornwell accepted his proposition. Aside from that there is no arrangement or understanding between the two houses. It is merely a booking arrangement."

The newspaper advertisements state that the combination of the two houses was made necessary because of the caliber of the pictures secured by them. The Delmonte is the largest one-floor theatre in the world and in conjunction with the Kings has a seating capacity of 5,000.

Goldman also has plans for a large theatre to be erected at Grand boulevard and Morgan street. This will become the first run house for the Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan pictures when completed. He also owns the Queens, Euclid and Maffitt.

Wisconsin

Roy C. MacMullen still holds the record in Milwaukee for two-week runs. Thus far this fall, no less than four pictures at Ascher's Merrill, of which he is the manager, have had to be repeated, so great has been the demand. The latest one to start a two weeks' run is "The Green Goddess," starring George Arliss. In view of such business, Mr. MacMullen predicts that all records for Milwaukee attendance will be shattered when "Little Old New York" is shown at his house late in November.

Walter F. Baumann, injured in an automobile accident near Milwaukee shortly after his resignation as executive secretary of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, has recovered sufficiently to be removed to his home.

Frank Fisher, of the Fisher chain, with headquarters in Madison, Wis., is reported to have completed arrangements for the erection of a 4,500 seat house in Janesville, Wis.

More than 200 Milwaukee orphans were the guests of J. H. Silliman, manager of the Downer Theatre, recently at a Hallowe'en theatre party. Scarecrows, goblins, ghosts and the whole category of Hallowe'en creatures were on hand to entertain the little folk. In addition, the regular Downer program was presented.

Fred Seegert, president of the M. P. T. O. of Wisconsin, has recovered from an attack of ptomaine poisoning which kept him confined to his bed for several days.

George Fischer, manager of the New Milwaukee, is doing everything in his power to omit no convenience for the benefit of his patrons. His latest venture in this direction is the publication of a motion picture review, containing a synopsis of coming attractions and news and gossip concerning the film world of interest to theatregoers. In his first issue he conducted a misspelled word contest and out of the 5,000 copies of the paper distributed, approximately 500 replies were received.

The Saxe Amusement Enterprises of Milwaukee is cleared of all blame for the collapse of the theatre it is constructing in Janesville, Wis., in a decision handed down by the Wisconsin State Industrial Commission after a lengthy probe. The house is being rebuilt.

Indiana

Permission to issue $600,000 of preferred stock to finance the construction of a new picture theatre on Monument Circle, Indianapolis, was granted the Market-Circle Realty Company this week by the Indiana Securities Commission. The Market-Circle Realty Company, a holding company for Famous Players, has asked permission to issue the preferred stock, which was to be secured by Famous Players, in order to finance the construction, and a protest against the project had been filed by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Indiana.

The commission stipulated in its order that Famous Players purchase a minimum of $450,000 of common stock of the company in addition to funds already put into the project. By this action of the commission, Famous Players will be interested in the project to the amount of more than $800,000. The company, it was said, had previously put up $209,500 in cash and a lease on the Circle property valued at $100,000. M. P. T. O. of Indiana feel the commission's decision in the case in reality was a victory for them. They had protested that the previous security of Famous Players was insufficient for the issuance of the amount of preferred stock which the holding company desired to issue.

Damages to the amount of $5,000 were awarded to the Goldwyn Distributing Corporation in its suit against the Blackstone Theatre Corporation of South Bend this week.

Pennsylvania Exhibitors Are Fined for Using Child Labor

Managers of four New Castle, Pa., theatres were arraigned before Alderman Walter T. Hamilton last week on charges of violating the child labor law and the licensed operator act, to which they pleaded guilty. The charges emanated from investigations made by Inspector John B. Wakely of the Pennsylvania Department of Labor and Industry.

Messrs. Capaline and Passias, managers of the Star Theatre on Washington street, pleaded guilty to the charge of violating the child labor law and the moving picture standard, the latter requiring licensed operators in the projection booth. A fine of $100 was imposed.

Manager W. G. Marousis, of the Dome Theatre, was fined $75 when he pleaded guilty to like charges, that of maintaining an operator who was unlicensed and with having employed a boy under the legal age in the booth.

For the Regent Theatre, Marousis and Freeman were fined $75 for the violation of the female labor law and the moving picture standard. The management pleaded guilty to these charges.

A fine of $75 was also imposed upon the management of the Penn Theatre after a plea of guilty was entered to charges of violating the state law requiring licensed operators.

Mr. Wakely, of the State Department, announced that contrary to his wishes Alderman Hamilton had been quite lenient in the fining of the managers, and said that in most cases the maximum is very high. The inspector is making a tour of the western part of the statt. His offices are maintained in Meadville.

Mike Rosenbloom, of the Majestic Theatre, Charleroi, is running for school director. That explains the less frequency of his trips to Pittsburgh's Film Row.

M. A. Scrano is the new manager of the Liberty Theatre at Madera, Pa.

G. B. Myers, of the Gem Theatre, Derry, recently played "Down to the Sea in Ships" and says he hung out the S. R. O. sign for the first time in six months.

Chalmer Coupler is back again in Washington, managing his dad's Court Theatre there, after a three months' auto trip which took him to the West Coast. Chalmer says he had a grand time, but that he's mighty glad to get back home again. He cited instances where he paid as low as 6 cents for a gallon of gasoline, and on another occasion he paid 45 cents for a similar amount.

Elmer Strang Dies at Camden; Head of New Century Company

Elmer Strang, president of the New Century Amusement Company, which operates several suburban picture theatres near Camden, N. J., and who was president of Strang Electrical Company, Philadelphia, died at his home, 2903 Westfield avenue, Camden, following a two weeks' illness from heart disease. He was 58 years of age. Mr. Strang was well known in Camden, which had been his home for thirty-three years. He was a thirty-second degree Mason, president of the New Jersey lodges, Shield of Honor, and was active in building and loan societies. He leaves, besides his widow Rebecca, a son, William, and a daughter, Mrs. Marylod.

Wedding bells pealed last Wednesday for the marriage of Dr. Samuel Morris, proprietor of the Model Theatre, Sixth and South streets, and Miss Ruth S. Fineman, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Samuel Fineman, 5425 Woodcrest avenue, Wynefield, near Philadelphia. The ceremony was performed at the home of the bride's parents by Rabbi Samuel Levinthal, with the groom's sisters in attendance and his brother, David Morris, who is associated with him in the picture business, as best man.

Manager Joe Dougherty of the Grand Opera House, picture theatre, Broad and Montgomery avenue, is organizing a minstrel team composed of boys and girls who are employed in the industrial plants of Northeast Philadelphia and who will be seen at the house as soon as the talent is trained. Costumes are to be furnished by the management and the talent will be paid just as regular professional artists are salaried.

Transfer of the newly erected Earl Theatre, which was opened but a month ago, to A. W. Becker for $83,000 was made during the week. It was sold by Burton C. Simon.

Vibration of a passing truck brought the entire fire department of West Philadelphia to the William Penn Theatre at Lancaster and Fairmount avenues last Sunday night, when it sounded the fire alarm without damaging the private fire alarm box.

Hostettler Company Adds to Chain of Nebraska Theatres

The Hostettler Amusement Company has just purchased from Blaine Cook theatres in Beatrice, Falls City and York, Neb.

J. E. Hostettler of the Hostettler Amusement Co., has acquired the Swan and North theatres at Columbus, Neb. Fred Jewell, who was manager for the Swan at Columbus, has been given charge of both houses at Columbus.

Howard Blake has bought the Pearl Theatre at Shelby, Ia., from W. K. Kelly. This new house seats 470 and is equipped with two projection machines. Mr. Blake is a new man in the picture show business.

O. W. Persons of the Gem Theatre at Minden, Neb., is building himself a nice circuit at Minden, Wilcox, Upland, Campbell, Blue Hill, Kenesaw, Hartwell and Axtell, Neb.

William Rose of the Lyric Theatre, Omaha, has been out on a short hunting trip at Wood Lake.

Jolly Jones, former manager of the Majestic Theatre at Grand Island, Neb., is managing the Wall Theatre at Fremont, Neb.

C. E. Rossiter of Omaha has bought the Gem Theatre at Omaha from Anderson & Weathersby. Mr. Rossiter formerly managed the Hippodrome, a suburban house here.

C. J. Miller and Son have bought the Auditorium Theatre at Laurel, Neb., from W. R. Updike.

The Lyric Theatre at Lincoln, Neb., has closed. This is one of the houses owned by the Hostettler Amusement Co.

Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, Changes to Two Shows a Day

November 18 will see the introduction of a new policy at the Stillman Theatre, Cleveland, when that house changes from continuous performances to two a day, with reserved seats. It also marks the advent in Cleveland of the higher priced pictures, which have been awaited a long time. The first will be Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche," which is expected to run four or five weeks, and the second will be "The Covered Wagon." Other pictures to follow will be "The White Sister," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" and "The Ten Commandments."

The Stillman has long been the leading theatre of Cleveland, so far as presenting the best attractions. Every big picture in years has been shown there, some having two, three and four weeks' runs. But they have been shown under a continuous policy, six performances daily. Two exceptions there were, however, "The Four Horsemen," which was presented twice daily with reserved seats, and "The Three Musketeers," which ran but one week under such a policy and then rather suddenly finished out its engagement on the continuous show plan.

Of course, the change on November 18 means higher prices. The best seats evenings will sell for $1.50 plus tax; afternoons $1 plus tax. There will be a few balcony seats at 50 cents plus tax.

The Stillman recently celebrated its seventh anniversary. It was built by E. Mandelbaum and associates, later taken over by Marcus Loew, and now is operated by Loew's Ohio Theatres, Inc. It has a capacity of over 1,800 seats.

The Jewel Theatre, one of the Shuman-Fine and Kramer circuit in Cleveland, has been enlarged and remodeled and is now open again. This house is situated in a busy east end section and is very popular.

Dave Avery, formerly of Findlay, Ohio, has purchased the Victory-Strand Theatre, East 89th street and Superior avenue, from Bill Onie. The house has been redecorated and will have a few vaudeville acts in connection with its picture program. The Superior Theatre, almost opposite the Victory-Strand, also has been reopened after having been redecorated. Frank Gross and Frank Bensch operate it.

Cleveland within the last year has seen the growth of two more theatre circuits. The latest are the Flanigon-Nolen-Steele group, which comprises the Monarch, Penn Square, Marquis and Terminal theatres, and the Max Lefkowitz circuit, which includes the Gaiety, Bronx, Tivoli, Keystone and Strand. The last named was just recently added to Max's string.

Other circuits in Cleveland are the Ohio Amusement Co. with nine houses; the Scoville-Essick-Reif circuit with seven theatres; the Washington circuit with eight houses, and the Loew houses, which number eight.

A horse was given away by the State Theatre, Lorain, in connection with the showing of "Little Johnny Jones." The laughable part of the stunt was that the winner considered himself in hard luck, because he had a family of six and it meant one more hungry mouth to feed, according to Mark Greenbaum, owner of the theatre.

Piccadilly Opens in Toronto; Home for English Pictures

A picture theatre of the English type has been opened in Toronto, Ontario, this being the Strand Theatre, one of the best known of the large downtown houses for years, the opening date under the new auspices being Saturday, November 10. The name of the theatre has been changed to Piccadilly Theatre and, while, the house has been reopened under the direction of the Allens, it is intimated that an English theatre corporation is behind the project. The Piccadilly now gives the Allens of Toronto a first run house for their many English and Preferred pictures which are being marketed through the new Allen exchange in Canada, the Dominion Films, Ltd. Naturally, the English angle to the proposition has caused quite a stir in Ontario film circles.

The Piccadilly has an orchestra of 12 pieces. Popular prices have been adopted, matinee admission being 25 cents and for evening shows, 35 and 50 cents. The policy of the theatre will be to change programs weekly.

Famous Players' "Big Time Moving Picture" theatre in Toronto, the Tivoli, opened Saturday night, November 3, with the presentation of "Scaramouche" at $1 prices, the policy of this house being to have two definite shows daily for indefinite engagements. The Tivoli was formerly the parent theatre of the chain of houses operated by Jule and J. J. Allen.

Oakville, Ontario, a fine little town with an aristocratic flavor just midway between Toronto and Hamilton, is to have a splendid picture theatre of modest size at last. Mr. and Mrs. R. L. Gregory of Oakville have built the Gregory Theatre there which is to [illegible] opened shortly.

ontreal, Quebec, has more new neighborhood theatres. One is the Diana Theatre, which has been opened in Maisonneuve by Joseph Rufriange. George Lazinas has also opened the Operascope in Rosemont, the latter making the third community house in the north end of the city of Greater Montreal.

Announcement is made that the Moving Picture Theatre Owners, Canadian Division, is now distributing Urban Movie Chats throughout the Dominion at the rate of one per week. The physical distribution is being handled by Burpee & West of Montreal.

Los Angeles

Roy Miller has arranged for the world premiere of Goldwyn's "In the Palace of the King" at his California Theatre this week, succeeding "Little Old New York," which had an extended run of eight weeks at advanced prices.

"The Covered Wagon" now is in its thirtieth week at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre and has broken all the long distance records for a continuous run of any theatre on the Pacific Coast. Sid says he is going to take the picture off in four weeks unless he again changes his mind.

T. L. Tally has booked the Fox picture, "Soft Boiled," to succeed "If Winter Comes," which will play its fifth and final week starting Sunday.

"Why Worry?" opened at Grauman's million Dollar Theatre and is doing a tremendous business.

Are you going to observe NATIONAL MOTION PICTURE DAY? See page 291.

Cincinnati

The proposed new picture theatre, exclusively for colored patrons, for which the Paul Lawrence Dunbar Theatre Syndicate acquired a site at the corner of Beecher street and Gilbert avenue, is to become a reality. Shortly after the project was launched there was a storm of protest raised by residents of the neighborhood, as also officials of the Salvation Army Maternity Hospital, which is located in the vicinity, the protest being based on the claim that the theatre would be in the midst of a residential and not a commercial district. The local building commission refused a permit when the residents agreed to purchase the lot and erect an apartment building. The proposed purchase, however, failed to materialize, and upon renewed request for a permit to build the theatre, same was granted and work will be started at once. The preliminary plans call for a very pretentious house with large seating capacity.

The Capitol Theatre, under management of I. Libson, although not designated in the various trade paper advertisements, has been selected as one of the Paramount demonstration theatres, and last week showed "The Spanish Dancer."

Alice Brady, starring in the stage play, "Zander the Great," at the Grand Opera House last week, was a guest of Manager Ike Libson of the Lyric Theatre during her engagement, to witness the picture, "Drifting," in which she was featured when the play was originally produced in the speakies several years ago.

J. D. Kessler, manager of the Alhambra Theatre at Canton, Ohio, put over one of the biggest exploitation stunts ever pulled in that city, the feature being Jackie Coogan in "Circus Days." In the midst of Saturday afternoon's busy shopping rush a circus parade, more than half a mile in length, with bands, wild and domestic animals, open cages, floats, horses, clowns and even the traditional bucking mule, appeared in the prominent downtown streets, much to the complete surprise of the public.

John A. Schwalm, of the Rialto Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio, attended the meeting at Rochester, N. Y., last week, and reports everything "all set" for National Motion Picture Day.

Louisville

L. J. Dittmar, president of the Majestic Amusement Company, has recently become a Kentucky colonel, Governor Morrow having conferred the honor in appointing Mr. Dittmar a colonel on his staff, in recognition of excellent work done by "The Colonel" on the State Tuberculosis Commission and in the interest of cleaner and better moving pictures, he having been head of the state association of exhibitors for some years and a leader in the local association.

Fred J. Dolle, of the Alamo Theatre, is chairman for the State of Kentucky of the National Motion Pictures Day. The local exhibitor association has arranged to fully support the movement here.

Mike Switow, head of the Switow Amusement Company, and operator of a chain of big as well as small theatres in Louisville, Lexington and various points in Southern Indiana, is president of the Clark Building Company, which has remodeled a former hotel building and opened the Clark Hotel at Jeffersonville, Ind., where about $75,000 has been spent in remodeling and furnishing.

Joseph L. Steurle, of the Broadway Amusement Co., operating the Walnut and several other theatres, and Walter Davidson, head of the Walnut Orchestra, went east a short time ago and booked several features for use in connection with the Rainbow Gardens, operated by the Steurle interests, and for which Davidson is furnishing the music.

Personality and Profits

Why do some screen players get a big draw at the box-office while others, who may be very talented, can only be classed as "also rans?"

Personality is the answer. It is the personality that pulls, that makes popularity, and united with real talent it dominates the box-offices of the nation.

Will Rogers has personality to an unbelievable extent. There is no one like him. As soon as he walked to the footlights of the "Follies" the audience was with him.

That personality, so likeable, so unique, is with him on the screen. His comedies are very good, and they are also very different. See them!

A sober talk on a very important question

Mr. Exhibitor, the main criticism that has been leveled against the motion picture is that with few exceptions it is trivial. It is unnecessary to argue the point here. It is enough to admit that this criticism exists.

That belief which exists in the minds of a great many worthy persons prevents them from patronizing your theatre; deprives you of much revenue that otherwise you would get, for everyone needs amusement and if they don't accept that which you offer, they will get other. It is up to you to furnish amusement that will please all. When you do so you enlarge your power, increase your influence AND make MORE money.

It is a sober fact that the motion picture business has never reached more than a minority of the population of any country. There is a large majority of the 110,000,000 persons in the United States that patronize motion pictures rarely if ever.

They represent the empty seats in your theatre. They represent the velvet, for the regular crowd represents the overhead.

Get them into your theatre, with pictures that will please not only them but your regulars,—the Chronicles of America Series.

"Our Gang" Comedies

Two Parts

Each kid in each of these inimitable comedies is good for a hundred laughs.

Our Gang Comedies (Pathe).—These are the best comedies that I have ever run. The grown ups like them as well as the kids.—C. H. Lawrence, Plaza theatre, Dundee, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage. Ex. Herald

Our Gang Comedies (Pathe).—These are the "different" comedy that we have been waiting for. They are clean and full of action and should prove a good thing at the box office.—C. H. Bills, Opera House, Lenora, Kan.—Small town patronage. Ex. Herald

FIRE FIGHTERS (Pathe-Our Gang). These comedies are the goods. This bunch of kids will amuse anyone who was ever a kid himself. Draw from town of 3,000. Admission, 15-20. A. La Valla, Community Theatre (300 seats), Bethel, Connecticut. World

Our Gang Comedies (Pathe).—No better comedies could be secured for us than these. Clean, wholesome, funny—they certainly appeal to every member of the family.—L. R. Moore, Roma theatre, Columbus Grove, Ohio.—Small town patronage.

Our Gang Comedies (Pathe).—Have run most all the Lloyds, Semons and the Keatons, and when you run all them very few other comedies will satisfy. Our Gang are very clever, but nothing extra.—W. D. Patrick, Cozy theatre, Florala, Ala.—Neighborhood patronage.

Our Gang Comedies (Pathe).—These kids will please more people in general than any comedy I have run.—C. A. Kelley, Rex theatre, Custer City, Okla.—Small town patronage. Ex. Herald

Fire Fighters (Pathe), Our Gang comedy (two reels). Every theatre should show this picture. Adults, as well as children, enjoy these children's pranks. Our patrons are wild over the kids. They are real stars. Pathe deserves credit for producing such wholesome pictures. The films are always in very good condition.—Rev. M. Billmayr, St. Peter's church, Browerville, Minn.

Our Gang comedies (Pathe) (two reels). These are surely wonderful two reelers, and good comedies are hard to get. Every exhibitor should play them.—Geo. J. Ehlers, Grand, Worthington, Minn.

Our Gang comedies (Pathe) (two reels). We agree with our patrons who say these are the cleanest and best comedies on the market. The salesman had no difficulty selling us the second series.—Will J. Glaser, Grand, Faribault, Minn.

Our Gang comedies (Pathe) (two reels). Our patrons look forward to these comedies, and we will say they are 100 per cent. Some action!—L. E. Dawson, Gem, Shakopee, Minn.

Our Gang comedies (Pathe) (two reels). These are extra fine comedies. In fact, we were glad to book the second series.—Jack O'Brien, Opera House, Sleepy Eye, Minn.

Our Gang comedies (Pathe) (two reels). These are first class comedies.—F. C. Christians, Palace, St. Paul, Minn.

Our Gang comedies (Pathe) (two reels). The hardest audience to make laugh is the one we have on amateur night, and the Our Gang series does the job. They give 100 per cent satisfaction to young and old.—Hitchcock and True, Princess, Minneapolis, Minn.

TRADE MARK

Wm. Shirley, of Schenectady, Is Host at Hallowe'en Fete

The big outstanding feature of the week, insofar as the exhibitors were concerned, and quite a few of the film managers as well, was the Hallowe'en party given by William Shirley, of Schenectady, managing director of the State, Albany and Strand theatres of that city. Mrs. Shirley likewise proved herself a real hostess. The party was held in the large foyer of the State Theatre from 11 o'clock on, and the word "on" means anything from 2 to 4 A. M. Everyone present, upon entering, donned a Hallowe'en hat, and then the music, supplied by the theatre orchestra and assisted by Paul Rubens, the well-known composer, started the dancing. During the evening there was plenty in the way of refreshments. Later on Mr. and Mrs. Shirley are planning a similar party for the employes of all the film exchanges in Albany.

Instead of "The Covered Wagon" playing at the Mark Strand in Albany, it will be shown at the Capitol, the new Shubert house in that city. The Strand had advertised the picture but a decision to "road show" it resulted in its being booked for a house which has been playing only the legitimate up to the present time.

Sorrow has come to the family of Mr. and Mrs. Harry Lazarus, through the loss of a child. Mr. Lazarus was the former owner of the Pine Hills Theatre in Albany, and has just moved to Kingston, where he is operating another house.

Herman Vineberg, manager of the Mark Strand in Albany, showed that his gray matter was working when he read the election returns Tuesday night from the stage, and remembered to carry the fact in advance advertising.

Beginning on Saturday, November 17, the Mark Strand of Albany will open its doors each Saturday morning for a Junior Movie, charging 10 cents. These movies have been held in Albany for several years past and have the endorsement of the Mothers' Club and similar organizations in that city.

In connection with the National Book Week, the Mark Strand in Albany is offering a 15 cent admission to boys and girls and 10 cents to orphans at all matinees, excepting on Saturday, during the week of November 11. "Richard the Lionhearted" and "Ruggles of Red Gap" will be featured.

Abe Stone of the Rialto in Schenectady and Louis Schine of Gloversville are passing the cigars these days. "It" was a baby boy in each instance.

The symphony concert given last Saturday at the Mark Strand Theatre in Albany by the combined orchestras of that theatre and the Troy, in the neighboring "Collar City," proved a decided success, the house being packed to the doors at a 30 cent admission. Anxious to see how the idea worked out, and possibly thinking that he might utilize it in some of his other houses, Walter Hays came on from Buffalo. The concert was augmented by two soloists, Helen Osmundsen and Harry Newcomb. The concert lasted from 10:45 to 12. The next one is scheduled for December 24.

Unable to show the sort of pictures which he wished at the admission which had been charged up to the time he bought the house, R. V. Erk, of Ilion, now owner of the Barcli in Schenectady, has increased his admission by 5 cents, making it a matter of 20 and 30 cents. The added revenue does not seem to have detracted from the size of the crowds.

"Wild Bill" Hayward has just reopened the Temple Theatre in Dolgeville. The house has been closed since the Schine boys took over the opposition.

Hallowe'en raised havoc in the attendance at many theatres in this section. In some of the smaller places there was but a mere handful of persons. At the Rialto in Schenectady, the proprietor, Abe Stone, took in just enough to pay his operator and the express charges on his film.

It's rather nice to be greeted by old faces, all of which is to the effect that Frank Breymaier is once more back as manager of the Barcli in Schenectady, after six months with the Griswold in Troy.

The limit has been reached. An exhibitor last week invited film salesman out to lunch. Al Bothner was the exhibitor and Vic Bendell the salesman. They do say, however, that the luncheon took place at a one-armed affair not far from Broadway.

"Cal" Miller, who used to book at the F. B. O. offices and was also connected with the old General Film Company, has turned exhibitor and is now doing the honors at the reopened Arlington in the Albia section of Troy.

At the last minute it was decided to charge 15 cents admission to the Griswold in Troy, and so the "20" was cut off the banbers in front of the theatre. The house reopened to a capacity business, offering "Enemies of Women" and a Tom Mix picture.

J. S. Kallet, who runs the Strand in Rome, announces that he has booked the First National product solid for the coming weeks.

A large crowd attending the Hippodrome Theatre in Ogdensburg the other night marched out in single file, and without the least evidence of disorder, when a blaze was discovered in the basement. Eli Rosenbaum, owner of the theatre, used good judgment in handling the crowd. The house was damaged to the extent of $500.

Among the exhibitors in town last week who spent a piece of change for pictures were Charles Moyer of Herkimer and Mrs. Dennis Regan of Greenwich.

George Tetrault of the Grand in Watervliet has arranged to sell tickets at a K. of C. mardi gras from November 19 to 24, held in a garage next door, the tickets to admit to his show.

The majority of the 10 cent houses in this part of the state are making fine money these days. This is particularly true of Gardner's Pine Hills Theatre and the Hudson Theatre, both in Albany. The management seems to have hit on just the right kind of pictures for his neighborhood and there is always a waiting line in front of these houses for the 9 o'clock show.

More Schine Houses Planned for New York, Buffalo Hears

Henry F. Thurston, former owner of the Temple Theatre, Lockport, New York, has announced that he has taken over the Niagara garage at Pine and Walnut streets, and that within a fortnight he will close a deal for its purchase by the Schine Theatre Company of Gloversville, to be used as a site for a new high-class picture theatre. It is proposed to establish two Schine theatres in Lockport, one for pictures and the other for vaudeville and road shows. The Temple now is run by the Schine company as a picture house, and when the new house opens about August 1, 1924, the Temple will be closed and remodeled. The garage owners will vacate January 1 and work will then begin on the new theatre.

The common council down in Geneva claim that the theatres are crowding them in so much that they are violating the fire laws and has served notice on managers that such crowding will have to stop. The Smith Opera House and the Temple are the offenders, claim the council. Business must be good in Geneva. Better build larger theatres.

Children in Buffalo orphanages and other institutions certainly enacted "The Days of Real Sport" last week when Manager Vincent R. McFaul had the tots as his guests at several free private screenings at Shea's Hippodrome. Most of the youngsters insisted on staying for a second showing.

Max Spiegel who managed the Criterion in Buffalo for a short time in association with I. H. Herk when the house was putting on Shubert vaudeville, has been indicted by the federal grand jury on a charge of embezzlement of funds belonging to the government, it being alleged that Spiegel collected war tax moneys without turning them over to the government.

Peterson & Woods, owners of the Winter Garden in Jamestown, N. Y., are co-operating with the city recreation commission in putting on a series of special Saturday morning shows for children at which time pictures are shown which have been approved by a committee selected from the recreation commission, the mothers' clubs and other organizations.

Medina, N. Y., is to have new picture theatre. Rawley & Reynolds are remodeling a building on the Main street for picture purposes. Al Becker of Buffalo will install two new Simplex machines.

A few weeks ago the Zicofe Corporation of Buffalo took over the Grand Theatre in Westfield, N. Y. Last Saturday the block housing the theatre was destroyed by fire. Fred M. Zimmerman, Maurice Cohen and George Ferguson are members of the corporation.

A. C. Hyman, head of the company operating the new Strand and Cataract Theatres in Niagara Falls, drove into Buffalo in his new Cadillac sedan last week and had a hard time explaining to film salesmen that he couldn't pay the prices asked for pictures.

Connecticut

Connecticut now has 196 picture theatres with a total seating capacity of 145,853, according to a survey just completed by Lieutenant Walter F. Stiles of the state police department. In addition to the regular theatres, projection machines are in use in schools, churches, clubs, factories and state institutions, making a total of 269 places where pictures are exhibited and a total seating capacity of 172,644. Since there are 169 towns in the state, and allowing for the fact that the larger cities have several theatres, scarcely a town lacks a place where pictures are shown.

It is the office of the state police department to issue licenses to projectionists and to inspect projection booths and equipment. During the year just ending, 1,983 inspections were made. Great care is exercised in granting licenses to projectionists, according to the report, which says that of 114 applicants, 68 were licensed.

Seventeen fires were reported in which more than one foot of film was burned, all of them being inconsequential. Only three serious fires occurred, the most serious being the destruction of the Taylor Opera House in Danbury on October 29, 1922. The department has received fees amounting to $6,047.

The report says: "The department's success in dealing with motion picture theatre hazards has been recognized by public officials throughout the state and has brought numerous requests for inspection and recommendations concerning other places of assembly. All such requests have been promptly dealt with—usually with the aid of the fire marshals, with whom we have attempted to co-operate on all matters relating to public safety."

Extended Runs All the Rage at San Francisco Theatres

An interesting feature of the amusement business at San Francisco of late has been the number of extended runs of feature screen productions. Formerly but one or two theatres showed a film attraction for more than a week, but now there are a half a dozen houses where long runs are featured and even some of the district houses have gone in for extended engagements.

"The Covered Wagon" was shown at the Columbia Theatre for six weeks and could undoubtedly have been shown at a handsome profit for a much longer period. The run was brought to an end because of stage bookings which could not be postponed, and not because the wagon wheels needed greasing, as some wag has suggested. This production has been taken to Salt Lake City and Denver and will not be shown again in Northern California until spring.

The Cameo Theatre has completed a six week's run on Harold Lloyd's "Why Worry," the Capitol Theatre is in the midst of a run on "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" that will extend over a period of at least six weeks, while the Imperial Theatre is offering "Ashes of Vengeance" for an indefinite period.

M. L. Markowitz, owner of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, has arranged bookings for a long period in advance and is preparing for a wonderful winter season. Among his screen offerings will be "Potash and Perlmutter," "Pioneer Trails," "The Silent Command," "The Eleventh Hour," "Monna Vanna," "St. Elmo," and "The Governor's Lady."

Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., has arranged for a unique program to be presented at the Granada and Imperial theatres during Thanksgiving Week. "A Woman of Paris" will be offered simultaneously at these houses, the first time anything of this kind has been attempted here, and the entire show will be identical in the two houses.

The Dimond Theatre Company, Inc., has been incorporated at San Francisco with a capital stock of $10,000 by J. E. Moser, F. A. Naify and L. S. Hamm.

The board of directors of the Watsonville Chamber of Commerce has passed a resolution requesting the West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, lessees of the California and T. & D. Theatres, to reopen the latter house.

The National Theatres Syndicate of California, with offices in the Warfield Building, San Francisco, has declared a dividend of 2 per cent. on outstanding preferred stock. This concern is headed by L. R. Crock, formerly general manager of the Turner & Dahnken Circuit and organizer of the T. & D. Jr. Circuit. Several theatres are operated in the San Joaquin Valley.

Allows Charge Acc'ts

H. C. Arthur, Jr., has appointed H. B. Wright as managing director of the new Criterion Theatre, formerly the Kinema, which continues to be the big downtown house of the West Coast chain.

Director Wright has inaugurated a charge account at his theatre. Those whose credit is good can now arrange for seats on the telephone and have a bill sent monthly.

He also has sent out communications asking the theatre patrons for any suggestions in the way of improving the presentations.

Mark Keller, resident manager of the Monterey Theatre Company, Monterey, Cal., announces that a site has been secured for a new house on Alvarado street and that work on this will be started within sixty days. The house will seat 1,400.

New projection equipment has been installed in the Iris Theatre at Pacific Grove, Cal., conducted by E. C. Cunningham.

The management of the Lyric Theatre at Stockton, Cal., has been taken over by Mark Leichter, who also is in charge of the Spot Theatre of that city.

Announcement is made of the consolidation of the Bijou and Elm theatres at Elmhurst, Cal., a suburb of San Francisco, with the T. & D. Jr. Circuit.

The Ocean View Theatre, San Francisco, is to be reopened under the management of Mrs. Carrie Watkins.

Seattle

An interesting announcement probably will be forthcoming within the week regarding the future policy of the beautiful new Heilig Theatre. Film men are talking little, but the general impression prevails that the Heilig will go over to high-class, first-run pictures on November 17. Calvin Heilig is now in Seattle and has been in conference with Joe Muller, who, it is understood, will remain as manager of the Palace Hip. Neither Mr. Heilig nor Mr. Muller care to comment at this time, other than that "Seattle theatregoers will be delighted at the future policy of the beautiful theatre."

The "Albers Brothers Miner" has been used with big success by at least two northwest exhibitors as lobby stunt for Paramount's "To the Last Man." Lynn Ruggles of the Liberty, Chehalis, and E. A. Zabel, of the Ray in Olympia, both found that their public was drawn by the picturesque figure of the kneeling miner flipping his flapjacks for their amusement. Autumn leaves and fir boughs made an attractive setting.

T. E. Barry's new Princess Theatre in Edmonds, Wash., is scheduled for its opening November 2. Mr. Barry has a mighty pretty little house seating about 400.

D. Constanti, who owns the Liberty and Everybody's in Tacoma, and the Stewart in Puyallup, will build a new house in Sumner, Wash.

Seattle fans are looking forward to the opening of "If Winter Comes" at Hamrick's Blue Mouse. The Seattle run opens November 3, and Tacoma and Portland will have day and date showings opening November 10 at Blue Mouse theatres. Runs will be extended. "The Eleventh Hour" goes into the Seattle Coliseum on November 10 and "Soft Boiled" into the Liberty on the 17th.

J. B. Sparks, owner of the Liberty and Grand theatres in Bend, Oregon, has sold out to C. H. Smith, who is editor of the Bend paper. Sparks still owns a house in Bryanville, which he will probably continue to operate.

Al. Finkelstein, manager of the J. & V. house in Bremerton, the Rialto, is contemplating a trip to Los Angeles upon the return of Mr. Von Herberg from Europe.

Manager Robert W. Bender of the Columbia Theatre hooked up tight with the Navy on Navy Day in Seattle. The band of the U. S. S. Idaho gave two concerts at the theatre in co-operation with the Navy League, at 2:10 and at 7:40. Commander Woods also appeared on the Columbia's stage and gave a brief talk on the United States Navy of today. In addition, special pictures of navy life were shown.

The Southeast

Last week account was given of two handsome new theatres just opening in North Carolina. And last week Claude Lee, formerly of the Imperial Theatre, Charlotte, threw open the doors of his handsome, magnificent new Rivoli Theatre in Hickory, N. C. The theatre is one of the prettiest in the state for a town the size of Hickory, and its tastefulness and harmony of decorative scheme impress one. The lobby is finished in old ivory and cream; the paneling is high, lighted with burnt sienna. The walls of the interior are finished in a pleasing shade of gray.

A shower of congratulations, floral offerings and telegrams greeted Mr. Lee upon its formal opening, besides a large delegation of film and theatre men from all over the territory.

Stanley Warrick, the famous Palm Beach exhibitor, spent a few minutes in Atlanta en route to Palm Beach after a pleasant summer spent in Cayuga, New York. He expects Florida's greatest resort season this winter.

Harry Sample, who owns and operates the Airdome at Fort Pierce, Fla., has bought the Sunset Theatre, Fort Pierce, from E. J. Sparks. The Sunset is a comparatively new theatre and one of the prettiest of its size in the South.

W. D. Patrick has returned to Florida after a business trip to Atlanta. While there he bought a new piano for his Cozy Theatre, Florala, and also for the New Palace, Dothan, Alabama, which he recently bought from W. D. Powell.

It is announced by the Howard-Wells Amusement Company, Wilmington, N. C., that business conditions continue so bad in Wilmington that they will close pictures at their Royal Theatre, effective November 10, putting in musical comedy stock for a period.

Baltimore

Title has been conveyed to the New Theatre Company, through the Title Guarantee and Trust Company, to a lot measuring 33 by 33 feet, by Joseph T. Lawton and others for $60,000. This piece of property is part of the site of the New Theatre property which was leased a number of years ago by the theatre company with an option to buy. It fronts on Clay street on which part of the rear of the New Theatre building stands.

A young man was fined $11.45 in the Northern Police Court recently for having broken a glass tube containing a sulphur solution in the Ideal Theatre, 903 West Thirty-sixth street, causing the audience to rush out, fearing that a fire had broken out. This theatre is managed by Julius Goodman.

Through arrangements made with L. Garman, manager of the Pimlico Theatre, Park Heights and Belvidere avenues, a series of meetings will be held at that playhouse on Sunday evenings by the Pimlico Baptist Church.

The Strand Theatre, 404-6 North Howard street, which was at one time controlled by Arthur B. Price and Thomas D. Goldberg, and sold in January to Cleveland R. Bealmear after it was closed, has been bought by J. Marshall Melvin from Mr. Bealmear.

Utah

H. E. Skinner, formerly manager of the Alhambra Theatre, who recently sold his interests in this house, will open a new theatre on Washington avenue in Ogden, Utah. The house will seat 500 and cost about $125,000. Architecture will be of the Colonial type. High class product will be shown at medium prices.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Do Not Permit Recent News Stories to Adversely Affect Your Local Patrons

RECENTLY the daily press has given widespread publicity to the shutting down of production at some of the West Coast studios, and as might be expected, the reporters have failed to handle the matter knowingly. They have seen only that studios have been closed, and have given widespread publicity to the interviews in which the production heads have stated that the shutdown has been made because salaries and production costs have risen beyond the point of profit.

Naturally this has served to give the reading public the suggestion that the picture business is going to the demnition bowwows, and even persons who might be supposed to be better informed have taken this viewpoint.

All this would be unimportant were it not for the fact that the impression is created that motion pictures are in a bad way as applied to current releases.

Public is Sensitive

The amusement public is sensitive to suggestion. It is apt to get the impression that we are about to enter upon an era of cheap and unworthy productions, and to apply this belief to the current presentations, in spite of the fact that the production average this season is higher than it has ever been in the history of the pictures.

And when patrons get this impression, they are apt to stay away from the theatres in the belief that the offerings are unworthy.

The wise manager will at once take steps to offset the harm done by these newpaper announcements, not alone through his house organs, but through acquainting the local editors with the real facts in the case.

Go straight to the editor and tell him that the shut downs are in no sense due to lack of interest or to the failure of the public to support the pictures, but that having made up a sufficient number of pictures to supply the demand for several months to come, the producers are taking a vacation until their current releases are disposed of. With the idea of throwing a scare into the actors and producers, the rising costs have been given as the reason for these closings, whereas it is merely a matter of waiting until the present product is disposed of before starting in to make more.

Good Pictures Assured

The production of those who have closed down is assured for months to come, but instead of going on making more pictures which cannot possibly be released until well into the spring and tying up seven figure sums for several months, they are taking the more rational course of letting the current business bring in the money to finance the coming pictures.

The shut downs will relieve the studios involved of the strain of enormous salary rolls, but they will not to the slightest degree affect the quality of the pictures already made and held for release during the coming months, and the sooner the local managers communicate these facts to their publics, the better it will be for the local business.

Played the Races

Driving hard on the Papyrus-Zev race pictures, Oral D. Cloakey, of the Regent Theatre, Ottawa, got out 2,000 paddock tickets in simulation of those used at local tracks. Of these some 500 were sent out by the Royal Connaught Jockey Club to its membership and the rest handed out by a peddler dressed in silks, or hung on doorknobs.

Stress was laid on the fact that the picture was brought to Montreal by airplane.

Making the Most of It

Midnight matinees have generally been held for New Year's Eve, but the management of Jensen and Von Herberg's Liberty Theatre, Seattle, did not see any good reason why the midnight show should not be an even greater attraction on Hallowe'en, so a special performance was given that evening, starting after the regular night performances. Tickets were sold only to comfortable capacity. No overcrowding.

For this a special program was planned, with a brief minstrel show, an apple bobbing contest, costume prizes and all sorts of pranks appropriate to the occasion.

This sort of occasion not only makes money for the box office the night of the show, but the after effects of a well planned entertainment are even more valuable though they cannot be stated in definite dollars and cents. People will associate the extra good time they had with the house.

If you have a theatre, why not make it work for you to its limit instead of merely giving stated shows? Even the most loyal picture fan appreciates a change now and then.

Gives Litho Tickets With Auto Stickers

Windshield stickers are now so common that they have become almost a pest and autoists who regarded them with curious interest for a time are beginning to scratch them off the glass while cursing the man who put them there.

The Fox office sends in the latest idea for stickers, but does not identify the first user, which appears to be a Columbia Theatre somewhere on the west coast.

In front the sticker is much the same as others, a white letter on a deep blue telling that William Fox is presenting If Winter Comes. It looks just like the hundreds of others.

But when the irate owner of the car comes along and climbs into the engineer's seat, he sees through the glass that there is printing on the reverse and he reads: "If you drive up to the Columbia Theatre with this on your windshield between August 3rd and 15th, it is good for one admission ticket. Not good for Saturday or Sunday."

And he smiles and lets the sticker stick, as stickers are supposed to stick.

It's a good stunt, but we're wondering if it walked all the way in. November is no time to introduce August stunts, though this is still good.

A FLOAT ON THE MIDNIGHT ALARM FOR A FIREMAN'S PARADE

This was the contribution of the Imperial Theatre, Montreal, to the parade staged by the firemen for Fire Prevention Week, the nature of the production lending itself unusually well to the idea. The matched cutouts mask in a heavy truck.

Painting Plus Card for If Winter Comes

That merchants "eat up" the hook-in possibilities for fall advertising in If Winter Comes is again shown in this window display from Watsonville, California. The card on the right is lettered: "Are you correctly costumed If Winter Comes" if you are not, the card goes on to say that the store will fix you up.

A WINDOW DISPLAY

This simple card covered the introduction of a two-wing panel of paintings with a card stating that it was to be seen at the California Theatre, and all it cost C. L. Laws was the writing of the cards. The panels were apparently a part of the decorative scheme of the window, which was nicely dressed as an interior.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

BEFORE Brooklyn audiences had time to settle down to the new banjo and saxophone players in the orchestra for the Symphonized Jazz, we shook them up again by putting on his new chorus of eighteen feminine voices, and by adding a marimbaphone soloist to the orchestra who can double on the saxophone. These were brought forth with "Richard the Lion Hearted," the chorus being used in a tabloid opera and in "In a Persian Garden," and the marimbaphonist doing his stuff in the symphonized jazz.

The syncopated classic, opening the de luxe shows, introduced "Kind of a Girl Men Forget," "Last Night on the Back Porch," "Havana" and "Moonlight Kisses," the special orchestration bringing out in solo at least ten instruments. The lighting scheme called for two booth Mestrum spots of 150 amperes on the silver draw curtains, amber, with x-rays overhead light blue and purple and with purple foots. Two dome floods in amber were on the orchestra, with green foots on big stage and borders same color. The transparent windows were light green, with fabric columns at either side at proscenium arch lighted green from tops and amber from bottom.

"In a Persian Garden" had a neutral blue back drop upon which were thrown two light blue open box lamps, these lamps being in front of the curtain shooting upward. They were hidden by set piece Oriental wall and house, with rugs, drapes and suitable props here and there. From the sides were six spots, three to a side, colors being amber, orange, light blue, light green and magenta. The chorus served as atmosphere and had two numbers to sing. On a throne left stage was seated a tenor in Oriental garb, who sang "Ah Moon of My Delight" while premier danseuse and ballet did some veil stuff center stage, and chorus joined in refrain. A baritone and a soprano were other principal vocalists, and songs used were "Come Fill the Cup," chorus; "Myself When Young," baritone and three of ballet; "Each Morn a Thousand Roses," soprano. The front lighting included one deep blue booth flood and one deep purple on sides of orchestra cyclorama; one deep blue and one purple dome flood on musicians; light blue transparent windows, green tops in columns, entrance spots, one magenta and one green, crossing on ceiling pineapple cloth drapes above orchestra.

The condensed opera was "Cavalleria Rusticana," with five principals, the chorus and four members of the ballet as Italian street urchins. It ran twenty-two minutes, preceded by special film trailer giving cast and synopsis of story. The continuity of the opera, in special set as used at Metropolitan Opera House, was carried through as follows: "Prelude" by the orchestra; "Siciliana," Everett Clark, tenor; Introductory Chorus, by the chorus; "Coachman Song," Jackson Kinsey, baritone, and the chorus; "Prayer," Rosa Desrosiers, soprano, and chorus; "Romance," Miss Desrosiers; duet by Miss Desrosiers and Joseph Turino, tenor; "Lola's Song," Louise Fraer, mezzo soprano; Intermezzo, by the orchestra; "Drinking Song," Mr. Turino and chorus; duet, Kinsey and Turino, and the finals by ensemble.

On the presentation stage for this opera were four amber spots from one side and four orange from the other, with amber foots and light blue borders. For the front: Two deep blue floods from the dome on orchestra, which changed to orange when the musicians took up the Intermezzo and went back to light blue on the final strains. Entrance spots flooding side drapes purple. Blue borders on large stage.

Ties Fashion Show Up to Cameo Kirby

Some picture titles seem to be made especially to carry fashion shows, but others can be made to fit, and S. J. Stebbins, managing director of the Fox Oa land Theatre, actually made a virtue of the fact that Cameo Kirby was of the vintage of the '60s. He made that the excuse for contrasting the styles of 1860 with the fall and winter styles of 1923. To quote from the program, the revue took the spectator "from crinoline and hoop-skirts to bobbed hair and sandals."

One of the leading stores supplied the modern costumes and also paid a portion of the cost of the models, all of whom were professional entertainers who introduced their specialties at some point in the performance. A novelty was the use of a closed car from which the models made their entrance in demonstration of outdoor toilettes.

One side of the stage carried the numerals of 1860 while the other showed 1923, and the appearance of the new model gowns was balanced by the showings of costumes similar to those worn in the play.

The cost was small.

Turned Out the Band

A naval band was placed at the disposal of the Colonial Theatre, Indianapolis, during the showing of Masters of Men, and a machine gun was also loaned for sidewalk display. The recruiting service, as usual, was glad to hook into the pictures and naturally the Colonial appreciated this inexpensive aid.

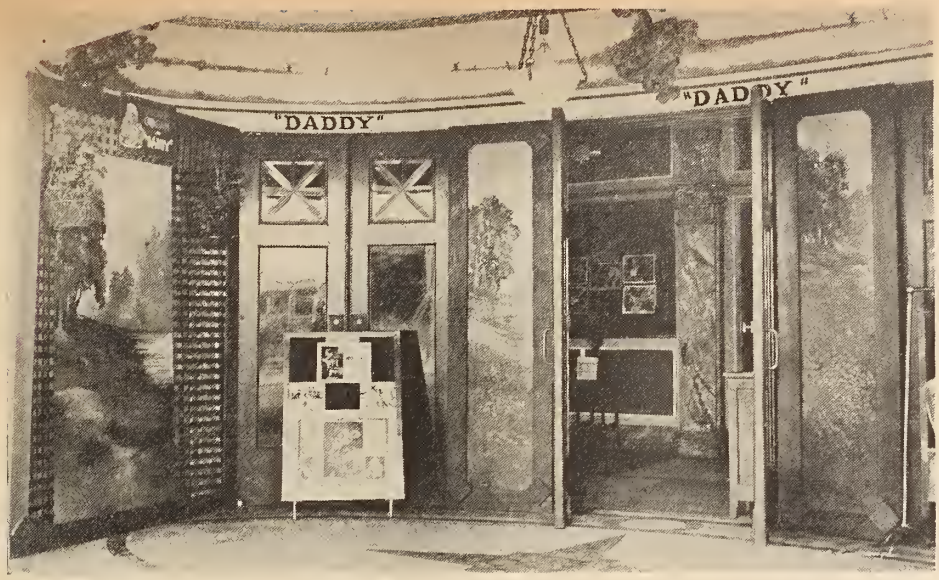
HOW NEW YORK VAUDEVILLE HOUSES ARE HANDLING IS CONAN DOYLE RIGHT?

The Keith houses in New York are using the Pathe release dealing with fake spiritualism, and they figure that the title is worth playing up strongly. On the left is the front of B. S. Moss' Franklin Theatre, with an effective shadow box. The display on the right is from the Hamilton Theatre, a Keith house. Here the entire banner is given the film.



A First National Release

PANELED PICTURES HELP PUT OVER DADDY IN CANADA

A shot of the Royal Theatre, Victoria, B. C., where Manager Denham uses painted panels to get attention for his lobby display on the Jackie Coogan picture. He finds that pictorial displays draw a better class of patrons than lithographs.

Found New Ideas on Bluebeard's Wife

Harold Horne worked a good one on Bluebeard's Eighth Wife. He made a foyer display of the more or less "original" costumes worn by Miss Swanson, and advertised it liberally. This not only helped the coming play, but since people had to purchase tickets to get into the foyer, it made additional business on the previous attraction. To get the last possible kick out of it, Mr. Horne added the Zaza stills to the display, to boom the next Swanson as well.

Something that will commend itself was the use of hat boxes over the bracket lights, each cut out for the title, with colored paper pasted over the letters. When the house lights were on these illuminated signs made a brave showing at a very small cost, since the boxes were donated.

These were the high lights of a comprehensive campaign along more usual lines, which included the store arrows and a set of teasers which worked in advance to put over title, star and the gowns.

It was a two weeks' help to Loew's Palace Theatre, Memphis.

Still Working

The "original" shawl given to Dorothy Gish by the Cuban government in recognition of her work in The Bright Shawl is still hard at exploitation. It turned up recently in Oakland, Cal., where the T. & D. Theatre put on all the frills, including heavy thief and fire insurance, an armed guard day and night, and its display in a window with a showing of the novel and a painted background.

And the papers bit right into it without being half asked. It was a good story and if it was not free of suspicion, at least it was good reading, so everyone read about it.

Now It's Penrod

The reminiscent contest, originally started by the late Max Doolittle for The Great Moment was adapted by the Madison Theatre Peoria, Ill. On the proposition that Penrod and Sam took you back to the days of your childhood, prizes were offered by one of the newspapers for the best kid memories from the local citizenry. It gained seven or eight columns of publicity at a small cash cost.

The free Penrod suit was given for the best slogan for those garments and a cut-up-puzzle on a throwaway had a 50-ticket prize distribution. It all helped to influence the business in a northerly direction.

Used the Twenty-one

Using the 21 puzzle scheme from Eddie Bonns yellow helper on Three Wise Fools was the chief exploit for that feature at the Abdallah Theatre, Leavenworth, Kans. Manager John Topper displayed the puzzle on a large card in a window and announced that card copies could be had inside for the asking. This was better than throwing them out since each one went home and was worked over.

The only other special stunt used to put the picture over to good business was a thousand letters to residents and the officers at the Army post.

Had Two Forms of Heavy Opposition

Most managers would find it difficult to decide as to whether a circus or a minstrel show was the worse opposition. C. W. Irwin, of the Imperial Theatre, Columbia, S. C., not only got both but had to buck Potash and Perlmutter, the local premiere of Tess of the Storm Country and two road shows. And he was opening his Greater Movie Season! Tough luck!

He did not lose his head and spend a lot of money trying to get over. His total excess was only $33, and yet he did better than usual with Harold Lloyd in Why Worry.

He utilized the circus by tagging the parade with an impersonator attended by a couple of bill throwers and took an additional two twos for four days before the opening to tell the newspaper readers. An electric stage box and one in the foyer told the previous week's patrons and for the second time this season he posted a 24-sheet.

He not only got an increase, but the popularity of the star pulled a permanent price increase along with it. He could not break records with all that opposition, but holding business more than up is something of a record in itself.

Good Copy

Simple and effective advertising was done by H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala. He used spare tire cards on a brand of taxis, each reading: "You can avoid Strangers of the Night by riding in our yellow cabs." Along the same lines all roads leading into town warned travelers to beware of Strangers of the Night unless they were found at the Empire on specified dates.

It helped to get extra good crowds for a picture well worth while.

Sol Harris, of the Capitol Theatre, Little Rock is another manager to get a double truck out of Why Worry. He found 27 firms willing to tell why readers should not worry so long as they were doing business, and it made a very pretty splash. Why Worry seems to have won more hook-up pages than any other comedy to date.

HOW THE RIALTO THEATRE, CHATTANOOGA, USED CUTOUTS

C. B. Stiff based his lobby display on cutouts from the Metro posters and got not only a variety of poses, but attention compelling tableaux. Some day someone is going to make a prop dinosaur for a Buster cutout to navigate on.

Says It Is His

David Rector, manager of the Hawthorne Theatre, Hawthorne, California, writes that in a recent article a Paramounteer is given credit for having originated the weekly "Shopper's Advertiser," published in the interests of the theatre, with the advertising of local merchants and using the Paramount and other roto sheets. Mr. Rector says that the idea was originated by himself and that the Paramounteer's only connection was to edit the first two issues.

The paragraph was supplied through the Paramount publicity channels and the wrongful placing of the credit was doubtless due to a misreading of the exploiter's report. It is no part of the Paramount exploitation scheme to assume undeserved credit. To the contrary.

Mr. Rector writes that the stunt has doubled his business and that he is trying to have the idea legally protected. This is not possible, since the idea is by no means new other than that it uses the roto sheets and makes them pay for their own cost.

Tickled the Town

Just as soon as the Saturday Evening Post printed its recent Paramount advertisement which was illustrated by a picture of the Miller Theatre, Stanley Newton Chambers hustled it into a 200 x 5 (about a five fourteens), to tell the pleased citizens that "Paramount paid $8,500 for this page in the Saturday Evening Post to 'tell the world' about the Miller." Across the top he ran 'Not only the finest in Wichita, but one of America's greatest." The entire town shared Chambers's pride.

ONE OF THE MOST AMBITIOUS LOBBIES FOR CIRCUS DAYS

This was planned by Pantages Theatre, Kansas City, and masks in the box office with a ticket wagon front that adds to the realism. It cost more than some of the fronts we have shown on this production but Kansas City needs more than a small town asks.

Numerous Newsies

Advertising a newsboys' matinee on Circus Days, Frank L. Browne, of the Liberty Theatre, Long Beach, Cal., was amazed at the number of alleged newsboys this Angelian suburb could boast.

Some of them were very clearly retail dealers in the happenings of the day, but there were little girls in white lace dresses and small boys in Penrod suits with their faces washed and some who had not been so particular, but Browne just smiled and said "Come in, fellers," even though they bulged the walls of the 3,000 seat house.

It all helped the story which the collaborating newspaper ran, and it helped the Jackie Coogan play to a close to record business.

Came Back

If it's old and it works, it's good if it is old. H. C. Farley, of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., used the old sidewalk spelling bee for Circus Days, and it helped to make the 25% increase in receipts that this picture brought in.

He planned for a clown rube and to give him something to do he provided cards lettered to spell out "Jackie Coogan in Circus Days at the Empire."

He would drop these on the sidewalk in a confused mass and sort them out while the crowd gathered. Their interest was proven by the way they sought to correct his supposed mistake when he purposely put some of the letters in their wrong places. Long before he had them properly set the crowd knew the message, but they hung around to make sure the job was properly done, and all the while the message was sinking still deeper into their minds. Then the clown would pick off the cards and go on to a fresh pitch.

Mr. Farley also found that many persons would accept and keep a herald handed by a clown where they would not take them from an ordinary bill passer. That's something else to remember.

Repeated an Ed.

When the editor of the Topeka State Journal wrote a glowing editorial on Penrod and Sam, the Isis Theatre promptly took extra space to reprint the comment to connect it with the house.

One paragraph from the editorial is well worth reprinting here. It reads: "The picture is advertised as a 'juvenile' feature. This is a mistake. It is of more genuine heart interest to father and mother than to the children."

This is where many managers have failed. They have appealed purely to the children, to their own hurt as well as injury to the patron in that they keep some of the latter from a delightful picture for adults.

Still Good

Solemnly assuring the revenue men that he did not want to make moonshine, H. C. Farley, manager of the Empire Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., borrowed a small still they had seized.

This he set up in the lobby with the worm running into the spout of a teapot instead of a retort.

You can have three guesses as to the title of the picture. If you guess Tea with a Kick, you win.

A SET OF PLAYING CARD TEASERS DESIGNED FOR NEWSPAPER USE ON THE SPANISH DANCER

These are all column width by 2¾ inches high and are inserted one each day for the week prior to the showing of the Pola Negri play. They were devised by Russell B. Moon, Paramounteer in the vicinity of New Haven, and were used by him for campaigns in most of the towns in his territory, supplementing the fortunetelling cards supplied by the Advertising Aids' Department

Plays Cards Well to Sell a Dancer

Russell B. Moon, who Paramounts around the New Haven section, adapted a home office stunt for Pola Negri in The Spanish Dancer and put the feature over to exceptional business at practically every showing.

The Advertising Aids Department is supplying a set of fortune telling cards which are rather too costly for general distribution, but Moon caught the idea and had drawn up a set of one column by three inch teasers which were run serially a week before the showing. These are shown at the top of this page. Each started with "The Spanish Dancer says," and ran into some general prophecy.

The cards were used all through that section with the exception of New London, where there is a large foreign population, most of whom are of the Catholic Church. Here Moon discarded the card pips and used instead the cross, crown and heart, starting with the cross alone showing in the space and working up to the sixth which reads to the effect that he fought for cross and crown and won the Spanish Dancer.

The use of the cards is based on the scene in the play where the dancer, called to entertain the guests of Don Caesar, tells his fortune with the cards. As teasers the cross and crown set is more apt to get the attention than the playing cards, though both have proved their value.

Working along the same line, Moon reproduced the cards in window size, 15 x 22 inches, with a still set in. Some of these are straight pasteups, but the sample reproduced has the heart cut out and the photograph is pasted to the back. All of the cards carry similar messages hooked in to some commodity carried by the firm displaying the card. A fortune can be framed up for any line of business.

For another store window angle he used a girl in gypsy costume who was provided with a set of similar cards, which she used to tell fortunes in the window of some prominent store. This stunt held crowds all day long.

A FORTUNE CARD

It is important that all auguries be favorable both in these and the store hook-in cards. A "trouble" message is certain to create an unfavorable reaction against the play. The best way to work the window girl is to let her select a certain card from the pack and indicate some one person whose fortune this is supposed to be. This will make for more interest than where a general appeal is made. One or two can be discreetly humorous.

Boy Knights Given Admission Badges

John Max Rosenfield, Dallas Paramounteer, got a new slant on the free admission when he put over When Knighthood Was in Flower at the Gem Theatre, Temple, Texas.

He got the local paper to print a "badge" made of rule and type with the Tudor cut supplied by the advertising department. The badge was about 2 by 2¾ inches, with a tail at the top two inches long by three-eighths wide. This tail was to be slipped through the buttonhole of a coat or shirt.

Any boy between seven and seventeen who presented himself at the theatre as escort to any woman member of his family, was admitted free. Apparently the companion paid. It was called the "Knighthood Badge" which sounds better than "coupon," which it more properly is.

The stunt was based on the old chivalric oath which included a pledge to honor and cherish our womenkind.

Another stunt was an invitation to all school teachers and executives.

Max is doing darned well for a beginner.

Use Fire Flitter

H. C. Farley, of the Strand Theatre, Montgomery, Ala., says he got them in for Red Lights with a lobby sign painted in "fire-flitter." Don't ask us what that is. All we know is that it is some sort of paint which sparkles in the light.

And the light in this instance was a flock of red bulbs working on flashers. It was very inexpensive, but it made a fine flash at night and shot the business up without taking most of the increase for expenses.

Fire flitter sounds interesting. Perhaps Mr. Farley will tell you more if you enclose a return addressed envelope. He's a good scout.

THE SPECIAL SET OF TEASERS DESIGNED BY MOON FOR USE IN NEW LONDON

There is a large foreign population here, mostly Catholic, and the Cross, crown and heart, symbols familiar to those of that faith were deemed more likely to get attention than the card pips used on the teasers in other towns. These were used in the order here shown, reading from left to right. This engagement was one of the most successful in his territory.

Here's Bill Saal

William Saal, who used to write the "Casey" stuff for the old house organ of Texas Enterprises, is with Herschel Stuart in St. Louis, as successor to Ed. Olmstead, translated to Chicago.

The "Casey" stuff, as you may recall, since we quoted a couple, is in the style of K. C. B., and more nearly in the spirit of Beaton than most of his thousands of imitators, who stop the imitation with the short lines and forget to put in the whimsical idea.

Herschel Stuart sends us a list of Bill's duties that reads like a year's job, and says he has to go through the program each week, and it is evident that Bill does what he's told. Bill gets out the Missouri News, the house program organ; writes the ads, supervises the handling of some 40,000 to 60,000 distributed pieces, looks after the posted and special signs and banners, helps with the lobby, thinks up special press hook-ups, and does a few other odd jobs, and now he is thinking of taking tickets while the regular doorman goes to dinner. And, best of all, he's writing a Casey each week for the program.

Didn't Worry

Instead of worrying about Why Worry?, J. B. Carroll, of the Victory Theatre, Tampa, Fla., passed his worry along in the shape of quarter sheet cards simply carrying the title.

These were not only tacked all over the town and out in the suburbs, but cards were supplied any merchant who would work out a window display with them. An automobile concern, for example, hung one on each car in the warerooms and in the windows, and then painted its own sign, 16 x 4 feet, which read "Why worry? Buy a Star or Durant."

For three days these cards ran wild and then Carroll posted the paper for the show still a week off, and put the screen to work. He got a double deck hook-up page, too, because the title had been so thoroughly sold to the public that the merchants were glad to come in, not merely willing.

The result was the best four-day draw in the history of the house. Please page the wise ones who said Why Worry? would not draw as well as Safety Last because it lacked the thrills. They want laughs from Lloyd.

Claims a Record

Sam Palmer opines that one of the Paramounteers, Joseph T. Emmerling, broke all records when he landed ten windows in a town of 4,000. The town was Le Mars, Ia., and the show was The Cheat at the Royal Theatre. We do not think it was anywhere near the record, but the more interesting point is that the stills on The Cheat work nicely in window grabbing.

He got a phonograph store with Negri dancing with de Roche, and a bank with Pola at the window and a card reading, "'Aim to save a little every week,' says Pola Negri, coming to the Royal Theatre in The Cheat. And she practices what she preaches."

He could not find a picture for the drug store, but he got one showing the star at the telephone with a "phone your drug wants" to the store showing the picture.

Toy Train Wins for Westbound Limited

L. W. Carroll made a good drive on The Westbound Limited at the Princess Theatre, Berlin, N. H., and got in a big first day crowd. They liked the show, so business was better the second and last day of the run. Selling the first day sold the second through verbal advertisement.

He used the trailer and two slides, one of the latter home made, two weeks in advance, and for the showing he had the "Stop, Look, See" cutout and the one of the man with the lantern. The lantern in the latter was cut out and tied back with a string so that it would sway in the slightest breeze.

He got ones and even threes in store windows and three days before the opening he got permission to use a $50 electric train in a window on condition that he dress the window himself.

This he was only too glad to do, as he knew that the sight of the manager of the theatre dressing the window for an electrical shop would in itself make talk in a town that size. A lot of people guessed that he was working for The Westbound Limited and went away sold on the idea of seeing the play through pleasure in their own astuteness.

When it was done the train was backed by the three sheet showing the various types of engines, and a card reading, "Your boy! He'll feel like an engineer with one of these outfits. Instructive. Economical. Take him to see The Westbound Limited. Princess, of course. Wednesday-Thursday."

The educational value of the types of engine three sheet got a special mention in the local paper, which helped some.

An Advance Prologue

Figuring that there was more advertising value in a prologue than a trailer, the Palace Theatre, New Castle, Quebec, staged a portion of an incident from Passion the three days before that First National was shown. Six local amateurs took the parts.

At the crisis the action was stopped and a sign was flashed to the effect that the incident would be continued the first three days of the following week. The incomplete prologue should not be advertised as one of the attractions, but should be introduced without announcement and purely as an advertisement and not as a production.

An Extra Column Is Helpful to Display

Here are two examples of the use of the same press book cut, showing that a three column cut does not always work best in a three column space. These two are practically the same length, but the wider will seem to be the smaller in the reduction, because reduction of the width will pull in the length. The first shown is that of the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore, using the cut in the three column space for which it was intended. This is 132 lines long and three columns wide. There is little selling talk other than the two blurbs carried on the bell. The space is not crowded and it makes a good looking display. Most of the confidence of the management is placed in the announcement of the star and the play. The example from the Allen Theatre, Cleveland, is four columns wide and 135 lines deep, a difference of less than a quarter of an inch. Here the First National trademark has been routed out and replaced with a type line in the lower left hand corner. The cast has been moved down to just above this credit line and the authors are stated in the space used for the cast in Baltimore. There is some selling talk on the right and slogans on either side of the star name, up above. It makes a more attractive space chiefly because there is the lighter touch of proper white space; though the cut does not really crowd in three columns. However the larger white spaces give an even better effect and also increase the display value of the cut, which would be lost were the design to be increased to a four column width. The moral seems to be that a two column cut works better in a three column space than a three, or in the last analysis, the white space helps more than it costs. Look the pair of them over and draw your own conclusions.

HOW THE ALLEN USED IT

a change in the cuts. Evidently the original was drawn as shown in the larger of these reproductions. A plate was made and a second negative was made, this being cut to let in the single figure which replaces the tableau in the larger example. The main title and smaller announcements are left in, and the simple change of one cut gives what seems to be an entirely new display so that those who see one form on Saturday, read precisely the same thing with renewed interest when it comes out on Sunday in the morning papers. It is cleverly and effectively done with small cost for the change. Opinions may differ as to whether it is better to use the same style display for the value of iteration or a change to get a new approach. This form seems to combine the best points of each. It is a new approach and yet sufficiently like the other to have the advantage of the repeat, as well. This seems to be a combination display and not a single plate, for the type lines, while very similar, are in different faces and one takes a smaller full face line than the other. It is apparently made up of two or three cuts and not on a single plate. It is an interesting study in method, and it has yielded good results.

One Cut Layout Is Good for Huntress

Here is the first advertising display on The Huntress we have found that does not carry a halftone of the star that does not help the sales to any extent. This is apparently a press book design worked up for a paneled display, and if we had a house and could get material like this, we would let all the halftones in the catalogue run for the well-known Sweeney. It is 140 by two, or a two tens; rather deeper than is always good practice and yet the precise proportioning for this cut, and it makes one of the prettiest displays Mr. Malaney has given the Park and Mall Theatres, Cleveland, in a long time. It is a nice harmony of cut and display with the selling talk as well done as the attractor and with an attractor that will help to sell the selling talk. It is seldom that we get as hard a working display, and yet it is only twenty column inches. If Malaney wants to swell his chest out a couple of inches, he has every reason for doing so. This is a pretty thing to look mum of cost. If this sort of thing can be done with a little art work, the same thing can be done almost as well through mortising the plan-book cut, lining with three or six point rule, to get panel and setting in the type. And yet we find on this subject a lot of good line cuts which almost invariably are complicated with an indifferent halftone. Halftones are better than line cuts about once in each thousand times, and yet managers almost habitually play the 1000 to 1 chance—and lose. Take another look at this delightful example of what can be done with line, and swear off halftones, forever.

The Midnight Alarm Has a Layout Space

Although an extra price is generally charged for supposedly pure reading, it often happens that this matter is an addition to the appearance of the newspaper imposing the additional charge, which does not seem altogether fair to the advertiser. This across page space from the Denver papers was paid for by the Colorado Theatre to advertise Vitagraph's The Midnight Alarm, the theatre figuring that the extra display was worth the extra cost involved. It wanted to ensure that the cuts would be used and that the caption was precisely what the theatre wanted, so it paid to get just what would help the house most, and we think it was a profitable investment, since excess receipts were reported on this picture. This is the Times layout and a similar strip was used in the Post, but with a change in the layout of pictures, though the caption remained the same. This is a more useful form of display than straight type in a paper where layouts are employed, and probably can be taken over to the straight display page at no additional cost unless there is a charge for breaking column rules. Some newspapers still retain this almost obsolete graft. In this layout the outside photographs are given the vaudeville acts, the three central pictures showing the Vitagraph stars. It is a clever and useful form.

This might not be a good plan where a feature is less well known, but these creations of Montague Glass' are known wherever the language is understood. They need only to be announced, rather than advertised, and further elaboration was not necessary. The play-up for the fashion show is particularly neat.

Poorly Planned Cut Runs Up the Costs

Here is another example of the line and halftone cuts on The Huntress in which a better effect could be achieved by routing the halftone. This is 175 by 3, approximately 13½ inches deep, for the Rivoli Theatre, Baltimore. About three inches across, or nine inches in all could have been saved by routing out that halftone which suggests a spirit portrait in its vagueness. It may have looked all right in the plan book, but it was printed on a cylinder press on poorer paper, and it is not so good when it is on the job. Cutting it out would have spoiled the top of the "u" in the title, but a little careful work would have formed this from the metal left on and the saving of nine column inches is not to be disregarded. At best this is not a good choice of the material offered. In its worst aspect it is a dead waste of costly space.

ALICE ADAMS. (6,000 feet). Star, Florence Vidor. I made more friends and more money on this picture than almost anything I ran previously. The Associated Exhibitors give me real value and I always make good with their products. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

F. B. O.

FLYING DUTCHMAN. (5,000 feet). Star, Ella Hall. A fair program picture. Ran "Ocean Swells," Educational comedy, with this, also good, which made nice little program for me. Print in A-1 condition. Has O. K. moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in city of 700,000. Admission 10 cents at all times. Stephen G. Brenner, Eagle Theatre (218 seats), Baltimore, Maryland.

IN THE NAME OF THE LAW. (6,126 feet). Star cast. This picture should be shown in every theatre in the state and everybody should see it. Teaches a good lesson and all should abide by it. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

MARY OF THE MOVIES. (6,500 feet). Star cast. How they can get away with a film like this and ask us exhibitors to pay money for it is a puzzle to me. I took it off after the first show. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

THIRD ALARM. (6,700 feet). Star cast. Ran this as a fireman's benefit and satisfied a fair crowd. The attendance was not what we expected being for the firemen, but this was not the fault of the picture. A one hundred per cent. show. Fire scenes excellent. Ran this with the Dan Mason comedy, "The Fire Chief," which was very appropriate and satisfied. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

CROSSROADS OF NEW YORK. (6,292 feet). Star cast. This looks like an attempt at a burlesque comedy melodrama which later had the more ridiculous parts cut out and was sent out as a straight melodrama. It is a regular serial thriller and hard to take seriously, particularly with so many of the slapstick comedy stars in the leading parts. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Ben L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star, Milton Sills. The bird who sees this and says it's no good and the like—yes, he sure is a dumbbell. Had good attendance. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

ISLE OF LOST SHIPS. (7,425 feet). Star cast. A very good picture; do not be afraid to book this picture more than one day. Booked this one for Sunday and Monday. We had very good attendance for the two days we played the picture. Draw good class. Victor D. Stamatis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

"It is my utmost desire to be of some use to my fellow men." This spirit prompts the sincere exhibitors who contribute dependable tips on pictures. Use this department to help your selection of pictures; choose exhibitors whose opinions agree with your experience on pictures you both have played and follow them. Each month an Index To Reports will appear in the final issue; this Index will be cumulative, giving the reports for that month and those previously appearing, for a period of six months. Use the tips and send all you can to help other exhibitors.

MIGHTY LAK' A ROSE. (8,036 feet). Star, Dorothy Mackaill. A picture that will cause much favorable comment, although it did not draw well for us; cast of practically "unknown" players may have been the reason. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw college students and railroad class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-15, 10-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (800 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

SCARS OF JEALOUSY. (6,246 feet). Star, Lloyd Hughes. A dandy. Do not be afraid of this; it holds interest from start to finish. I wish all pictures were as good. Patrons very profuse with good comment. Advertising slant, a real American drama. Good attendance, drawing farmers and retired farmers in town of 2,500. Admission 10-20 and 10-25. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre (350 seats), Alexandria, Minnesota.

SKIN DEEP. (6,500 feet). Star cast. Out of the ordinary pictures. Made good and made money. You can't go wrong on this picture. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw family class in city of 30.000. Jack Hoeffler, Orpheum Theatre (900 seats), Quincy, Illinois.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. I loved this picture probably because I have heard the voice from the minaret in Turkey and other Oriental countries. All seeing the picture liked it, and no kicks registered. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star cast. This picture is really a very good picture but is not the biggest special of the year as they try to sell it to you. Book this picture but do not pay too much. Book this one for more than one day. Photography is very good in this picture. Had very good attendance. Draw good class. Victor D. WANDERING DAUGHTERS. (5,471 feet). Star cast. I would say first class entertainment. This one has a wonderful moral and should be advertised big as it will please. It failed to draw, however, but no fault of the picture. Posters yielded fair attendance of neighborhood class in town of 4.000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississipi i.

WHAT A WIFE LEARNED. (6,228 feet). Star cast. Very good picture. Above the average. Good for all classes. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

WITHIN THE LAW. (8,034 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. An excellent picture from every angle. Pleased here immensely. Positively the best picture that Miss Talmadge has produced in months. Her last few pictures here were practically "flops" but this is a classic. Get it, play it, incidentally see if you can't arrange to get it at a price that you'll have something left, after the smoke clears away. Usual advertising brought excellent attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Fox

BELLS OF SAN JUAN. (4,587 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Good picture. Jones well liked. Picture was well enjoyed. Fritzi Brunette gives fine support. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, 10-25. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Very good picture. Should have had more attendance. Print in fine shape. Everyone came out pleased. Advertised it good. Used large heralds, ones. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had one hundred for attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 1,100. Dan Samek, Victory Theatre, Sulligent, Alabama.

MONTE CRISTO. (8 reels). Star, John Gilbert. Very good picture, enjoyed by all who saw it, but the working class stayed away. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw working class in town of 3,850. Admission 10, 10-15, 10-25. Walter E. Greenwood, Star Theatre (238 seats), Union City, Pennsylvania.

NEW TEACHER. (4,453 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Very pleasing program picture. Everybody enjoyed it. Shirley very popular here, and would advise small town exhibitors to try her out. She always brings a crowd to my house. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

SKID PROOF. (5,565 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A picture that satisfied because of its fast action, also because Jones is a favorite with kids and men. Ladies do not care very much for him. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

SNOW DRIFT. (4,617 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A dandy. Jones always good and takes just as good as Mix here. The last reel has got the Carpentier-Dempsey fight stuff. Pleased one hundred per cent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-15. A. E. Rogers, Temple Theatre (250 seats), Dexter, New York.

STEPPING FAST. (4,608 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good picture with plenty of action. It's just what you expect in a Tom Mix picture. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jacs Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

STEPPING FAST. (4,608 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Good picture, but Mix is not the drawing card that he used to be. Would be better if features he was in were entirely western. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

TOWN THAT FORGOT GOD. (10,461 feet). Star cast. Picture that should appeal in week runs. One to three days not sufficient to excite public with the truthfulness displayed. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw average college student class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-25-35. Jean Dagle, Barth Theatre (835 seats), Carbondale, Illinois.

Goldwyn

BROTHERS UNDER THE SKIN. (4,983 feet). Star cast. This surprised everyone. Our audiences were convinced they would see some cut-and-dried "gag" comedy and when the story was unfolding they lost themselves in wonder and amusement. Great small town picture. Usual lobby, lithos, brought good attendance. Draw factory people in town of 3,000. Admission 10-25. Henry W. Nauman, Majestic Theatre (300 seats), Elizabethtown, Pennsylvania.

GIMME. (5,769 feet). Star, Helene Chadwick. Story too light and over the heads of country patrons. Did not give general satisfaction here, but probably would go over well in the larger communities. Don't pay too much for it, for it is far from the special class. Moral tone O. K. and is not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

GOLDWYN FEATURES. Have proved consistently good. Never get a bad print from Goldwyn and they don't hold you up on the price. Pictures satisfy. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter. Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

LAST MOMENT. (6 reels). Star, Henry Hull. This is a creepy picture on which the opinion was very much divided as to merit. The cast was good and inasmuch as I knew the type of film it was, I got a rip roaring comedy and made 'em forget the "shivery" stuff. Candidly this can be played, buy it reasonable. There is nothing that means anything to the small town exhibitor as far as exploitation is concerned but it is a little different and if you balance your program, I think it will please. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MR. BARNES OF NEW YORK. (4,804 feet). Star, Tom Moore. A fine picture of the 80's. Acting and photography are very good. Enjoyed by everyone; at least I heard no kicks. Used threes, slides. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

SIN FLOOD. (6,000 feet). Star cast. Those that saw it called it good. Had bad weather. Had only fair attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

WHEN ROMANCE RIDES. (5,003 feet). Star cast. Wonderful entertainment. Not a giant but good, from every angle. Pleased ninety percent. including "Yours Truly." Zane Gray stories are well liked. Usual advertising brought full house for attendance. Draw best patronage. W. B. Dobbs, Liberty Theatre, Reform, Alabama.

VANITY FAIR. (7,668 feet). Star, Mabel Ballin. As a classic it is better than to be expected. While not big, it will please at 10-25 cents. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had light attendance. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

Between Ourselves

A get-together place where we can talk things over

An exchange that looks at the bad print from the standpoint of what the exhibitor pays for his service is all wrong.

If the exchange doesn't care a hang about its duty to the exhibitor, to the producer, to the public, the man in charge ought to think something of his wife and himself and perform his duty in a fashion calculated to prolong his job.

With all the talk about high production cost and excessive rentals, refusal of audiences to pay increased admission, and so on, this print condition is a factor that ought to get attention.

Of course audiences aren't going to pay more when they have been stung with half a picture so often in the past and are being stung today.

And how can the exhibitor feel willing to pay high rentals in face of an apathetic public and the risk of a punk print?

A little more care on the part of producers in seeing that their exchanges deliver decent prints will go far toward bringing about co-operation on the part of exhibitors. VAN.

Hodkinson

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. (7,100 feet). Star cast. Very good. Attendance fair. Not a two day, small town picture. W. C. McIntire, Rose Theatre, Burlington, North Carolina.

MAN FROM GLENGARRY. (5,800 feet). Star cast. Fairly good picture. Five reels would have been better than six. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

Metro

FAMOUS MRS. FAIR. (7,000 feet). Star cast. Another Metro high priced picture that failed to draw. I don't see how they've got the nerve to ask more this year. Mae Murray is the only star they got that pulls but they ask for more than my gross receipts if the house was filled to S. R. O. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

HEARTS AFLAME. (8,110 feet). Star, Frank Keenan. All that has been said of this one is true. One of the very best of the good pictures. Will satisfy all sane people. It has the greatest forest fire of any yet. Good, wholesome comedy, a rattling story all the way through. Book it. Has splendid moral tone and is suitable for Sunday or any other day. Had big attendance. Draw best class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

PRISONER OF ZENDA. (10,467 feet). Star cast. It is wonderful. It's sad but true: it was nearly too good for our regular patronage. Stars are just right, scenes are amazing. Photography good. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

QUINCY ADAMS SAWYER. (7,500 feet). Star cast. A high priced picture that drew only half of the expenses. Picture, though, was very good of its kind. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

SOUL OF THE BEAST. (5,300 feet). Star, Madge Bellamy. Very good and well liked, especially by the kiddies—they literally "ate it up." Love drama, suitable for Sunday. Fine attendance of middle and lower class in big city. Admission 10-15 matinee, 10-35 evening. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

SUCCESS. (7,000 feet). Star cast. It might have been a success for others, but not for me. A bum title and not an overly strong drama. Cast good. Moral tone O. K. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 386. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

TRIFLING WOMEN. (9 reels). Star cast. This proved to be good. Did not find fault with the story. All the pictures that Rex Ingram gives out are one hundred per cent. Should go good for society class. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 15-25. Joseph L. Katz, Lyric Theatre (350 seats), Woodbine, New Jersey.

Paramount

BEYOND THE ROCKS. (6,740 feet). Star cast. Patrons say this the best picture in a long time. You can't go wrong on this one. Boost it. Used ones, threes, slides. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. J. R. Long, Opera House, Fort Payne, Alabama.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. An unusual and excellent story gorgeously set and splendidly cast lends itself especially to fashion tie-ups and other exploitation. We played it for an extended run with gratifying results. Has good moral tone; am doubtful whether it is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in city of 44,000. Admission 10-17-20-25. W. C. Benson, Laurier Theatre (1,100 seats), Woonsocket, Rhode Island.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gorgeous gowns and settings, scenes and sensational climaxes in every respect a big production. So good you'll want to see it over again and

I did. Book this one and no mistake can or will be made. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. The best thing this star has turned out to date, opened good but fell off on the end of the week due to heat. Local censors passed without cuts. Has spicey moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw high class in city of 75,000. Admission 28-40-55. W. H. Lusher, Strand Theatre (900 seats), Pasadena, California.

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Personally, I consider this a conglomeration of nothing. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

BORDERLAND. (5,405 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Eight reels. Sorriest picture we have had for some time. Lay off this one. Many like this one would kill a house. Used ones, threes. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

BOUGHT AND PAID FOR. (5,601 feet). Star, Jack Holt. A very well liked feature which was interesting all the way through. Film in good condition. Draw mixed class. Admission 15-25. Had full house. Jerry Wertin, Winter Theatre (250 seats), Albany, Minnesota.

CHILDREN OF JAZZ. (6,800 feet). Star, Eileen Percy. Not at all like one would infer from the title. A fine little picture, entertaining throughout, with an honest-to-goodness laugh supplied by Snitz Edwards. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

CHILDREN OF JAZZ. (6,080 feet). Star, Eileen Percy. Production is well done. Interesting and will please providing you get them in. Displays will not get them in as patrons do not demand this type of picture. Good print. Moral tone good. Suitable for Sunday. Draw better class and university students, city of 35,000. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

COWBOY AND THE LADY. (4,918 feet). Star, Mary Miles Minter. A weak program picture for us. A fairly good comedy helped save the show and also our old reliable International News helped also. Regular advertising brought fair attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

GENTLEMAN OF LEISURE. (5,695 feet). Star, Jack Holt. An entertaining picture. Much better than Holt's "Tiger Claw." Holt, as usual, is good. So are Sigrid Holmquist and Frank Nelson. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

HEART RAIDER. (5,075 feet). Star, Agnes Ayres. Good picture while it was an improbable story, it held the interest of my patrons, and pleased them all. Had fair attendance. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Not a great picture but entertaining due to the fact that it's different from the usual run of pictures. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. This is a big time production for the theatre that likes something different from the movie melodrama. It pokes fun at a little of everything including the exhibitor and the audience. Tells a smooth story that gets the sympathy of the audience. Introduces all the big time stars in a natural manner. Good business three days. Suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

How About You?

"Please find enclosed my report on "Steelheart." I have been reading a long time at the expense of my Brother Exhibitor, and this is my first to report on."—E. R. Hacker, Colonial Theatre, Gorin, Missouri.

HOLLYWOOD. (8,100 feet). Star cast. Not what it should be. Pleases fifty-fifty. They either like it or they don't like it. See it and get others' opinion before booking. Has a good story and plot and is better than the other "Star" production put out by other companies. Good print. Moral tone O. K. Suitable for Sunday. Poor attendance, city of 35,000. Draw university students and better class. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre, Champaign, Illinois.

HUMORESQUE. (5,987 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. Put this on with violinist, pianist and cello and made an excellent program and made a little money for a change. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Lindrud & Guettinger, Cochrane Theatre, Cochrane, Wisconsin.

KICK IN. (7,074 feet). Star cast. Without a doubt one of the finest pictures I have ever seen. It's a pleasure to show this kind. Business good both days. Used posters, heralds, mail. Good attendance of neighborhood patronage in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. W. E. Elkin, Temple Theatre (500 seats), Aberdeen, Mississippi.

LAW OF THE LAWLESS. (6,387 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Miss Dalton was good in this one. William Noble, Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

LOVES OF PHARAOH. (7,352 feet). Star cast. A good picture, but following on the order of "The Sheik"; too many Egyptian and desert pictures having been shown, spoils this one as a box-office money getter. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

NOBODY'S MONEY. (5,584 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Fair program picture but not one to be played during the warm weather as it does not move quickly enough to hold one's interest under this condition. Wanda Hawley appears very attractive. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle. California.

N'TH COMMANDMENT. (7,339 feet). Star, Colleen Moore. No sign of the genius that marked that other Hurst-Borzage-Cosmopolitan hit, "Humoresque" is visible in this ridiculous conglomeration. Pleased about forty per cent. Moral tone fair only. Not suitable for Sunday. Average attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

NE'ER-DO-WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. An excellent picture in every respect, and should draw well. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Star cast. Old for us but very good business with this one. One of the very finest pictures; tell me one who does not like Theodore Roberts. Just put in your program that he is the star and that is O. K. Had big attendance for hot night. Draw good class. Victor D. Stamitis, Throop Theatre, Brooklyn, New York.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star cast. To begin with, in fairness to the picture, I will say that it is entertaining, well acted, ably directed and flawlessly staged. As a rule those words would indicate that it is a decidedly superior attraction but I most emphatically do not consider it so. Here is a good picture that is likely to do inestimable damage to the small town theatre showing it. It preaches a moral that will widen the breach existing already between the church and the screen. There is not an immoral or suggestive scene or word in it, but the lesson it teaches is vicious. I am not in the least narrow, but in the smaller cities, under twenty-five thousand, we have somewhat bridged the chasm between our theatres and our churches. By strict living, ourselves, and a vigorous elimination of all vulgar, obscene and offensive matter in the pictures, we have developed a following amongst men and women who are generally called "church people." We even succeed in bringing the ministers into our houses occasionally and the habit of preaching against the picture theatre has almost disappeared. Imagine, then, what damage this picture, with its glorifying of dancing and holding up to ridicule those devout church lovers who oppose it, may do in a community where the two great Protestant churches that oppose and forbid dancing, predominate. No matter what my own opinion of dancing may be, the majority of my church going patrons oppose it. Call them narrow if you will, but I must have their patronage if I am to live. If the cause of dancing and "jazz" in general must be championed let someone in a safer refuge than the screen take up the cudgel for it. No producer has the right to use my screen to preach such a doctrine. Mr. Exhibitor in a small city, see this one before you buy it. If your patrons have no objection to seeing a dead minister's wife indulging in extreme gaiety, against the wishes of her strictly reared children, if you play to few churchgoers or if you do not care for the opinion of church going people, this picture is good, but it is dangerous in a community where the exhibitor has, by hard work and strict care, earned the friendship of the churches. E. W. Collins, Jonesboro Amusement Co., Jonesboro, Arkansas.

ON THE HIGH SEAS. (5,050 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Very good picture and received many comments on this one. Will please one hundred percent. Used ones, slide. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. F. G. Leal. Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

PINK GODS. (7,062 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Didn't think very much of this one. The pink gods were too pink. Some liked the picture and some did not. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PRIDE OF PALOMAR. (7,494 feet). Star cast. Bad title. Frightened people off, but the show itself was passable. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre, Reading, Pennsylvania.

PRODIGAL DAUGHTERS. (6,216 feet). Stars, Gloria Swanson, Theodore Roberts. Very good picture with fine cast. Modern jazz drama but suitable for Sunday. Good attendance, drawing middle and lower class of residential district in big city. Admission 15 matinee, 25 evenings. J. F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,260 seats), San Francisco, California.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,574 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. From stage play "Dear Me." Just fair picture. Business just fair. Moral tone o. k. and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw wealthy nd medium class in city of 75,000. W. H. Lusher, Strand Theatre (900 seats), Pasadena, California.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,754 feet). Star, Monte Blue. A program picture that has good points and will please the audience. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw university students and better class in city of 35,000. Admission 15-25-30. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre (610 seats), Champaign, Illinois.

RUSTLE OF SILK. (6,947 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Drew good for us, but oh my! What a panning we received from the younger element. They said too much mush. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

RUSTLE OF SILK. (6,947 feet). Star, Betty Compson. Just thought to be a so-so picture here, neither raved over it, nor did they seriously condemn it, and that's about what the writer thought also. Average entertainment, nothing more. Had fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. Just another 49'er but done big. A clever company and producer. Our audience liked it, but no one said much about it. Draw family class in town of 17,000. Admission 17-28. J. M. Blanchard, Strand Theatre (800 seats), Sunbury, Pennsylvania.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star, Jacqueline Logan. When the stage-coach galloped into the muzzle of guns and the masses of quick-trigger men; when the vigilantes were the law, and a rope and a tree brought swift justice, when the west was a world of wild adventure. That's the setting of this vivid story by the greatest of Western writers, Bret Harte. William Noble, Capitol Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

TIGER'S CLAW. (5,297 feet). Star, Jack Holt. This story is one that is out of the "beaten path" and was well received. Used usual advertising and played to splendid house. Has splendid moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had very good attendance. Draw residential class in suburban town. Admission 10-15-20. J. L. Stallman, Darby Theatre (900 seats), Darby, Pennsylvania.

TOLL GATE. Star, William S. Hart. Good western picture. Better than the usual Hart pictures of late. He does less posing and more action. Has fair moral tone. Suitable for Sunday in some places. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 400. Admission 10-35. R. N. Rounds, Scenic Theatre (140 seats), Kadoka, South Dakota.

TRAIL OF THE LONESOME PINE. (5,675 feet). Stars, Mary Miles Minter, Antonio Moreno. Good: much better than many of Paramount's specials. Ernest Torrence stands out in the role of Miss Minter's father. Had extra good attendance. Miss Minter always draws well for me. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. This picture drew very well for us. Biggest Wednesday night in months. Picture is good of its kind but is much longer than necessary. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. Paid the highest rental, used the most advertising of any picture I have played, but it has drawn the biggest crowd, and pleased them at fifty cents and twenty-five. A picture worth paying a second admission to see. Used slide, photos, heralds, windowcards, boards. Had excellent attendance. Draw farmers, summer visitors and townspeople in town of 800. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

Dave's Late Ones

APRIL SHOWERS (Preferred). Stars, Kenneth Harlan, Colleen Moore. Pleased here very much; but didn't pull. Personally, a picture that you can get back of. Nothing big—maybe a shade above program average—but it will please at regular prices and with a nice set of fillers.

ELEVENTH HOUR (Fox). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. A slam-bang melodrama of the ten-twent'-thirt' type with every known type of thrill thrown in. Pretty well produced, and if you tell your patrons just what it is you'll get no squawks. The highbrows will ridicule it—but the galleries will "eat it up." It's a good picture. They call it a special, but I'd buy this carefully; it's no "Miracle Man."

Both these reports sent by our good friend, Dave Seymour, having a patronage of health-seekers and tourists, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHEN KNIGHTHOOD WAS IN FLOWER. (11,618 feet). Star, Marion Davies. A very good picture with beautiful settings and all the things that go with the star. If you can buy this right, you can make money. Had good attendance, drawing rural class and from town of 1,100. Admission 10-30-40. E. L. Wharton, Orpheum Theatre (350 seats), Glasgow, Montana.

WHILE SATAN SLEEPS. (6,675 feet). Star, Jack Holt. Consider this one very good. Rather sad ending. Not much like the old edition of the same story with Dustin Farnum. Good moral tone, possibly suitable for Sunday. Drew good attendance of student and family classes in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

THE WHISTLE. (5,359 feet). Star, W. S. Hart. A good drama. Bill looked good in his new role, but story seemed a little too sad to please majority. Print old and badly patched up. Regular advertising gave poor attendance. Draw rural and town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

United Artists

I ACCUSE. (5,000 feet). Star cast. A real honest good picture that pleased one hundred per cent. Can be bought right. Print excellent. Patrons pleased as it was quite refreshing to break away from the usual run of pictures. Used two ones, one three, one six, one set 11x14. Had good attendance. Draw small town class. William L. Eddy, Star Theatre, Bristol, Rhode Island.

Universal

BROAD DAYLIGHT. Star cast. Just fair, but Universal sells 'em right. You don't have to take in a fortune. Used to head variety night. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class. W. Ray Erne, Rialto Theatre, Charlotte City, Michigan.

DEAD GAME. (4,819 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. The usual Hoot Gibson picture, neither good nor bad. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FLAMING HOUR. (4,508 feet). Star, Frank Mayo. Fair. Not up to Mayo's standard. Will likely please the majority, but don't expect too much. Used one three, one one, 11x14. Had good attendance. Draw rural class in town of 125. Admission 10-25. George J. Heller, Pastime Theatre (125 seats), Kanona, Kansas.

HEADIN' WEST. (4,548 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Fair. Can't hand it much, though. Moral tone O. K. Had good attendance. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 15-25. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

VICTOR. (4,880 feet). Star, Herbert Rawlinson. Played this on a Saturday night and it went well. Plenty of scrap in this and it was ideal for the night I played it. It was just the kind that the kids wanted and they didn't hesitate to make it known. Candidly a good program picture that will make good every program promise. Possibly a little inconsistent. But get it and buy it right. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

WHAT WIVES WANT. (4,745 feet). Star cast. Did not see this one but my patrons said it was below the average for Universal. Pleased about fifty per cent. Below average attendance of family (mostly labor) class in city of 80,000. Admission ten cents straight. M. F. Meade, Olive Theatre (450 seats), St. Joseph, Missouri.

Vitagraph

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE. Star cast. Fair picture. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

COURAGE OF MARGE O'DOONE. Star cast. Old but good for small town patronage. Big revival meeting going on in town but drew average business. Print in good condition and bought it reasonable. Regular advertising brought average attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

Comedies

BACK TO THE WOODS. (Christie). An excellent comedy in every respect. Scenery very beautiful also. It will please. It has many novel stunts among big pines and around lumbering camps. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

CAPTAIN KIDD'S KIDS. (Pathe). Star, Harold Lloyd. A fair picture, not up to the Lloyd standard. Advertising slants, Lloyd. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FROM HAND TO MOUTH. (Pathe). One of Lloyd's funny slapstick comedies. Reissue. A laugh every minute. Film first class. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Monarch Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

FROZEN NORTH. (First National). Keaton always goes over good here. "Frozen North" the best we have run to date. Draw small town patronage. M. T. Waugh, Empress Theatre, Grundy Center, Iowa.

IDLE CLASS. (First National-Chaplin). The usual Chaplin comedy. Couldn't make much money the day I ran this one because the comedy cost me a small fortune and after paying for feature broke about even. Wish I had run a Lloyd reissue instead. Moral tone O. K. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance of general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

LADIES MAN. (Metro). A good comedy, which although reckoned old had never been shown here, so it was as good as the latest one out. Got a good print too. Draw farmers, summer visitors, townspeople in town of 800. Admission varies, usually 10-

25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

POP TUTTLE'S LOST NERVE. (F. B. O.) Star, Dan Mason. Our first Plum Center; and give us more like it. Film in good condition. W. T. Waugh, Empress Theatre, Grundy Center, Iowa.

ROLL ALONG. (Christie). Another good comedy by Christie. Plot very funny. Blackface comedians is the cast. They did excellent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. H. J. Longaker, Howard Theatre, Alexandria, Minnesota.

SENNETT REISSUES. (Paramount). These reissues compare very favorably with many of the new comedies on the market, and are superior to any others at the same price. A brand new print is enough to make you happy, and when you have a good snappy comedy on it, everything is all to the merry. Draw townspeople and farmers in town of 800. Admission 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

SKIPPER'S LAST REPORT. (Educational). If any one laughed at this I failed to hear them. A burlesque on serial pictures and country shows. It would no doubt please the reformers that never miss an opportunity to ridicule the picture shows. Draw all classes in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. J. C. Rowton, Orpheum (300 seats), Quinton, Oklahoma.

TEN SECONDS. (Universal). The best Lee Moran we've run. Got a few laughs for us. Has fair moral tone. I ran it on Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre, Cushing, Iowa.

THOSE COLLEGE GIRLS. (Keystone). This is my first one, and was a dandy. Went big. They are reissues. The old Keystone comedies that were made years ago. If they're all as good as this one, will be satisfied. They are sure in fine shape on the screen and the price is right. Draw middle class. Admission 10-20. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

THREE MUST GET THERES. (Allied Distributors). Star, Max Linder. (3,800 feet). Some knockout also some "walkout." This is one of the latter mentioned. Moral tone "A flat." Not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

TORCHY COMEDIES. (Educational). A good comedy for adults, not so much slap stick that gets monotonous by constant repetition. Contain plenty of laughs. Draw country class and summer visitors in town of 800. Admission usually 10-25. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

TROPICAL ROMEO. (Fox). Average comedy as compared with the rest of Al's comedies. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jac Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

WHEN SUMMER COMES. (First National). Good, pleased all. All of the First National Ben Turpin two reel comedies are the best we ever ran excepting one Chaplin. Draw best class in city of 53,000. Admission 10, 25, 30. J. A. Fournoy, Criterion Theatre (569 seats), Macon, Georgia.

Missing!

What's happened to Stanley N. Chambers, R. Mason Hall, Thos. L. Haynes, Walter C. Benson—and a lot of other good friends? The exhibitors want to hear from you boys.

Serials

HAUNTED VALLEY. (Pathe). Did not draw for me. Advertising slants mystery element, star. Had poor attendance. Draw town and country class in town of 700. J. B. Carter, Electric Theatre, Browning, Missouri.

PERILS OF THE YUKON. (Universal). An excellent picture with great drawing power. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

Short Subjects

FRUITS OF FAITH. (Pathe). Got the surprise of my life with this, the first short reel program I ever tried out. Patrons just flocked in and on their way out told me to do it again. In my avertising I emphasized that it was a "Laugh Show." Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had excellent attendance. Draw residential class in town of 1,500. Admission 10-25. J. A. McGill, Liberty Theatre (250 seats), Port Orchard, Washington.

ROPED AND TIED. (Universal). Very good. Business fair. William Noble, Isis Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

STRIKE OF THE RATTLER. (Universal). The usual program picture. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

WONDERS OF THE SEA. (F. B. O.). A good educational picture without a story. Pleased about twenty-five percent of the people, if played with another feature it might be O. K., not otherwise. Suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

State Rights

CRIMSON GOLD. (Elfelt Prod.). Star cast. (5,000 feet). The usual program picture. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

DANGER TRAIL. (K. E. S. E.-Selig). Star, Violet Hemingway. (5,000 feet). Good picture and business. William Noble, Folly Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

GUN-SHY? (5,000 feet). Star, Franklyn Farnum. This is one of the best western pictures we have had in some time. Don't be afraid to book this one. Boost it to the sky. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. J. R. Long, Opera House (500 seats), Fort Payne, Alabama.

HILLS AFLAME. (Russell Prod). Star, Mary Wynn. Fair picture and business. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

JUDGMENT. (World Film Corp.). Star cast. If your patrons like old time costume pictures of the Mary, Queen of Scots time give them this. Very fine (personal opinion). Our patrons do not like this kind, except the highbrows. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

MONEY MONSTER. (Peerless). Star, Henry Victor. This picture is absolutely worthless, nothing to it. Would not advise anyone to book it, like all English pictures it's slow like a tea party. Has bad moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw all classes in town of 2,800. Admission 15-25. D. W. Strayer, Smith Theatre (250 seats), Mt. Joy, Pennsylvania.

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

WHEN it comes to completeness of a campaign to put over a picture Goldwyn must be reckoned away up in front with the leaders.

For not only does Goldwyn issue the usual advance press sheet; they go one better and, a short time after the picture has played a few first runs, issue a supplementary "yellow" sheet, in which is incorporated additional exploitation ideas, most of which have proved successful by experience before being suggested to exhibitors.

Thus the exhibitor gets both advance suggestions and the benefits of successful experience.

THE men behind the guns on Goldwyn campaigns are Howard Dietz and Eddie Bonns. To them and their staff of capable assistants goes the credit for promoting Goldwyn pictures in a highly successful way.

AS typical of the completeness of the campaign issued on every Goldwyn picture, let us consider the campaign on "Six Days."

FIRST of all, the usual advance press book is published. While it is by no means particularly remarkable as such, it more than holds its place with the best of them, and contains a wealth of good stuff.

The keynote of the entire campaign is the "kiss." This is a darn good sales angle for this particular picture, and it has been carried out in almost every newspaper ad, poster, etc. Of course, the thrill angle has not been forgotten, nor has the straight drama of the plot been overlooked.

THE front cover of the advance press book is an exact-size reproduction of the window card. As explained in a type note, the window card itself is lithographed in four colors. This idea is good, and we believe it to be original with Goldwyn.

The inside front cover of the advance press book contains two-color reproductions of the posters, all of which accentuate the "kiss" idea.

Next follows a page containing the story of the play and pictures of the cast, together with a sales message to the exhibitor.

The newspaper ads are many and varied, most of them being so designed that they are elastic enough to permit of decreasing or increasing their size. Then too, the pictorial parts of the ads are such that the illustration can be reproduced in any size desired. The entire line of newspaper ads is so laid out that the exhibitor who knows even a little bit about engraving can make up his own ads from the illustration and copy contained therein.

The publicity stories are of the usual calibre, and are printed on pages with blank backs, making them handy to clip. It is worth mentioning that the Reproduction of front cover of advance press sheet. Original is an exact-size reproduction of window card, which idea kills two birds with one stone. Cover itself can be used for display purposes.

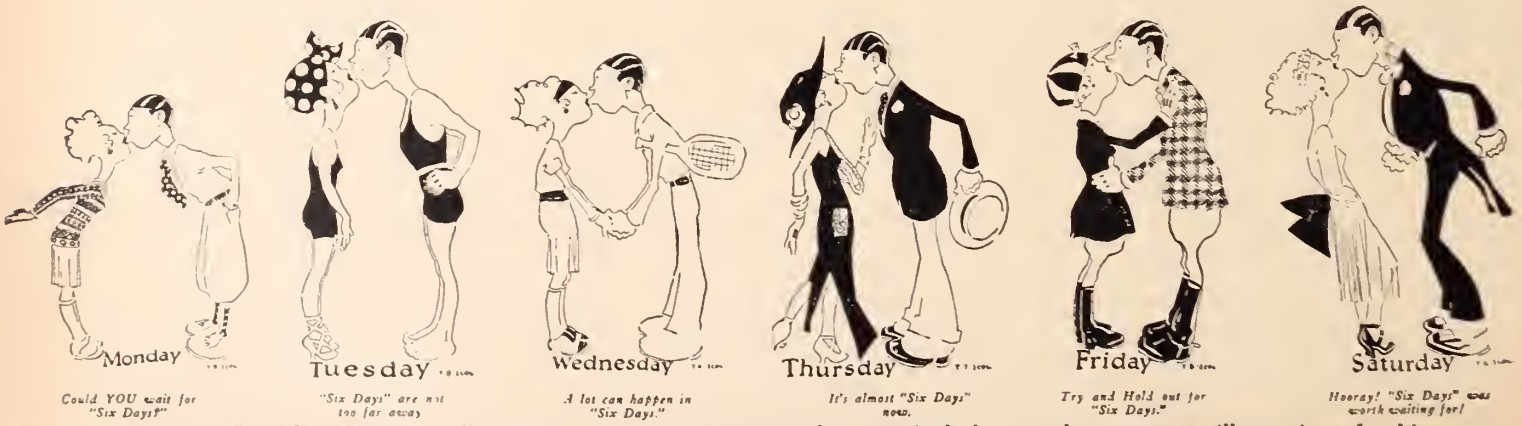
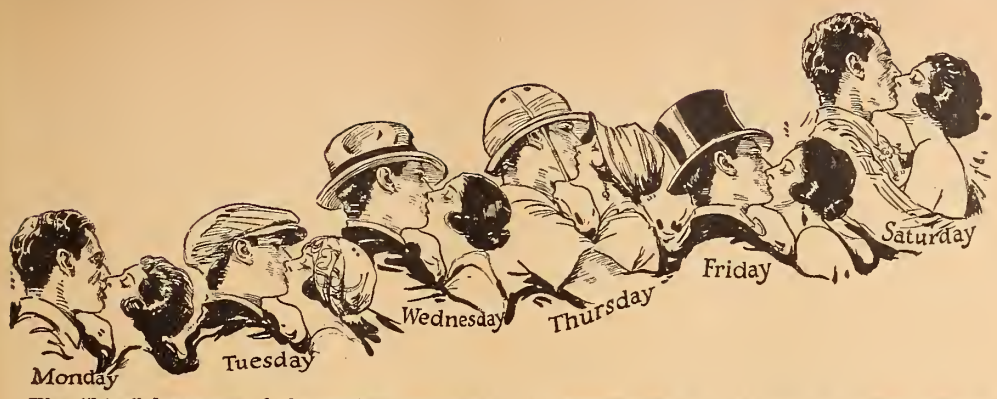
One of the stunts in the supplement. $6.00 first prize and passes given contestants who write greatest number of 6's inside the figure six. Inexpensive, simple, effective.



Set of attractive teaser ads drawn by John Held, Jr. They lend themselves particularly to enlargement as illustrations for bigger-space ads. Good stuff.



The "kiss" keynote of the entire campaign. A selling idea carried out in almost every piece of promotion. Just the sort of angle to put an Elinor Glyn story over properly.

publicity cuts have no hand-lettered captions—merely type captions that can be changed or deleted by newspapers at will, without the trouble of sawing or cutting a plate.

Exploitation ideas are fairly plentiful in the advance sheet, which also contains two-color reproductions of the lobby displays, herald, slide, etc. A few stills from the trailer also are shown.

All in all, the advance press sheet is a representative one, and the exhibitor who runs the picture before the "yellow" supplement has been issued has more than enough material with which to work.

THE "yellow" supplement is the exploitation compendium par excellence. Its sixty-odd mimeographed pages contain just about as much seat-selling information as it is possible to crowd into that much space. Its early pages sum up the success the picture already has attained, and the following pages show why—and HOW.

In showman's language it helps the exhibitor understand what he has to sell. For instance, one sub-head right-ly states: "Love Theme Your Biggest Bet," and continues: 'Six Days' is saturated with powerful 'love' situations." Build up your campaign on that basis, because when your patrons see your advertising containing Elinor Glyn's name along with a peppy love story you have an unbeatable promotion asset."

There may be exhibitors who disagree with the foregoing but we are inclined to the belief that it is true in the majority of cases.

WITH each "yellow" sheet is a sample of the two-color herald, as well as samples of almost every other piece of printed matter that it is suggested be used. A fashion show is suggested, and a sample layout given of what should be an effective throw-away on "How to Win a Husband in 'Six Days.'"

An especially good idea, we believe, is the plan of reproducing the newspaper ads. used during the run of the picture at the Capitol Theatre, New York. As explained in the supplement, the cuts in these ads. were made from illustrations in the advance sheet, and any exhibitor who desires can duplicate them at his local engraver's.

WHILE space limitations prohibit a detailed description of every exploitation idea contained in the supplement, we want to register the opinion that just about every inch of ground has been covered. Merchant tie-ups are explained; a large sheet contains a variety of cuts in differing styles and sizes which may be used in co-operative merchant advertising in almost any size newspaper space; the pages show how to conduct various inexpensive and effective contests, and a host of other things.

No exhibitor in the world could be expected to go in for every stunt suggested, but any exhibitor in the world should be able to gather, from the pages of the advance press book and the "yellow" supplement, more than enough ideas and aids to suit his own particular needs.

IN comprehensiveness the campaign on "Six Days" is the same as that evolved on every Goldwyn release.

Other companies from time to time have issued ultra-comprehensive press sheets on particular pictures, but no other company than Goldwyn, to our knowledge, issues an advance press sheet and a supplementary sheet on every release.

We believe it to be an excellent idea, and one that might profitably be put into operation by others, especially on special productions whose life is fairly long. We feel certain that results would more than compensate for the time, trouble and comparatively slight expense involved.

"His Children's Children"

Many Well-Known Players in Paramount's Screen Version of Popular Novel by Arthur Train

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Arthur Train's widely read novel of great wealth and its unhappy effect on a family in high society has been used as a basis for the Paramount production, "His Children's Children." The picture is elaborately mounted in keeping with the financial status of the leading characters and it is portrayed by a cast of well- nown players.

With all the resources at his command, however, Director Sam Wood has produced a picture which never reaches any great heights of drama and in fact only partially succeeds in holding the interest of the average spectator. Apparently there was a big idea behind the novel, that of the baneful influence of the great wealth of old Peter Kayne not only on his son but on his son's three children, but this idea is not clearly brought out in the screen version.

It would seem as if the director tried to do too much with the limited footage at his command. The story demanded that not only should the career of the old man and his fifty-five-year-old son be followed but also the career of each of the three daughters which lead along a different pathway. In doing this there is a wealth of detail in seeking to bring out each character with a resulting overplus of incident and a consequent lack of dramatic force. This is enhanced by the fact that in the constant switching from the career of one principal to another and back again the continuity is broken and the effect of the central theme weakened.

The story is told more as a narrative than as drama. It is in reality a character study of several divergent types and the effect of wealth on each, and while the individual character drawings are well done there is a lack of cohesion in dovetailing them. In bringing out the author's idea there is a noticeable restraint and endeavor to get away from situations that with little twists could easily have been made melodramatic. There is also considerable moralizing. The climax of the story is the most dramatic scene, but its effect is largely psychological, for the picture ends not with the old man saving his son from ruin, as many will expect, but in having the old gentleman as he falls dead tear from the walls a tapestry revealing the motto which seems to be the keynote of the story, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

The large cast all acquit themselves creditably with the limited opportunities at their command. The burden of the story falls upon Hale Hamilton as the father and George Fawcett as the grandfather. Both give good performances, especially Fawcett. Bebe Daniels has the leading feminine role and does satisfactory work in a role for the most part quite different from her usual type and in which she had little chance for effective scenes. The same is true of Dorothy Mackaill, James Rennie and several of the others.

The nature of the plot brings out the unpleasant sides of each member of the Kayne family and their weaknesses, which while entirely plausible, have the effect of not producing any intense sympathy for them. It is not a happy nor an ideal family that is dissected in this instance and several disagreeable facts about them are brought out. As a result, while the picture will probably appeal to those who have read the novel, it seems to be lacking in the elements that go to make up satisfactory entertainment for the majority of patrons.

Story

Rufus Kayne on his fifty-fifth birthday receives from his father Peter the old man's check for his last $100,000. Peter was a forceful old chap with aggressive methods and was known as the Old Pirate. He was never reached in society, but Rufus gained this goal and was known for his eminent respectability. He was president of a big trust company. Rufus at his birthday feast noted the absence of his three children. Diana was away with a duck-shooting party, Claudia was unhappily married to an Englishman and Sheile was with a jazz party. Rufus, feeling the emptiness of it all, allows himself to become infatuated with a chorus girl, Mercedes, and backs a questionable theatrical venture which fails. He is unable to prosecute his associates because of a threat of blackmail and shoulders the burden, bringing ruin on himself. Diana has recognized the error of her way and finds happiness in rescuing Sheila from her questionable habits and associates and eventually agrees to marry Maitland, an idealistic young attorney, who has helped her. While old Rufus is ill from a breakdown, the Kayne house and contents is sold. Rufus, coming down stairs, finds out what is happening and falls dead, tearing from the walls a tapestry revealing the legend, "Except the Lord build the house, they labor in vain that build it."

"Let's Go"

Richard Talmadge's First Truart Picture Offers Light, Peppy Entertainment

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Truart's first production for Richard Talmadge is a light comedy drama with plenty of action and a good cast. It is slightly more pretentious than the star's previous vehicles. The leading role is more flattering to him, and the general quality of the production and style of performance has more prestige.

It should help to establish a more definite impression of Richard Talmadge's distinct place as an entertainer. His physical agility is exploited in many amusing and spectacular feats and those who are anticipating his stunts will not be disappointed. He makes many daring leaps and does some hazardous climbing all with his usual speed and pep. He excites interest at the start by jumping into a car from a third story window and in numerous pursuits, hops from one roof to another and supplies various thrills that add to the suspense of the story.

Aside from this angle, the plot is fairly amusing and dramatic. George Nichols, with his usual skill depicts a new type of character for him—a kind-hearted village marshal who can't bear to put persons in jail and is always giving them another chance. Eileen Percy makes her small part effective and Al Fremont supplies some more comedy. On the whole there is a good vein of humor, interesting physical action, and enough suspense to hold the attention of the average fan. "Let's Go" has been smartly titled by Ralph Spence and should be a satisfying program feature.

Story

Barry Macklin eludes the speed cops and arrives in Hillsboro, where he is to straighten out his father's deal with the mayor, Ezra Sprowl. A tramp who has stolen Barry's clothes shows up, but Barry makes friends with him and gets him to attempt robbing a safe so as to enable the town marshal to arrest some one and thus hold his job. The tramp agrees and obtains some evidence that incriminates the mayor. Meanwhile real thieves appear, and Barry, after an excited chase, trails them and hands them over to the town marshal who is nominated for the new mayor. Barry marries his daughter and straightens things out.

F. B. O. Release Is Melodrama With Familiar Complications, Featuring Carmel Myers

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

A story of various complications, with a more or less sensational intent follows a familiar pattern in this F. B. O. release. It relies upon a certain amount of intrigue regarding a notorious cafe owner who attempts to double-cross the district attorney's deputy. An infatuation with a totally unsophisticated girl is introduced and makes the usual appeal.

There is little novelty either in the theme or the treatment. But where pictures with cafe life to supply a glamor and an innocent heroine as the object of foul design to supply the excitement are popular entertainment, there should be an opening for this attraction. With an audience of discernment, however, the picture will hardly be satisfactory. It is not sufficiently strong either in fundamental or in audience appeal and while some of the individual performances are pleasing, the cast on the whole does not have a chance to distinguish itself.

Kathryn McGuire is pretty and appealing in a strictly conventional part. Carmel Myers brightens a few of the scenes, as the dancer who is in love with the cafe owner and adds to the suspense when she unexpectedly appears on the scene when he is murdered. Spottiswoode Aitken has a melodramatic part, almost entirely lacking realism. In some of the smaller theatres melodramatic features of this type have proved fairly successful and where patrons are not too demanding it will probably prove satisfactory.

Story

Steve Carnan is the secret proprietor of a notorious cafe which is being investigated by Hugh Waring, deputy to the district attorney. Waring is baffled and goes to Carnan's wife for advice. Carnan finds him with his wife and threatens to use this evidence against Waring if he makes trouble. Waring falls in love with Ruth Revere, a pretty musician, whom Carnan is pursuing. "David Copperfield"

Associated Exhibitors Release Scandinavian Picturization of Great Dickens Novel
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

To the many admirers of Charles Dickens the filming of one of his most famous novels will doubtless be an extraordinarily interesting event. It has been accomplished by the Nordisk Film Corporation with results that deserve great praise, and is being released by Associated Exhibitors. It is fine entertainment of an uncommon variety.

Its drawing power should not be limited to those who have read the book, although that should include a large class of patrons. Particularly in the first part the picture has great human appeal. This is mostly because of the performance of Buddy Martin, who plays David Copperfield as a boy. He is an unusual actor with a combination of strength and sensitiveness and marked personal appeal.

Some of his scenes will bring an acute sympathy which in the incident of his being beaten by Murdstone, mounts almost to agony. While this is a truthful touch and in no sense an exaggeration of anything in the book, it would be less distressing to the majority if it were less drawn out.

The picture is necessarily more sketchy than the book. It records the most important incidents with a sentiment that recalls the author's gifts for comedy and pathos many times. His flair for characterization is represented in at least one or two marked performances.

Frederik Jensen as Micawber is the typical conception of a Dickensian character. His performance is an indispensable asset. Bland, pompous, affectionate, penniless, he is a delightfully entertaining impersonation of the famous character who was ever "waiting for something to turn up." Uriah Heep with his hypocritical smile is well portrayed by Rasmus Christiansen. The other famous figures, Aunt Betsey Trotwood, David's pretty mother, his nurse Peggotty, Dora and Agnes will be found and suggest to a pleasing degree the originals of the book.

"David Copperfield," as most of the fans know, does not abound in intensely dramatic or spectacular situations. But the picture, like the book, has a distinctive appeal. With its human interest, bits of pathos, numerous chuckles and faithful backgrounds, it has very good entertainment value.

Based upon novel by Charles Dickens.
Scenario by Lauris Skands.
Direction by A. W. Sandberg.
Length, 6,282 feet.

Story

After David Copperfield's father dies, his happiness is disturbed by Mr. Murdstone, who marries David's mother, and by his cruel discipline kills her and banishes David. He walks for miles, arriving at his Aunt Betsey Trotwood's home, where he is protected. He goes away to school, falls in love and marries after an idyllic romance. His young wife dies soon after and Agnes, the girl whom he had known through school days, is his only comfort. Her father's fortune has been practically stolen by Uriah Heep, who is eventually arrested. David and Agnes are happily married.

"April Showers"

Preferred Picture with Kenneth Harlan and Colleen Moore Has Familiar Material with Some New Twists
Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Preferred Pictures Corporation's newest feature, "April Showers," is the story of a young chap whose father was a policeman and was killed in the performance of duty and it is the ambition of the lad and his mother to have him also join the force. The boy's sweetheart is the daughter of the police lieutenant, so it will be seen that the theme centers with these guardians of the peace. It is not, however, a melodrama in which the adventures of the police are played up, in fact this angle is entirely absent. The action deals entirely with the home life of this body of men as centered in their children.

The action of the picture follows largely along familiar lines and there is very little new material; however, the story is pleasingly told and should prove satisfactory for the average patron, particularly in the neighborhood houses, despite the fact that there are points in the direction that could be criticised and there is a tendency to overdo some of the character work to the extent that it does not ring true. Also the manner in which the happy ending is brought about by having one of the officials explain that an error was made in rating the hero's papers in his test to join the force is rather weak.

On the other hand, there is considerable human interest and not a little humor in the development of the romance between the Irish hero and his Irish sweetheart, in their little disagreements which probably give rise to the title which does not seem to be entirely appropriate, and in the scenes where the boy enters the prize ring to get money to save his sister from jail for shoplifting. A novel angle in this connection is the fact that the hero does not win but is soundly beaten, considerable interest is also aroused in the fight which starts off as a frame-up but develops into an honest-to-goodness scrap when the hero tells the crowd that it has been arranged for his opponent to be knocked out in a certain round, and it is decided to let the fight proceed anyway.

Kenneth Harlan is well cast as the hero and Colleen Moore is wistful and effective in a role that suits her personality as his sweetheart. Ruth Clifford gives a good performance in a rather unsympathetic role as a society girl whose settlement work is resented by those she seeks to help, and the remainder of the cast is entirely satisfactory.

Danny O'Rourke was the son of Big Tim, a fighting cop, who dies in performance of duty, and Danny's mother looked forward to the day when he should join the force. In the flat across the narrow court lived Maggie Muldoon, whose father was a police lieutenant, and Danny and Maggy were sweethearts who continually had their lover's quarrels. Miriam, a society girl, came into the district where the families lived and for a time it looked as if she would break up the match, but about this time Danny's sister Shannon was caught shoplifting and Danny failed in his examination for the force. To save his sister, Danny took up prize fighting, but in a bout with the champion he was soundly licked. All looked black, but Maggie stood by him and the April showers were dissipated when it developed that there was a mistake in rating Danny's papers and that he had a last realized his cherished ambition of becoming a cop.

"The Way Men Love"

Elliott Dexter Feature for Grand-Ascher Is Entertaining and Deeply Stirring
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Surprisingly different from what the title suggests, this Grand-Ascher production has a deeply religious theme—treated, however, in distinctly box-office style. It should have a tremendous spiritual and emotional appeal.

As applied here, the title seems to refer to the contrast between "sacred and profane love." The beauty and power of the one and the ugliness of the other are exemplified in two men, vividly portrayed by Elliott Dexter and Anders Randolf. This theme lends itself to an elaborate production with many angles of interest, of intense sympathetic appeal and a number of dramatic and spectacular effects.

It includes a marvelously realistic train wreck. The details in producing the suspense here, the lighting and the crash itself prove a powerful combination in creating a thrilling effect. The burning of the mission house is another big scene but with a different appeal. The chief significance in this is the destruction of a monument to good deeds, the stirring of sympathy for the immigrants left without aid, and the paramount detail of the sign "Faith" being unscarred by the flames. This last really strikes the keynote of the picture.

The climax comes when the child of the man who has been perpetrating all these wrongs on the innocent falls from a second story balcony and is crippled. At this very

IN THE INDEPENDENT FIELD

New Independent Omaha Exchange

Simultaneously with the announcement of the formation of a new independent distributing unit in Omaha, which will operate under the title of Columbia Pictures Film Exchange and distribute in Iowa and Nebraska, comes the announcement that the new exchange has acquired the entire output of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation.

Julius Singer, who promoted the venture, has been placed in charge of Columbia, with head offices in Omaha.

The first pictures to be released by the Columbia Pictures Film Exchange of Omaha will be "Forgive and Forget," "Temptation," "Her Accidental Husband" and "The Barefoot Boy," which will be followed by "Yesterday's Wife," "Pal o' Mine," "Traffic in Hearts," "Passionate Friends" and "The Lamp in the Desert."

Talmadge Starts on Second

Richard Talmadge has started on his second production for Truart release, being made by Carlos Productions. It is a swift-moving story of an entirely different type from any in which the star has previously appeared.

The picture, the title of which has not yet been announced, will be made under the direction of Henry Lehrman.

Export and Import Buy Another

Export & Import Film Company, Inc., have just closed a contract with Mammoth Pictures whereby they take over the entire world rights, with the exception of United States and Canada, to special feature production, "Enemies of Children."

"Enemies of Children" is a screen adaptation of George Gibbs's novel, "Youth Triumphant." Anna Q. Nilsson heads the all-star cast in this Fisher production.

Changes Title

Monogram Pictures Corporation advises change of title of the second picture of the Fred Thomson series from "Shadows of the Sage" to "North of Nevada." This conclusion being reached because of the pressure brought to bear from the plainsmen and citizens of the Nevada country where the picture was actually filmed and Thomson finally gained the consent of Andrew J. Callaghan, president of Monogram, to make the change. The story as well as the locale is all Nevada and these facts coupled with Fred Thomson's love of that country and the wonderful hospitality of the people, came to the point of issue that brought demand for the change rather than a request.

Brandt Says Exhibitor Methods Hurt Industry

Now that the dust of the first house-cleaning operation is settling, and the broom is swinging on its clean sweep, some of the other cobwebs of the business, aside from high production cost, must, in the opinion of Joe Brandt, of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation, be removed before the industry can really say its house is in order.

The outstanding feature that seems to require immediate attention, says Mr. Brandt, is an attempt on the part of exhibitors throughout the country to use what Mr. Brandt terms the "underground" booking system, which, he says, is now prevalent. This is not combination booking, Mr. Brandt states, but attempts of exhibitors to combine against paying a fair price for productions, and, by such combinations, to force producers to sell their product at a heavy loss or do without selling it at all.

C. C. Burr Studio Is Maintaining Schedule

Though a number of motion picture studios are closing down for a period of readjustment, no such shutdown is contemplated, nor needed, at C. C. Burr's Glendale studio on Long Island, it is stated.

"I applaud the action of those producers who have called a needed halt in their abnormal expenditures in production so that they may readjust," declared Mr. Burr in discussing the widespread retrenchment in film production. "However, I am glad to say that our production schedule will be maintained just as we mapped it out in announcing our season's product. We are able to keep our cameras grinding because we work on a more conservative basis than some other producers. We keep our costs within a margin that permits us to make good pictures at a fair profit to the exchanges, the exhibitors, and ourselves."

Truart Purchasing Stories for Films

Truart Film Corporation, as announced sometime ago by M. H. Hoffman, vice president, will offer during the 1923-24 season no less than 18 productions, including five Elaine Hammerstein productions, three Larry Semon productions, four with Richard Talmadge, "The Unknown Purple," and one other from Carlos Productions, two Roland West Productions of the all-star-successful-stage-play variety, and two or three with another internationally famous star who cannot yet be announced.

Both the eastern and western editorial departments, under the direction of Arthur Hoerl in New York, are co-operating in the selection of vehicles for Truart's 1923-24 output. Already it is reported that no less than six have been decided upon besides those already completed and in production, although it is understood no announcements will be made until the entire lineup of plays and stories is complete.

A famous best-seller by an English author and three successful New York stage plays are among those purchased. Among those already announced are "Broadway Gold," "The Drums of Jeopardy," "The Unknown Purple," "The Girl in the Limoussine," besides "Let's Go!," "To Live or Die" and "Stepping Lively," three thrill-novels for Richard Talmadge. A recent Broadway-stage success will probably be Talmadge's fourth vehicle.

Grey Now Back at His Office

Schuyler E. Grey, president of Motion Picture Arts, Inc., 25 West 45th street, New York, is back at his desk this week after ten days' absence on the casualty list. Mr. Grey fell from the stage of the Weequahic Theatre, Newark, N. J., a house in which he is a partner, a fortnight ago, and injured his knee so badly that he has since been confined to his home with his leg in a plaster cast.

His accident makes the second casualty among Motion Picture Arts officials within the past two weeks, the other being Director John L. McCutcheon, who seriously injured his back by a fall from an apple tree on the grounds of his country place at Pleasantville, N. Y., nearly three weeks ago. McCutcheon is still confined to the hospital.

"Boden's Boy" Soon for Release

"Boden's Boy," from the story by the late Tom Gallon, has just been completed by Hepworth and will be released shortly.

Henry Edwards, in addition to directing this production, appears in the character of Boden, and other well known players who assist him include Chrissie White, Henry Vibart, Francis Lister, Stephen Ewart and Judd Green.

R. Talmadge Film Is Booked by U. B. O.

The most important booking which has yet been accorded Richard Talmadge was that by which the United Booking Offices obtained his first Truart production, "Let's Go!" for showing over its entire circuit of theatres in New York and vicinity. The picture is a first of a series being made by Carlos productions for Truart Film release by franchise on the independent market.

Bryant's Wife Picks 'Em

Mabel Forrest, in private life Mrs. Washburn, announces that she is now reading a scenario of Crosby George called "Why Pick On Me?" which will probably be used for Bryant Washburn's next feature for the Grand-Asher Distributing Corporation.

Ever since Washburn's early days with Essanay, before he went to Lasky on the Coast, Mrs. Washburn has chosen his plays.

Washburn Sees Preview

Bryant Washburn arrived in New York City on Monday from Boston, where he was staying with some Grand-Asher officials.

The reason for his return was to see a private preview of his first feature for Grand-Asher entitled "Try and Get It," in which he is supported by a cast composed of Billie Dove, Edward Horton, Joseph Kilgour and Lionel Belmore. The cutting and titling of "Try and Get It" has just been completed.

Aronson Visiting in Paris

A. S. Aronson, general manager of sales for Truart Film Corporation, has left London and will make his headquarters in Paris for a few weeks, while he is arranging the distribution of the Truart product on the continent. Mr. Aronson has successfully negotiated for the release of Truart pictures in the United Kingdom.

He will return to New York late in November, coming via London, where tentative plans have already been made for premiere showings of the most important of the Truart product

New Sales for Artclass

Max Weiss, vice-president and general manager of Artclass Pictures Corporation, announces the sale of the eighteen single reel classics, "Tense Moments from Famous Plays and Great Authors," to Lande Film Corporation, for Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia, and to Creole Enterprises for Louisiana and Mississippi.

J. Horne Finishes Another Picture

James Horne, who directed "Itching Palms," "Blow Your Own Horn" and "Alimony" for F. B. O., has just completed filming "The Yankee Consul" with Doug MacLean. Horne was lent to MacLean by F. B. O.

Sold for Indiana

This week the sale of the Indiana rights on the new series of C. C. Burr productions to Floyd Brown of the H. Lieber Company, Indianapolis, was reported by Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution of Mastodon Films, Inc. The pictures included in the sale are "Restless Wives," "Youth to Sell," "The Average Woman," and "Lend Me Your Husband."

Runs Two Weeks

For the first time in its history the exclusive Fenway Theatre in Boston has run a motion picture for more than two weeks. This happened during the engagement of the William Fox screen version of "If Winter Comes."

Title Changed

Frederick and Fanny Hatton's story for Shirley Mason has had its title changed from "With the Tide" to "South Sea Love." It is a William Fox production, and will be directed by David Solomon.

"Yolanda" Is Retitled

"Yolanda," Charles Major's story which the Cosmopolitan Corporation is now making with Marion Davies as star, will be presented on the screen under the title of "Mary of Burgundy."

This change from "Yolanda" to "Mary of Burgundy" is due, according to the Cosmopolitan Corporation, to the fact that the latter title is more appropriate to the location and historical action of the picture.

"Innocence" Finished

Word was received from Harry Cohn, producer of C. B. C. productions that "Innocence" in which Anna Q. Nilsson and Earl Foxe are playing the leads, has been finished and a pre-view at one of the Hollywood Theatres has been arranged. The cast also includes Wilfred Lucas, Marion Harlan, William Scott, Kate Lester, Freeman Wood, Jesie Arnold and Vera Lewis.

Legrand's "Bill" Will Go Through Red Seal

In line with the recently announced plan of the Red Seal Pictures Corp., to supply exchanges and public with unusual and distinctive pictures, Edwin Miles Fadman, president, announces that he has just closed a contract with the Legrand Films giving the Red Seal the distribution rights to the five-reel picture entitled, "Bill." This is the same picture which recently created such a sensation at the Rialto Theatre on Broadway that the New York Times, in an article October 14, named it as one of the two best pictures of the year.

It is expected that the picture will be ready for release via the state-right market in about two weeks. A book tie-up has already been arranged with Dodd Mead & Company, publishers of the novel by Anatol France, from which the picture was taken.

Thinks Brown Product Good Independent Bet

"I am more thoroughly convinced than ever that the Harry J. Brown Productions, starring Fred Thomson, will meet the full expectations of all state-rights buyers and all exhibitors as well," remarked Andrew J. Callaghan, after screening the first picture of the series of six, "The Mask of Lopez."

The cast also includes: Wilfred Lucas, Hazel Keener, David Kirby, Frank Hagney, George Magrill, Dot Farley, Dick Sutherland, Pee Wee Holmes, Bob Reeves and the horse, Silver King.

"The one great, big point that is of interest to all state-right buyers is the cost to them of this series. We are handing out quality plus reasonableness in cost," concludes Callaghan.

Red Seal to Distribute All Inkwell Comedies

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of the Red Seal Pictures Corporation, 1600 Broadway, announces that he has closed a deal for his company whereby the Red Seal obtains the United States, Canadian and foreign distribution rights to the popular "Out-of-the-Inkwell Comedies."

Negotiations between Out-of-the-Inkwell Films Inc., producers of these comedies, and Fadman's organization, have been going on for several months, but it was not until this last week that the final get-together was accomplished.

The Red Seal announces that it will continue to distribute the 1924 and succeeding series of these famous animated comedies in the same way they have been distributed in the past, via the state right market. This is the second big distribution deal closed by the Red Seal within the week, their previous announcement having carried the news that they had closed for the national distribution of "Bill," the five reel feature.

Providence Likes "Unknown Purple"

The world's premier engagement of "The Unknown Purple," the Truart Production, with Henry B. Walthall and Alice Lake, at the Strand Theatre, Providence, R. I., proved a sensational success. Shortly after the opening days Manager Edward Reed of the Strand wired M. H. Hoffman, vice-president of Truart as follows:

"'Unknown Purple' opened today with capacity business. The picture has caused positive sensation. Audiences were held spellbound by its gripping mystery and said so. You have sure-fire, exploitable box-office attraction if ever there was one. It backs up anything you say about it because it is honestly different."

Manager Reed went out after patronage on "The Unknown Purple," using mainly his newspapers, with specially prepared advertisement all using fairly large space. In addition to concentrating upon the dailies, 50,000 pieces of literature were distributed. In all the exploitation the theme of it was keyed about the phrase: "What would you do if you could make yourself invisible?"

Manager Reed also tied up the repeated brea ing of windows in the business section of Providence which proved to be a mystery to the city officials. In big headlines the theatre's advertisements asked: "Who is the mysterious window smasher?"

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

Agnes Ayres in Leading Role

The popular Paramount star, Agnes Ayres, is to play the lead in "Souvenir," Halperin Productions' second big feature for Associated Exhibitors distribution, special arrangements having been made with Jesse L. Lasky. Miss Ayres, recognized as one of the most beautiful and talented of screen stars, achieved a marked success in "The Sheik," with Valentino; "Raving Hearts," "The Love Special," "The Heart-Raider" and many other big photoplays.

Exploitation Matter For Vitagraph Film

The accessories prepared for the exploitation of "The Man from Brodney's" by Vitagraph includes a four page rotogravure section showing action stills and portraits of this forthcoming David Smith production.

The portrait stills of J. Warren Kerrigan, Alice Calhoun, Miss Du Pont, Wanda Hawley and Pat O'Malley, as well as scenes from the hand to hand battle between the Orientals and the whites in the chateau are particularly attractive.

Warner Film Making Big Success

According to reports from the Franklin Film Company in Boston, franchise holders for the Warner Brothers throughout the New England territory, the Warner classic, "Where the North Begins," starring the police dog hero, Rin-tin-tin, is meeting with great success everywhere that it is being shown. Indications from all other sections also are proving that the Warners have a big box office winner in the dog picture.

Hodkinson Prepares New Press-Book

In accordance with its policy to make accessories of the greatest possible aid to the exhibitor, the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an unusually helpful press book for its desert picture "Shifting Sands."

Instead of having a separate exploitation sheet, a press sheet and a press book, they are all incorporated under one cover.

Tully Signs Nilsson

Richard Walton Tully has engaged Anna Q. Nilsson to play the part of the heroine of Rex Beach's novel, "Flowing Gold." This is his forthcoming screen production of that story which he will film for First National.

"The Acquittal" a Big Success in Chicago

"The Acquittal," Universal's Super Jewel production of Rita Weiman's celebrated mystery play, had its world's premiere last Sunday in the palatial Chicago Theatre, Chicago. It was hailed as one of the greatest pictures ever made, Universal states, and heralded as one of the biggest successes of the year.

The Chicago is the big first run show house of the Balaban & Katz interests, the first-run franchise holders for First National pictures in Chicago.

"The Acquittal" will be shown in two other Balaban & Katz houses following its week's run in the Chicago Theatre. The newspaper reviewers present in the Chicago Theatre paid unbounded tribute to the high qualities of the production, as well as to the excellent acting of Claire Windsor and Norman Kerry, the principal figures in the cast. The production was directed by Clarence L. Brown.

Saenger Gets Quota of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan

The Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans has booked the full list of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases for the current season for its entire circuit of theatres in New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi. The contract was signed by Messrs. Dureau and Gueringer for the Saenger Amusement Company on their recent trip to New York. J. R. Grainger and Sam Eckman, Jr., acted for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan in closing the deal.

The full list of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases will be shown at the new theatre just being completed in Long Beach, Cal. Its opening attraction will be Marion Davies in her new Cosmopolitan picture, "Little Old New York."

All of the current Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases have been booked by the Nathanson Strand and Amusement Co., which controls the Strand and the Modern theatres in Providence, R. I.

Mary Pickford Film Makes Hit in Chicago

That Mary Pickford's "Rosita," the United Artists release, pleased both Chicago public and critics when it opened at the Orpheum Theatre, is evidenced by the Jones, Linick and Schaefer announcement of the biggest opening business in the history of the house, and the tenor of the newspaper reviews.

The exhibitor announcement concerning "Rosita" from a box-office viewpoint came in the form of a telegram from Jones, Linick and Schaefer to Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists. The message read: "Mary Pickford in 'Rosita' opened at the Orpheum Theatre November 3 to the largest business in the history of the theatre. As the Orpheum has been in existence for seventeen years, this is an achievement of which Miss Pickford can be justly proud."

As for the critics and their reviews, the following excerpts tell the story: "Put 'Rosita' among the year's best pictures," said the Tribune. "'Rosita' is eight reels of golden entertainment," said the Evening American. "There is everything pictorial about 'Rosita,' something vast, and in that vastness something inspiring," wrote the Journal.

Completes Filming of "Flaming Barriers"

George Melford has just completed the filming of his latest Paramount production, "Flaming Barriers," most of which was made on location near Sonora and in the mountainous district of Tuolumne County in Northern California.

"Flaming Barriers" was written for the screen by Byron Morgan, author of the Wallace Reid automobile stories, who watched its production on location. Jacqueline Logan, Antonio Moreno, Walter Hiers and Charles Ogle are featured, with Luke Cosgrave and Robert McKim prominent in the support.

First National Foreign Sales

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., reports the following foreign sales: "Circus Days" to the Madan Theatres, Ltd., for India, Burma and Ceylon; "Trouble" and "Peck's Bad Boy" to Karl Suering, for Soviet Russia and Border States; seventeen Mack Sennett comedies to Johan Kerre, for Soviet Russia and Border States; "The Girl in the Taxi" to Albion Cinema Supplies Co., Ltd., for Austria-Hungary, Czecho-Slovakia, Poland, Yugo-Slavia, Bulgaria, Roumania, Turkey and European Greece.

Cutting "Drums of Jeopardy"

"The Drums of Jeopardy," Elaine Hammerstein's second production of her series for Truart Film Corporation, is completed and being cut and titled. This is the second offering of the series of Truart Productions which have already been franchised to independent exchanges throughout the country. The third has already been decided upon and work of casting has been begun. "The Drums of Jeopardy" will be released about December 1. It was adapted from the novel of the same name by Harold MacGrath, which also appeared serially in the Saturday Evening Post. Arrangements are under way for a photoplay edition of the novel which will be released concurrently with the release of the motion picture.

"Green Goddess" in Chicago

Distinctive's "The Green Goddess" has been booked for the Chicago Theatre, Chicago, beginning Monday, November 19. This photoplay, starring George Arliss, will be seen at the Royal Theatre, Kansas City, on November 11. It will play the Capitol Theatre, Cincinnati, on November 25.

"The Green Goddess" did so well at the Merill Theatre in Milwaukee that it was held over for half a week. The play has also just finished a successful double engagement at the Modern and Beacon Theatres in Boston.

Ray L. Hall Returns to Kinograms

Ray L. Hall, one of the organizers of Kinograms and for three years its managing editor has returned to the staff as Associate Editor, after an absence of two years in other moving picture activities.

New Universal Star

A new star was added to the group of popular Universal stars during Carl Laemmle's sojourn at Universal City. She is Laura La Plante for many months one of the most popular leading women in Universal pictures and who has supported Roy Stewart, William Desmond and Hoot Gibson in many of their most successful pictures.

Miss LaPlante is taking the place of Gladys Walton on Universal's release schedule. Miss Walton has retired temporarily from the screen.

Hal Roach to Amplify Pathe's Feature Production Activities

An announcement this week from the Pathe Home Office to the effect that Hal Roach will produce for distribution by Pathe a feature-length comedy drama heralds the further expansion of Pathe's feature-production activities. The heavy production schedule already decided upon for the one and two reel comedy output at the Hal Roach Studios will sustain no set back or diminution as the result of the new feature plans, the Pathe statement emphatically declares.

The feature length comedy drama to be started in the near future by Hal Roach will head a possible series of two a year. This expansion of production activities at the Hal Roach Studios has been made possible by the recent reorganization of this producing company, which has placed the management in the hands of Warren Doane, general manager; T. J. Crizer, editor; and Harley Walker, title writer. The new administrative arrangements recently effected will afford Mr. Roach more time to devote to promotion work that he has been contemplating for some time past.

Relieved of a considerable portion of the arduous task of actively managing the studio forces, Mr. Roach intends to engage personally in the writing and directing of these comedy dramas. This has been his ambition, which circumstances hitherto have made impossible of fulfillment. The young Pathe producer has for a long time wished to bring before the public in the form of screen entertainment some novel and original ideas in comedy making. With the Hal Roach Studios on the smoothest running basis the company has ever enjoyed and the productive capacity of the plant still untaxed, the opportunity for creative effort long sought by Mr. Roach is at last at hand.

The first of the Hal Roach series of comedy-dramas will bear the title of "Somewhere in Kansas" and, according to advance reports from the Coast, will be a distinctive innovation with surprise comedy twists predominating. The action of the story is laid in the historical period intervening between the Gold Rush of '49 and the Civil War. Blanche Mahaffey, the celebrated Follies beauty, and Glenn Tryon will play the leading roles. A supporting cast of notable talent is being assembled for the production.

The second production in the series will be a comedy drama, the story of which will be laid in New York. No title has as yet been selected. The cast personnel will be announced in the near future.

A complete exploitation campaign, reflecting originality and out-of-the-ordinary production slants, will be embodied in the extensive advertising and publicity campaigns that will accompany the offerings in this series. It is expected that "Somewhere in Kansas" will be ready for distribution in about three months.

In addition to the series of comedy dramas contemplated, the Hal Roach Studios will release two novelty features a year to be made along the lines of "The Call of the Wild," now playing to capacity business in first-run theatres throughout the country, and the forthcoming "Rex, King of Wild Horses," directed by Fred Jackman from a story by Hal Roach and presenting a wild stallion in the featured role.

Saenger Books All Goldwyn Releases

The Saenger Amusement Company of New Orleans has booked the full list of Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan releases for the current season for its circuit of theatres in New Orleans, Louisiana and Mississippi.

The contract was signed by Messrs. Dureau and Gueringer for the Saenger Amusement Company on their recent trip to New York. J. R. Grainger and Sam Eckman, Jr., acted for Goldwyn-Cosmopolitan in closing the deal.

With Throttle Opened Warners Deaf to Industrial Rumblings

As proof that there will be no let-down as far as productions are concerned at the Warner Brothers' studio on the West Coast, Harry M. Warner, President of the Warner organization, arrived in New York this week to formulate production plans for the coming season. With him are Sidney A. Franklin, producer-director of "Tiger Rose," and other Warner Classics, and Harry Rapf, whose latest production under the Warner banner is "Lucretia Lombard."

Mr. Warner declared that work at the Warner Studio is going on at top-speed in spite of the great flurry which was caused on the Coast by the closing up of some of the big studios. At the present time, "Beau Brummel," starring John Barrymore, is facing the camera—the most pretentious production ever undertaken by the Warners. "Daddies," a screen version of David Belasco's play of the same name, starring Mae Marsh, is also undergoing production. Among the photoplays just completed, the Ernst Lubitsch Production, "The Marriage Circle" is the most important, with others being prepared for shipment East.

During his stay in New York, Mr. Warner intends to buy up the screen rights of big plays and successful literary material for forthcoming Warner productions. Sidney Franklin will assist him in purchasing story material which he will make productions from. Harry Rapf is also looking for story material on which he will base his future productions for the Warners.

While most of the eighteen Warner Classics for the year 1923-24 have been completed, preparatory work is now going on for all forthcoming productions. Ernst Lubitsch and his staff are taking up the necessary research work for "Deburau," which will be the next production which Lubitsch will make for the Warner organization. It is also understood that the successful musical comedy "Irene," will be listed among the popular plays and stories which the Warners will present in the season of 1924-1925.

Finishes Editing "Maytime"

Editing of Gasnier's production, "Maytime," has been completed at the Schulberg Studios and the first prints will soon be in exchanges of Preferred Pictures Corporation. The picture is based upon Rida Johnson Young's play which has already run six consecutive seasons under the management of the Shuberts.

Run Three Weeks

Two current Metro productions, "Strangers of the Night" and "The Eternal Struggle," enjoyed London triumphs recently when, through popular acclaim, they each ran for three consecutive weeks at London's greatest picture house, the Tivoli Theatre. This sets a new mark not only for native English productions but for American pictures in London as well.

"Light That Failed" Shown in Los Angeles

George Melford's Paramount production of Rudyard Kipling's famous story, "The Light That Failed," one of the new pictures listed by Paramount for showing in the demonstration theatres, had its premiere at Grauman's Metropolitan Theatre, Los Angeles, last week, and was enthusiastically received. The newspaper reviewers were agreed that it was Melford's best picture, even in face of the fact that one of his earlier productions, "Behold My Wife," has been included in many symposiums as one of the ten best pictures ever made.

In its criticism the Los Angeles Examiner said: "Notably present are (1) sincerity, (2) forthright story telling, (3) utterly convincing drama."

Harris Heads Cast

Frank Mayo and Mildred Harris head the cast of "The Shadow of the East," the screen production being made from E. M. Hull's novel. George Archainbaud is directing this version of the successor to "The Sheik."

F. B. O. Closes Canadian Deal for "Wreckage"

As a result of a four-cornered conference in Toronto last week between Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges of Film Booking Offices, J. L. Hunter, general manager of United Exhibitors of Canada (Canadian distributors of F. B. O.), N. L. Nathanson and Colvin W. Brown, representing Thomas Ince, announcement is made of the contracting for "Human Wreckage," the big F. B. O.-U. E. Special, for the entire Nathanson circuit.

In conjunction with this deal, Mrs. Reid will tour Canada for several months, visiting the Nathanson theatres and carrying on her dramatic expose of the narcotic curse. Mr. Berman was highly elated over the entire transaction and spoke in glowing terms of the progress Canadians are making in the picture field.

Attractive Herald

The Hodkinson Corporation has prepared an attractive herald for "Shifting Sands."

First National Production Schedule for Next Six Months Definitely Set

First National's production program for the next six months is definitely set. The schedule as announced by John McCormick, Western representative, after a telegraphic conference with Richard A. Rowland, the company's general manager, includes the picturization of the best efforts of the literary world and of the stage. The program is to follow the First National announced plan to produce only that class of pictures worthy of showing in the highest grade theatres.

Enhancing the program of production to be made by the various independent producers releasing through First National is a series of comedy and dramatic plays by the company's own producing units, which are directly under the supervision of Earl J. Hudson, production manager of those units. First in this list is "The Swamp Angel," a screen version of Richard Connell's story of the same title, now in production, featuring Colleen Moore and directed by Clarence Badger.

Also in production now at the East Coast studios is a Norma Talmadge feature, "Secrets," a picturization of the sensational New York stage play. Joseph M. Schenck has intrusted the direction of this dramatic gem to Frank Borzage, who during the past two years has piloted several First National pictures to success. A screen version of "Romeo and Juliet" also is included in Miss Talmadge's forthcoming schedule.

Another stirring feature in production is a Maurice Tourneur special, being produced by M. C. Levee. This is William Dudley Pelley's "Torment," with Owen Moore and Bessie Love in the leading roles.

A Thomas H. Ince offering is a farcical comedy, "The Galloping Fish," featuring Louise Fazenda. From that same unit also will come a historical epic, "The Last Frontier," a drama of the West dealing with the building of the first transcontinental railroad.

The Principal Pictures program to be released by First National comprises "The Meanest Man in the World" and "When a Man's a Man," a screen adaptation of Harold Bell Wright's famous story.

A second production of the First National's own units is to be a picturization of William Hurlburt's emotional stage drama, "Lilies of the Field," featuring Corinne Griffith. John Francis Dillon, who handled the directorial reins on "Flaming Youth," will direct it. Another dramatic type of picture to be made by the same organization is to be "The Woman on the Jury," a version of the play which proved popular on Broadway.

A fourth in the series will be the history-reflecting epic of the fast-fading cattle country, "Sundown," written by Earl J. Hudson. To film this picture the company will go into Mexico, where most of the scenes will be taken on the largest fenced-in ranch in the world.

Constance Talmadge, who just finished the star role in "The Dangerous Maid," is to be seen in two brilliant screen comedy dramas. These are "Alias Nora O'Brien" and "The Mirage," both adapted from outstanding stage successes.

Frank Lloyd, whose first independent production, "Black Oxen," co-featuring Conway Tearle and Corinne Griffith, is being edited and titled, will produce "The Sea Hawk," Raphael Sabatini's glorious tale of romance and the sea, a book which for months has stood as one of the six best sellers of fiction.

Rex Beach's story of the oil fields, "Flowing Gold," will go into immediate production by Richard Walton Tully. Joseph De Grasse will direct it and the two principal parts will be in the hands of Milton Sills and Anna Q. Nilsson.

From the Edwin Carewe unit will come "A Son of the Sahara" and "Snake Bite." The Los Angeles producing director is to make the former in Algiers. A company, including Bert Lytell, Claire Windsor, Walter McGrail and Rosemary Theby, will leave for Africa within two weeks to begin on this virile story of the desert.

Eastern studios also will make a conspicuous contribution to the program. George Fitzmaurice, just returned from Rome after filming Hall Caine's masterpiece, "The Eternal City," is to immediately begin "Cytherea," a highly dramatic feature, at the Fort Lee Studios.

The Richard Barthelmess offerings include "Twenty-one," now being completed; "The Enchanted Cottage" and a historical feature, "Nathan Hale."

Will Direct 5

John Francis Dillon has been placed under contract by Associated First National Pictures, Inc. to handle the directorial reins on a series of five future productions. His first will be a picturization of "Lilies of the Field," the William Hulbert emotional play, which was one of last season's successes on Broadway.

First Runs Resumed at Clune's Theatre

Clune's Broadway Theatre, where many Los Angeles first nights were held before the house was given over to second runs, resumed a first run policy last week. The Preferred picture, "The Broken Wing," recently completed by B. P. Schulberg, held the screen as the feature. Its premiere was a brilliant affair.

Cosmopolitan Expansion Endorsed by Profession

Cosmopolitan Corporation's announcement of the building of three big new studios, all in New York City, was hailed by Holbrook Blynn, Lionel Barrymore, Otto Kruger, Robert B. Mantell, Rose Coghlan, Lowell Sherman, William Collier, Jr., Charles Judels, Gustav von Seyffertitz as a move which would give the screen a far greater scope in the important detail of casting for big productions.

"Most of America's prominent players," said Holbrook Blinn, "are centered on Broadway. While playing on Broadway, however, they are generally open to screen engagements in and near the metropolis." Lionel Barrymore: "One cannot minimize the screen's need of the leading players of the speaking stage in the casts of photoplay productions." "Most of the leading players of the stage are available only in New York City," said Otto Kruger.

Lowell Sherman: "The leading artists of the stage have their permanent homes, or are accustomed to congregate in New York." "The screen has need of the best artists of the stage," declared Robert B. Mantell, "and the majority of them can accept motion picture engagements only in New York."

These new studios will double the capacity of the five studios in the metropolis which Cosmopolitan has been utilizing for the making of its pictures. The new studios will have bigger stages to accommodate pretentious sets for the important historical and other special features on its production schedule in the near future.

Edeson Is Engaged for Metro Picture

Robert Edeson, celebrated actor of the American stage, is the latest addition to the cast of Fred Niblo's newest production, "Thy Name is Woman," which Mr. Niblo now has in production under Metro-Louis B. Mayer auspices. Mr. Edeson will play the important role of the Commandante of the Spanish Army—a role which those will remember who saw the Broadway production of this play several years ago with Jose Rubens and Mary Nash in the two other prominent roles.

Mr. Edeson has been under consideration for this role since the time Mr. Niblo first began to plan his production, but negotiations were only completed just prior to this announcement. The cast now consists of Mr. Edeson, Ramon Novarro, Barbara La Marr, Claire MacDowell, Wallace MacDonald and William V. Mong. Other additions will be made later.

Bess Meredyth made the adaptation of "Thy Name is Woman" from Benjamin F. Glaser's adaptation to the stage. Ben Carre is art director and it is being photographed by Victor Milner

'The Hunchback' Lauded by Baltimore Critics

The unusual success of "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" in Baltimore, where it recently opened, is due to a large extent, as in New York, to the exceptional newspaper reviews it received. An idea of the esteem in which "The Hunchback of Notre Dame" is held by the Baltimore critics may be had from the following excerpts:

The Baltimore American: "If Victor Hugo were alive today would he take off his hat to Carl Laemmle's screen version of 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame?' I'll say he would!"

The Baltimore Evening Sun: "The Audience that sat down with doubts in their minds came very near rising with cheers on their lips. That's the kind of a picture 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' is."

The Baltimore News: "Perhaps the highest praise I can pay 'The Hunchback of Notre Dame' is that not once during its unfoldment on the screen did I wonder what time it was."

The Baltimore Daily Post: "Picturization of Victor Hugo's great novel could, of course, be nothing but superlative. Mechanically, the picture equals anything yet attempted in the films. Reproduction of the great medieval cathedral of Notre Dame—antedating Columbus' discovery of America—alone is a colossal feat. All settings and costumes are historically correct."

Connelly Added

Edward Connelly, veteran screen actor, has been added to the cast of "The Fool's Awakening," the Metro picturization of William J. Locke's novel, "The Tale of Triona," which is in production at the Metro Hollywood studios under the direction of Harold Shaw. The entire cast now consists of Harrison Ford, Enid Bennett, Alec Francis, Mary Alden, Edward Connelly, Lionel Belmore, John Sainpolis, Harry Northrup, Evelyn Sherman, Pauline French, D. R. O. Hatswell, Mark Fenton, Arline Pretty, and Lorimer Johnston.

F. B. O. Buys Story

The Film Booking Offices announce this week the purchase of a new story for Jane Novak entitled "The Dance of the Chained Slave." The story is an original from the pen of Garrett Elsden Fort and is a modern society drama with a novel theme.

"The Temple of Venus" Declared Colorful at Broadway Premiere

The fifth special production from Fox Film Corporation to be presented on Broadway this year, "The Temple of Venus," had its initial presentation at the Central Theatre, New York, last Monday evening, October 30.

The theatre was crowded to capacity by an audience that included, in addition to prominent officials of various producing and distributing corporations, leading critics of all New York newspapers and representatives of the various trade magazines.

Henry Otto staged "The Temple of Venus." The theme combines mythology, fantasy and modern American drama. The leading role is played by Mary Philbin. Phyllis Haver, David Butler, William Boyd and Leon Barry also have prominent parts in the production. A special musical setting by Erno Rapee added to the evening's entertainment.

The majority of the New York critics apparently were unanimous in their opinions of the production. The Evening World said: "As a spectacular feat of photography, a venture into color effects, 'The Temple of Venus' is a masterpiece. It has been many a day since New York movie audiences have had a chance to witness such a riot of color effects on the screen."

The New York Telegram critic wrote: "Combining modern drama, fantasy and magnificent studies of wild life and aquatic growth, the picture is probably the most artistic achievement of its kind ever developed." New York American: "The story is finely photographed. The subterranean views are shown in rich colors, and the colorful decoration is carried through the modern revels splendidly." New York Journal: "There are enough young women in gauzy garments, flitting, skipping, hopping, prancing, leaping, diving and swimming about the rocky edge of the California coast to make even Flo Ziegfeld rub his eyes."

New York Mail: "'The Temple of Venus' is a glorified movie 'Follies,' with 1,000 American beauties and a star cast." New York Journal of Commerce: "Phyllis Haver and Alice Day acquitted themselves admirably under Mr. Otto's excellent direction, while charming Mary Philbin is very reminiscent of the late Olive Thomas, both as to beauty and winsomeness of manner."

Hodkinson Reports Many Bookings

"Fun From the Press" continues to be proclaimed by exhibitors an ideal addition to any program. Among recent important bookings, Hodkinson reports the following: Caldwell Amusement Company, New Orleans; Stahl Amusement Company, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Grant, Philadelphia, Pennsylvania; the Strand, Elmira, New York and the Grand, Terre Haute, Indiana.

To Double Prints

Buster Keaton's second Metro feature length comedy will be known as "Our Hospitality" instead of the single word "Hospitality," by which name it has been known hitherto. Profiting by the lessons learned after the release of Keaton's first Metro feature length comedy, "Three Ages," double the usual amount of prints will be made of "Our Hospitality" to meet the early playdates which exhibitors are asking all over the country. It is set for release November 19.

No Indication of Slowing Up in Production of Vitagraph Films

There is no indication of let-up at the Vitagraph Studios in Hollywood. David Smith is rushing production with all speed on "A Tale of Red Roses," a picturization of George Randolph Chester's novel in which Dustin Farnum and Patsy Ruth Miller have leading roles.

The announcement that President Albert E. Smith had purchased the world rights to "Captain Blood," by Rafael Sabatini, created unlimited gossip in the picture colony. David Smith, in filming "Masters of Men," the great sea story adapted from Morgan Robertson's novel, is said to point to him as the probable producer of "Captain Blood."

Progress on "The Beggar of St. Sulpice," the special now in making by the French unit of Vitagraph, is proving satisfactory to Albert E. Smith, who visited the studios in Paris.

With David Smith utilizing all the resources of the Hollywood studios, J. Stuart Blackton directing "Let Not Man Put Asunder" at the Brooklyn plant and work going ahead in Paris, Vitagraph producing plans are being carried forward with all zeal. In addition to these units, which are under the personal direction of President Smith, the Whitman Bennett organization at Yonkers, which delivered two specials, "Loyal Lives" and "The Leavenworth Case," is active, and in addition the Charles E. Blaney Picture Corporation has delivered "The Love Bandit" and will soon have ready another feature.

"Pioneer Trails" follows "On the Banks of the Wabash" on Broadway and will be seen at the Rialto Theatre November 11. "The Man From Brodney's," a big production adapted from George Barr McCutcheon's novel, is now in the hands of Vitagraph branches.

Three Larry Semon comedies are ready and the fourth, to be released by Vitagraph, will be announced shortly. "The Gown Shop" has been released for first runs and "Lightning Love" and "Horseshoes" are ready for booking.

"The Drivin' Fool" Has Successful Run

"The Drivin' Fool" has completed a successful two weeks' run at the Rivoli Theatre, St. Louis, a Universal house. Hodkinson reports that business was excellent during the entire run.

Collaboration

Frances Marion and Kenneth B. Clark are collaborating on the continuity of "Sundown," Earl J. Hudson's epic of the cattle country, which is to be made by First National in Mexico. Atmospheric scenes, showing the driving of 250,000 cattle are finished.

More High Praise For "Main Street"

Another award of merit has been handed the Warner Classic, "Main Street," the screen adaptation of Sinclair Lewis' novel of the same name, by the National Board of Review in its monthly publication, Exceptional Photoplays. In the review of the picture, tribute is paid the Warner Brothers for their sincerity displayed in the screen adaptation. Director Harry Beaumant is commended for his splendid treatment of the story, and Monte Blue and Florence Vidor receive their share of the praise.

The National Board of Review also has included "Main Street" and a number of other Warner Classics adapted from popular novels as suitable literature to be used by different localities during National Book Week, which has been set for November 12. This gives a splendid opportunity for the exhibitor to indulge in a little extra exploitation by tying up with his local book stores and libraries with displays and advertisements during the occasion. Besides "Main Street," the National Board of Review has sponsored other novels from which the Warner Brothers have based pictures on are "Brass," "Dangerous Adventure," "Rags to Riches" and "Heroes of the Street."

"The Governor's Lady" Heads Fox Latest List

"The Governor's Lady," a screen version of which has been made by Fox Film Corporation, is listed for release on October 28. Originally this picture was a David Belasco stage production and was written by Alice Bradley. It had a successful career while behind the footlights. Harry Millarde directed the film version. The leading roles are played by Robert T. Haines and Jane Grey, respectively. Other members of the cast are Anne Luther, Frazier Coulter and Leslie Austin.

Additional releases for the week are the Tom Mix picture "Mile-A-Minute Romeo," the Clyde Cook comedy "Wet and Weary," the Imperial comedy "The Monkey Farm," and the Educational "Cloisters in the Clouds."

"Mile-A-Minute Romeo" is said to be just what its title implies—a fast moving picture with all the usual punch. It was adapted from the Max Brand story "The Gun Gentleman," and was directed by Lambert Hillyer. Betty Jewel has the leading feminine role.

The Imperial comedy "The Monkey Farm" introduces those remarkably talented simian actors whose funny antics have enlivened so many Fox comedies.

"Wet and Weary" brings Clyde Cook in a comedy that shows him in his drollest and most entertaining mood.

"Cloisters in the Clouds" is an interesting educational devoted to the monasteries built in Greece about a thousand years ago in which to safeguard religious relics from the Turks.

Big Universal Demand for Pathe Horse Film

Showmen all over the country are registering their appreciation of the box-office value of Pathe's motion picture record of the international horse-race between Zev and Papyrus at the Belmont Track, October 20th, by booking the production for week stands and launching special exploitation and presentation for the showing of the picture to their audiences.

A remarkable instance of the reception accorded the picture is the arrangement made by the Skouras Brothers of St. Louis. Booked solid with features up until November 10th, the Skouras Circuit found it impossible to present the Pathe special immediately after release.

However, Spyros Skouras, head of the circuit, was so impressed with the box-office value of the production that he closed immediately for the picture, arranging to present it the week of November 10th with special exploitation and advertising features in advance of the showing. A special musical score is also being arranged for the Skouras Brothers presentation of the subject.

Clift to Direct

Denison Clift, the American director, who made the screen version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's "This Freedom," and has directed a number of pictures in England, has been selected by William Fox to make the John Galsworthy play, "Loyalties"; "A Bill of Divorcement" and "Mary, Queen of Scots." Mr. Clift has been put under a long term contract by Fox.

Owen Moore to Play in "Torment"

M. C. Levee has announced the engagement of Owen Moore, popular leading man, to appear in Maurice Tourneur's next production for First National, "Torment." Mr. Moore will be the featured player in this production, heading a cast of prominent players.

Many Governors See and Laud New Blackton Film

"On the Banks of the Wabash," J. Stuart Blackton's feature inspired by Paul Dresser's soug, was honored at the Fifteenth Annual Governors' Conference at West Baden, Indiana, during its sessions Oct. 17-19. It was not only selected for the social evening program of Oct. 18, but was praised by governors in attendance. The song of this title has been made the official state song of Indiana.

The Governor of Indiana commended Producer Blackton's conception of Indiana life. "Very beautiful and colorful. Depicts Hoosier life faithfully," the Governor said at the conclusion of the showing which was attended by more than a hundred members of the official families and about six hundred of invited guests. Other comments by executives throughout the country were:

"Beautiful—extremely interesting; gripping."—E. F. Morgan, Governor of West Virginia. "Remarkable picture, true to nature; wholesome."—W. W. Brandon, Governor of Alabama. "Wonderful picture. I greatly enjoyed it."—John M. Parker, Governor of Louisiana. "A charming story beautifully portrayed."—Thomas G. McLeod, Governor of South Carolina. "Exceedingly good and extremely interesting throughout."—Percival P. Baxter, Governor of Maine. "Educational; entertaining, pulsating. A praiseworthy picture full of pep and punches."—Alexander J. Groesbeck, Governor of Michigan.

"Beautifully expresses the lofty sentiments in Southern lore. It is most delightful in all aspects."—J. A. O. Preus, Governor of Minnesota. "Action is rapid and exciting. Exceedingly good entertainment."—C. M. Walker, Governor of Georgia. "A captivating and thrilling picture."—Scott C. Bone of Alaska. "Splendid production; spectacular, exciting." — E. Lee Trinkle, Governor of Virginia. "Highly enjoyable."—N. E. Kendall, Governor of Iowa. "Thrilling, gripping. Very unusual scenery."—Miles L. Riley, Secretary of Governors' Conference. "Delightful, splendidly photographed. Represents a real idea and is wholesome."—W. R. Farrington, Governor of Hawaii.

"Palace of King" Goes to Theatres

Goldwyn's spectacular medieval production, "In the Palace of the King," an Emmett Flynn picture based upon the F. Marion Crawford novel, was released to the exhibitors of the country this week. It will receive its New York presentation at the Capitol Theatre at an early date. The first Pacific Coast showing will be at Herbert L. Rothchild's California Theatre, San Francisco, beginning November 10.

"In the Palace of the King" was adapted to the screen by June Mathis, editorial director for Goldwyn, who has made the adaptation of "Ben-Hur" and who will go to Europe to advise with Director Charles Brabin throughout the filming of that gigantic photoplay.

The cast is entirely in keeping with the magnitude of the production. Blanche Sweet has the leading role of Dolores—the part which furnished Viola Allen one of her greatest stage creations. Edmund Lowe plays opposite her in the role of Don John. Others are Hobart Bosworth, Pauline Starke, Sam de Grasse, William V. Mong, Aileen Pringle, Charles Clary and Lucien Littlefield.

Metro Heads See Jackle's Latest Film

After months of production, weeks of editing and an aroused expectancy on the part of the general public, Jackie Coogan's first Metro picture, "Long Live the King," was thrown on the screen here in the East for the first time last week when it was shown privately before a group of Metro officials and invited guests.

Among those present at the showing were Marcus Loew, W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation; J. E. D. Meador, director of publicity, and other Metro officials. Among the distinguished guests present was David Warfield, noted actor. Mrs. Jack Coogan, who came east a few days ago with a print of "Long Live the King," was there and she was the happiest of all as her little son's genius was displayed on the screen.

Jackie's picture made a distinct, remarkable impression. Metro took care that Jackie's first Metro picture, as indeed all that are to follow, should receive the finest production possible. The sets were delicately beautiful. The well-knit story, the subtle direction, the beautiful costumes, and the intelligent playing of the various members of the huge cast contribute, it is said, to make "Long Live the King" a truly great picture. Mr. Warfield said, "Jackie Coogan is the greatest genius of us all."

High Praise

No longer can it be said that a book, a musical comedy or a play invariably loses its identity when it is adapted for use on the screen. Not only did Otto A. Harbach, distinguished author of the musical comedy hit, "Going Up," recognize his own child in Douglas MacLean's pictured attraction of that name, but he was so impressed by the youngster's resemblance to its original self that he has written Arthur S. Kane, president of Associated Exhibitors, which distributes Mr. MacLean's productions, thanking and congratulating him.

Breaking Records

The Preferred picture, "Mothers-in-Law," is surpassing all previous Gasnier productions as a money-getter for exhibitors, it is reported. It is said to be everywhere duplicating its success made at the Cameo Theatre in New York.

Important Warner Classics Near Completion at West Coast Studios

News from the Warner Brothers' West Coast Studio states that most of the important Warner Classics are now rapidly nearing completion and are undergoing the finishing touches preparatory for their shipment to the home office in New York. "Tiger Rose," the screen adaptation of Belasco's famous stage play, in which Lenore Ulric is starred, has already been shipped east for the approval of the Warner officials.

The next production expected is "Lucretia Lombard," a screen adaptation of Kathleen Norris' famous novel of the same name. Monte Blue and Irene Rich are starred, with other prominent roles in the hands of Marc McDermott, Alec B. Francis, John Roche, Otto Hoffman, Norma Shearer and Lucy Beaumont. The photoplay has an international setting, its opening scenes being in Switzerland. The action then takes place in different parts of Europe, finishing up in America where scenes of a forest fire and flood furnish a thrilling climax.

Johnny Hines' second starring vehicle, "Conductor 1492," under the Warner banner, is scheduled for shipment during the week of November 5. The story, naturally, has a light comedy vein, but also includes some sensational thrills and gives ample opportunity for the star to display his marked comedy ability. Doris May plays the leading feminine role and other parts are played by Dan Mason, Dorothy Vernon, Robert Cain, Fred Esmelton and Byron Sage.

The week of November 26 will bring Wesley Barry's third Warner Classic this season, "George Washington, Jr.," to the East. The photoplay is a screen adaption of George M. Cohan's famous musical play of the same name, dealing with political affairs in Washington, and a fine cast of players are seen supporting the freckled star. Prominent among them are Gertrude Olmstead, Otto Harlan, Leon Barry, Charles Conklin, Edward Phillips and William Courtwright. Mal St. Clair handled the megaphone for the production.

David Belasco again will be represented by the Warners with the completion of his successful play, "Daddies," scheduled to be shipped the first week of December. Mae Marsh is the star of this Warner Classic, with Harry Myers playing opposite and other roles in the hands of Claude Gillingwater, Georgia Woodthorpe, Claire Adams, Willard Louis, Boyce Comb, Otto Hoffman, Muriel Dana, the De Briac twins, King Evers and Priscilla Dean Moran. The direction of this Warner Classic was under the supervision of William Seiter.

Baby Peggy's First Universal-Jewell Has Arrived in New York

"The Darling of New York," Baby Peggy's first feature length production, has been received in New York and reviewed by the Universal home office executives and by critics from the trade press. It has met with unanimous favor and is heralded as a picture which will make good money for those who show it and definitely establish its diminutive star as a name to be reckoned with in the feature field.

It is a Universal Jewel production, directed by King Baggot, from a story written by Baggot and Raymond L. Schrock, scenario chief at Universal City. Although it marks a definite change for Baby Peggy from short reel comedies to dramatic vehicles of long length and high quality in production, the results prove, it is said, that Carl Laemmle and the Stern brothers, Julius and Abe, who sponsored the Baby's appearance in features, had keen foresight and the courage of their convictions.

The role played by Baby Peggy is that of a mite of an immigrant girl, orphaned in Italy and started to this country to find her wealthy American grandfather. By accident she falls into the hands of a band of diamond smugglers who use her to smuggle gems through the United States customs.

Those who have seen the picture say that Baggot has not missed a single opportunity to catch the little screen prodigy in her best and most lovable moods.

"Twenty-One" Edited

The cutting and editing of "Twenty-One," Richard Barthelmess' next release, made under the direction of John S. Robertson for First National, has been completed. In the cast of "Twenty-One" are Dorothy Mackaill, Joe King, Ivan Simpson, Elsie Lawson and Bradley Barker.

N. Y. Critics Praise "The Drivin' Fool"

Critics of the New York newspapers were unanimous in their enthusiastic praise of "The Drivin' Fool" when it had its New York premiere at the Cameo Theatre last week.

Norman Lane in the "New York American" said: "It is the fastest film seen on Broadway this season. From the first flicker, every scene is cut and trimmed as closely as possible without destroying the continuity of the plot. The result is a realistic effect of breathlessness, quite in keeping with the title and the spirit of the story."

The "Times" said: "It is evident that the director, Robert J. Thornby, decided that none of those who see it will complain of wearying moments. Wally Van, the young speed maniac, fills the role of Hal Locke with humor and zeal. He is convincing in his various predicaments and does not laugh at his own fun-making, which, of course, makes it all the better."

"The World" declared it was "Entertaining. Rapid. Carefree."

"The Sun and Globe" remarked: "Wally Van in 'The Drivin' Fool' is the Cameo Theatre's contribution this week to the joy of living."

"Wally Van is staging a screen comeback. Rather an enjoyable picture," was Don Allen's opinion in the "Evening World."

"The Evening Journal" said: "The Drivin' Fool," at the Cameo Theatre, is one of those high-speed joyous farces that coax the spectator into settling comfortably into his seat to laugh his heartiest."

"Little Old New York" Achieves Big Bookings

Phil Gleichman has booked Cosmopolitan's Marion Davies's picture, "Little Old New York," for four weeks at his Broadway-Strand Theatre in Detroit, beginning the week of November 25. The two weeks' engagement of this picture at the Blue Mouse Theatre in Seattle, booked to start November 24, has been extended to three weeks on the strength of its success at the Roosevelt Theatre, Chicago.

C. E. Whitehurst has booked it for two weeks at his New Theatre, in Baltimore, starting December 31. Ruben & Finkelstein have bought it for the Garrick in Minneapolis and the Garrick in St. Paul. A. H. Blank has booked it over his circuit. It will show at Nathanson's Strand or Modern in Providence, R. I.

"Little Old New York," "Unseeing Eyes" and "The Rendezvous" have been booked at the Leland Theatre in Albany, N. Y., and at the Lincoln Theatre in Troy, N. Y. "Six Days" and "Little Old New York" have been booked in the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis.

Washington to See Charles Ray Film

The President Theatre, Washington, D. C., has captured Charles Ray in "The Courtship of Myles Standish" for a pre-release of indefinite length, Thomas W. Fowler having just booked the big attraction, following negotiations with J. S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors.

The exact date for the opening of the run has not been determined, Mr. Woody said in a statement, but it is definitely assured that the attraction will be showing during Thanksgiving week, and however long the run may continue, a top price of $1.65 will prevail.

Soon to follow "The Courtship of Myles Standish," each of them, like the Charles Ray super-feature, for an indefinite run, will be Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl" and Douglas MacLean in "Going Up." The former is continuing its record-breaking world premiere run at the Mission, Los Angeles, while "Going Up," already a memorable triumph in nearly a dozen cities, is playing to packed houses at Graumen's Million Dollar Theatre.

Gibson Picture Gives Printers Extra Work

Simultaneously with the reports of the popularity of "The Ramblin Kid" comes the information that the firm of Grosset & Dunlap have republished the story, with illustrations taken from the Hoot Gibson picture. The western romance is from the pen of Earl Wayland Bowman, and was first published by Frank A. Munsey. This is said to be one of the first instances on record where a photoplay edition has been put out for any but a super-picture.

Arrangements have been made by Universal looking toward a nation-wide tie-up with book-sellers handling the photoplay edition of "The Ramblin' Kid" in connection with the exploitation of the picture. Edward Sedgwick, who has made most of Gibson's successes during the past year, directed the picture. The cast included Laura La Plante, Harold Goodwin, William Welsh, G. Raymond Nye, Carold Holloway, Charles K. French, and others.

An indication of the box-office results various exhibitors are having with "The Ramblin' Kid" may be had from the following letter, just received at the Universal home office from Robert Madigan, manager of the Standard Theatre, Cleveland, O.:

"We opened at noon on Sunday and played to three thousand seven hundred and forty-seven (3,747) admissions, a new record for our house, which only has six hundred seats. It proved to be the largest single-day attendance the house has enjoyed in the ten years we have been showing pictures."

Fox Names Films Due in November

Fox pictures starring Shirley Mason, John Gilbert, William Russell and Al St. John will be released in November; also two Sunshine comedies and two educationals. The Shirley Mason picture, which will be released on November 11, is "South Sea Love." The story was written especially for her by Frederick and Fanny Hatton and was directed by David Solomon.

"The Wolf Man" is the title of the John Gilbert photoplay, which will be released November 18. It is a story of modern life and was written by Frederick and Fanny Hattan. The director was Edmund Mortimer. A large supporting cast is employed, Norma Shearer, a beautiful young actress, plays opposite the star.

William Russell's picture, released on November 25, is called "When Odds Are Even." The author of the story and scenario is Dorothy Yost. It was directed by James Flood, and Dorothy Devore has the leading feminine role. Al St. John has another of his clever comedies released on November 4. "Slow and Sure" is its title, but fast and furious is said to be its fun. On November 4 the Sunshine comedy, "Somebody Lied," will be released, and on November 18, "Rough Sailing," also a Sunshine, will be given to the public.

"Universities of the World," on November 11, and "Johnny's Swordfish", on November 25, are the two educationals for the month.

"Pioneer Trails" to Be Shown at Rialto

Dr. Hugo Riesenfeld, managing director of the Rialto Theatre, New York City, has booked "Pioneer Trails" for the week of November 11 at that theatre.

"Pioneer Trails" received its metropolitan baptism in Boston, where it played an extended engagement of two weeks. The newspaper critics of the daily press in Boston praised highly this vivid story of the West. Chicago critics were equally enthusiastic, the Tribune of that city crediting it with being one of the finest pictures exhibited in the Middle West this year. A cast of marked excellence appears in "Pioneer Trails." Cullen Landis and Alice Calhoun have the leading roles.

Washington Society Views "The Mailman"

At the Ambassador Theatre, Washington, D. C., Thursday, Nov. 1, Emory Johnson, the F. B. O. director, gave a preview of his latest photodramatic thriller, "The Mailman," before U. S. post office officials and an auditorium crowded to the doors with foreign diplomats, American society leaders and political high lights.

In addition to the above, more than seventy-five prominent exhibitors in the southeastern portion of the United States traveled to Washington to be on hand to welcome the exponent of public service productions. The theatre was loaned through the courtesy of H. M. Crandall of the Crandall Theatres Company with a full orchestra.

The second Paramount picture to be tested at the theatres recently designated by Paramount as demonstration houses is "His Children's Children," Sam Wood's all-star production made from Monte M. Katterjohn's adaptation of the novel by Arthur Train. In many instances this picture will immediately follow the engagement of "The Spanish Dancer" in the demonstration centers. The first public presentation was made at the Rivoli Theatre in New York Sunday, Nov. 4.

"His Children's Children" was produced at Paramount's Eastern studio in Long Island City during the past summer and early fall, and immediately upon completing the camera work Director Wood took the film to California where the editing and titling was done at the Lasky studio.

The novel was called by Dr. Henry Van Dyke, who reviewed it, "The Vanity Fair of New York," and was rated beside Thackeray's delineation of London high life of a hundred years ago. The story covers three generations, extending from the gold-mining, railroading grandfather to the modern, jazz-crazed flapper. The cast is said to be the best that could be selected to play the parts they typify.

281,000 Students in Big Drive for Pictures

During a period of more than five years the Palmer Photoplay Corporation has built up a student body of 281,000 ambitious screen writers, through consistent national advertising amounting to nearly $600,000. These active students, representing the nation's most responsive of motion picture patrons are being developed and trained by the Palmer Photoplay Corporation to supply the screen with original stories.

Over a national territory embracing 3,559 communities, this great force of "sure-fire" picture goers are boosting the fact that one of their own co-workers is the author of the first Palmer play "Judgment of the Storm," which means that in practically every community boasting a picture theatre, a keenly interested and enthusiastic group of imaginative men and women are telling their friends, their acquaintances and their relatives that a student of the Palmer course has "made good."

These 281,000 eager fans are rolling a golden snowball of curiosity that cannot fail to swamp the box-office of every theatre in those 3,559 communities when "Judgment of the Storm" is shown, Palmer Photoplays says.

Announce Anderson Buys Zane Grey Productions

Carl Anderson, President of Anderson Pictures Corporation, has purchased outright Zane Grey Productions. According to a statement made this week, this gives Mr. Anderson absolute ownership of five of the successful western features. Each is based on a novel from the pen of Zane Grey. Other rights and titles of rare value are said to be included in the deal.

The photoplays which pass to Mr. Anderson are "Desert Gold," "Riders of the Dawn," "The Man of the Forest," "The Mysterious Rider" and "The U. P. Trail." All are Zane Grey Specials in either six or seven reels.

This constitutes the second purchase to be announced by Carl Anderson within the past few weeks. He recently acquired Great Authors Productions, consisting of story rights, and seven features including the "The Westerners" and "The Gray Dawn" by Stewart Edward White, "The Dwelling Place of Light" by Winston Churchill, "The Sagebrusher" by Emerson Hough, and others.

"The Fighting Blade" Is Praised by Critics

Newspaper critics of the photoplay are finding "The Fighting Blade," Richard Barthelmess' most recent First National picture, one of the most entertaining costume films ever to reach the screen. "The Fighting Blade" is a story of the Cromwellian era in England, with the star in the role of a young Dutch adventurer who joins forces with the Roundheads and fights his way to love and victory. The picture was directed by John S. Robertson and produced by Inspiration Pictures.

The New York Tribune wrote: "'The Fighting Blade' is full of excitement and suspense."

The Detroit Times stated: "'The Fighting Blade' is one of the finest pictures from a production and acting standpoint we have ever seen." The Indianapolis Star said: "'The Fighting Blade' is one of the finest pictures Barthelmess has made."

Hawks to Prepare Sea Story Continuity

J. G. Hawks, one of the screen's premier scenario writers, has been selected to prepare the continuity for "Women Who Wait," the production which Reginald Barker will make under the auspices of the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces, Mr. Hawks' appointment is one of the most important current assignments of the coast and marks a selection concerning which there was a great deal of speculation.

"Women Who Wait" will be a screen version of the famous New England classic, "Cape Cod Folks," written several years ago by Joseph C. Lincoln. It is considered the one book that best depicts the soul and heart of New England. It is full of action and vivid with the dangers and hardships which are the daily lives of the fishermen who are the "Cape Cod Folks."

Mr. Hawks is thoroughly familiar with the sea, its dangers and the influence it has on men's lives who spend months on the high seas year in and year out. For three years he shipped before the mast on trading schooners and visited well nigh every corner of the world. He has spent years living in New England and has spent much of his time in the very section where the story is laid.

Pearl White to Star in Film Made in France

The announcement comes from Paris that Reginald Ford has his first production already under way starring Pearl White. "Terror" is the title of the new production and it is reported that Miss White is receiving the largest remuneration ever paid by any European concern to an American screen star. Mr. Ford was recently in the United States, and during his stay he disclosed interesting facts regarding his producing organization in Paris.

Mr. Ford then declared that his enterprise is the first ever known composed of an entire American unit with American players, directors, scenario staff, cameramen and technical staff that is financed entirely by French capital. These productions which will be undertaken are all to be made for the American market.

Edward Jose is the American director who is supervising the direction of Miss White's first starring vehicle, "Terror." It is said to be an absolute innovation in motion pictures, as it is the first time that Pearl White has ever faced the camera in France; and the production will be the first serial picture ever made which carries the action through in one performance. The intimate life of real Paris will be disclosed in the photoplay and some of the most thrilling scenes take place in the Paris sewers, much the same as in the current Broadway stage production, "Seventh Heaven."

Special interest has been aroused concerning "Terror" as permission has been granted Mr. Ford by the French Government to utilize a number of historical chateaux, parks and monuments in the picture.

Rehearsing Players to Appear in "Torment"

Maurice Tourneur has started rehearsing players to appear in "Torment" and plans to start actual "shooting" the early part of next week.

Among the players thus far engaged are Owen Moore, Bessie Love, Maude George, Joseph Kilgour and George Cooper.

"Torment" is heralded as the most ambitious film by Tourneur since he became associated with M. C. Levee in the production of First National pictures. The scenario is an adaptation from an original story by William Dudley Pelley and has just been completed by Fred Myton.

Seeing the World

Frank Mayo is the record globe-trotting hero of the movies. He played juvinile "leads" in half of the large cities in the world before going into pictures. He is now acting the hero in "The Shadow of the East," which George Archainbaud is directing at the William Fox West Coast Studios. As Harry Cravan, he becomes a globe trotter again, starting off in India, going to England and then to the Desert of Sahara.

To Write the Titles

Robert C. Benchley, dramatic critic of Life, has been engaged by the Distinctive Pictures Corporation to write the titles for "Second Youth," by Allan Updegraff, the production of which was recently completed. The cast includes Mimi Palmeri, Alfred Lunt, Jobyna Howland, Lynn Fontanne, Walter Catlett, Herbert Corthell, Winifred Allen and Faire Binney. Albert Parker directed the production and the adaptation was by John Lynch.

Barker Film a Hit in San Francisco

Reginald Barker's latest production for the Metro-Louis B. Mayer forces, "The Eternal Struggle," was the winning picture in San Francisco last week where it was presented for its western premiere at Loew's Warfield Theatre. Not only did "The Eternal Struggle" come in for enthusiastic praise from the newspaper reviewers but it had the hearty support of the public, whose mouth-to-mouth advertising kept the Warfield playing to capacity all through the engagement.

"If you want to be thrilled, go to the Warfield this week," wrote the reviewer of the San Francisco Bulletin. "'The Eternal Struggle' is packed with thrills."

"'The Eternal Struggle,'" wrote the critic of the San Francisco Call, "is a real picture. Its reality consists of its substantial characters and the beauty of its setting. Renee Adoree, in the leading feminine role, gives expression to an unaffected play of emotions that is refreshing to behold."

"Those who crave incessant action and red-blooded heroes will not be disappointed in 'The Eternal Struggle' at the Warfield," wrote the critic of the San Francisco Daily News. "The most beautiful scenery on the Rockies forms the background."

"Some of the most beautiful Canadian scenery ever utilized for motion picture drama forms the background for 'The Eternal Struggle,'" agrees the critic of the San Francisco Examiner. "Realism both as to settings and actions of the players is its dominant characteristics. In Renee Adoree the screen has developed a new dramatic actress whose faculty for emotional expression seems unlimited."

Frank Lloyd Finishes Filming "Black Oxen"

With the return of Frank Lloyd and his cameraman, Norbert F. Brodin, from a second trip to Big Bear Lake, California, last week the filming of Mr. Lloyd's first independent production, "Black Oxen," to be released as a First National Picture, was completed.

The Atherton story which has been adapted to the screen by Frank Lloyd and Mary O'Hara is now being cut, edited and titled and it is expected that it will be ready for delivery to First National within the next three weeks. It is expected that "Black Oxen" will go to the exhibitor in eight reels or about 7,500 feet. Corinne Griffith and Conway Tearle are featured.

Vidor in New York to Film Exteriors

King Vidor, who has been engaged by Metro to direct Laurette Taylor in "Happiness," arrived in New York last week with several members of his staff to film many important exterior scenes here. Mr. Vidor will remain in New York for six weeks or more, after which with his staff and Miss Taylor and J. Hartley Manners, author of the play, he will go back to Hollywood to complete production.

After Miss Taylor has completed "Happiness," she will appear before the camera in "One Night in Rome," also written by Mr. Manners, who is Miss Taylor's husband. Both these plays are rated among the most successful ever produced on the American stage. With Miss Taylor as the star, "Happiness" and "One Night in Rome" have played up and down the length and breadth of this country and abroad.

Mr. Vidor's choice as director for Miss Taylor is a logical one since it was he who so successfully directed Miss Taylor in the Metro picturization of "Peg O' My Heart," another of Miss Taylor's and Mr. Manners' spectacular successes.

"The Dangerous Maid" Has Been Completed

Constance Talmadge has finished "The Dangerous Maid," a Joseph M. Schenck production, directed by Victor Heerman for First National release. It is a romantic comedy-drama of merrie olde England, in which she has the role of a madcap little rebel who dons a cavalier's sword and costume, and engages in a thrilling series of adventures with the officers of the king.

The story gives Constance her first opportunity to play a dramatic role, and the picture, though it is said to contain many humorous situations of a side-splitting nature, is reported to be replete with romance and love interest.

Conway Tearle, who was Norma Talmadge's leading man in "Ashes of Vengeance," also is featured in support of Constance in "The Dangerous Maid."

"The Leavenworth Case" Named as Most Popular Mystery Story

Whitman Bennett recently sent to one thousand exhibitors a request that they advise him what character of pictures had sure-fire entertainment values. Of the replies received, 80 per cent. of the theatre managers declared in favor of mystery stories, provided the mystery was sustained to the end of the picture. The three qualities that go to make a mystery picture a box office success, according to the exhibitors, are love interest, environment of wealth, and keeping the solution unknown until the end.

Mr. Bennett asked for these opinions when he contributed to Vitagraph his second super-feature, "The Leavenworth Case," a picturization of the famous novel by Anna Katherine Green, which has been booked for a week's run in the Granada Theatre, San Francisco. Mr. Bennett had chosen this classic of all detective novels as being the most ingenious in plot of any mystery story ever written. Mr. Bennett and his director, Charles Giblyn, and his continuity writer, Eve Stuyvesant, directed all efforts in adapting the story for the film to sustaining the mystery as skillfully as Miss Green had done.

The questionnaire sent out by Mr. Bennett made no reference to "The Leavenworth Case." It asked the exhibitor to name the most popular detective story. Of the 650 replies received, 300 of them referred to "The Leavenworth Case."

Warner Officials Laud "Tiger Rose"

"A superb picture—a photoplay that we, or any other organization, would be proud to present."

That is the consensus of opinion of the Warner officials following a private showing of "Tiger Rose," starring Lenore Ulric, the screen adaptation of David Belasco's famous stage play of the same name.

"Woman-Proof" Scores A White Way Triumph

"Woman-Proof," Thomas Meighan's latest for Paramount, opened at the Rivoli Sunday and shortly after the opening of the evening's second performance it was necessary to stop the sale of tickets.

"It is extremely well acted—by Thomas Meighan and the rest—and its continuity runs smoothly," said the critic for the Herald. "Simplicity and naturalness are its chief charms," said the Tribune reviewer. The Times reviewer said: "The acting in this film is especially good. Any one wandering off Broadway into the Rivoli will find that this production will make him think better of motion pictures."

"'Woman-Proof' is an entertaining story," said the World, "acted flawlessly, without a solitary attempt either to stop and teach a lesson or to sidetrack and put on a fashion show." And the Evening World: "After years of picture-going we have never found a more popular male star than Tommy, both with the men and womenfolk."

To make way for Sam Wood's production, "His Children's Children," the second of Paramount's "demonstration" pictures, which is scheduled for the Rivoli next week, "Woman-Proof" will be transferred to the Rialto Sunday.

Little Theatre Films on Way

Little Theatre Films, a newly organized group of active workers and artistic sympathizers with the so-called "non-commercial" motion picture, have just completed a contract for the nation-wide distribution of their first picture. Through arrangement made with the American Kreuger and Toll Corporation, agents of the Swedish Biograph Company, Little Theatre Films will release "Mortal Clay," written and directed by Victor Seastrom.

The Little Theatre movement of the screen originated in Hollywood last spring and has now been permanently organized for the purpose of providing through existing Little Theatre groups, university dramatic societies and women's clubs a practical and national release for those artistic films which cannot always find a place in the commercial theatre.

The advisory board of the organization is composed of Hugo Ballin, Paul Bern, Ralph Block, Charles Chaplin, William DeMille, Howard Dietz, Walter Prichard Eaton, Douglas Fairbanks, Clayton Hamilton, Rupert Hughes, Rex Ingram, Charles Lapworth, Horace Liveright, Ernst Lubitsch, George Marion, June Mathis, Mary Pickford, Frank Reicher, Victor Seastrom, Robert E. Sherwood, Erich von Stroheim, Maurice Tourneur, Oswald Garrison Villard, Rob Wagner and Stark Young. Kenneth MacGowan and Myron M. Stearns are the New York representatives of the movement, which is led by Curtis Melnitz, president; Albert Lewin, vice-president, and Joseph Jackson, secretary.

Victor Seastrom created "Mortal Clay" with Jennie Hasselquist and Eosta Ekman in the leading roles. In a signed statement, Charles Chaplin calls this picture "a most beautifully prepared and executed work of art, an inspiration to all lovers of beauty and a vehicle that should elevate the whole standard of motion pictures." Hundreds of prominent leaders of the profession and the Motion Picture Directors' Association of Hollywood indorsed an extraordinary round robin in praise of "Mortal Clay," calling it "a beautifully unfolded, finely acted and photographed mediaeval tale of love and romance, brought by a touch of directing genius through splendid development to a powerful and convincing climax."

J. S. Woody Happy Over Coast Runs

The week of October 20 was Associated Exhibitors Week in Los Angeles. It was not officially denominated as such but it was true, nevertheless, and the fact was commented upon by the newspapers and men high in picture circles.

In Los Angeles are six long run houses: The Mission, Grauman's Million Dollar, the California, Miller's, Talley's and the Criterion—and in the downtown district, six weekly change houses: Grauman's Metropolitan, Pantages, the Loew State, the Hillstreet, Clune's and the Symphony.

Of these twelve, Associated Exhibitors features occupied four, which caused J. S. Woody, general manager of the organization, to comment: "One-third of the premier theatres in the motion picture capital packing 'em in with this Associated product. Not so bad, my boy, not so bad."

The world premiere run of the Mack Sennett Associated Exhibitors attraction, Mabel Normand in "The Extra Girl," was in full blast at the Mission, and Charles Ray's big hit, "The Courtship of Myles Standish," was continuing its indefinite run, which also was a world premiere, at Grauman's Million Dollar Theatre. Douglas MacLean's "Going Up," his first independent starring production, opened most auspiciously at Grauman's Metropolitan, and Leah Baird in "Is Divorce a Failure?" was playing to packed houses at Pantages.

First National Film Is Finished

"Her Temporary Husband," the First National picture, with one of the largest casts in the history of the movies, is finished.

The farce-comedy was directed by John McDermott.

Goldstein Goes to Coast

E. H. Goldstein, treasurer of Universal, left New York several days ago for the Coast to look after affairs at Universal City during the absence of Julius Bernheim. Mr. Bernheim was suddenly called to the bedside of his mother, who is dangerously ill in Laupheim, Germany.

England Welcomes the Film "Trilby"

If the report of one of England's foremost reviewers of motion pictures, Bowler Reed, regulates the sales of the Associated First National picture, "Trilby," starring Andree Lafayette, the film version of this famous play is destined to meet with unprecedented success throughout the United Kingdom. There is, perhaps, no better way of telling of Mr. Reed's views of "Trilby" than to print a few excerpts from his report:

"'Trilby' is one of the very few plays that will stand revival and I have been so much impressed by a private view of this production that I am inclined to urge you to secure a date at once. Richard Walton Tully has made a fine scenario and production of the late George du Maurier's famous novel and play. Also, he has discovered an ideal Trilby in Andree Lafayette, a Parisian actress who not only has beauty and charm but acts the part to perfection. She is the best Trilby I have seen—and I have seen many. The direction of James Young is entirely satisfactory and the casting is generally good.

"The photoplay has but few sub-titles, no unnecessary ones; the photography is completely satisfactory. The best effect of the film is that the great story is so smoothly and intelligently screened, it is as interesting and convincing as the book, it is more lifelike than any stage performance could be."

Rogers on Coast

Charles R. Rogers, general manager of distribution of Mastodon Films, Inc., has gone to the Pacific Coast on a sales trip in behalf of the organization's 1923-24 series of C. C. Burr productions. He will also visit the exchange centers in Oregon and Washington.

Fox Corporation to Spend $27,000,000 on Production and Development

New Studio Plant to Be Built in Beverly Hills—Many Books and Plays Purchased

WILLIAM FOX

BUILDING upon the firm belief that this country is entering upon a period of solid prosperity, and planning upon the conviction that people the world over in the coming year will attend motion picture theatres in greater numbers than ever before and will be willing to spend more money for motion picture entertainment than ever before, provided the quality of their entertainment is distinctly improved, Fox Film Corporation will spend $27,000,000 between January 1, 1924, and January 1, 1925, in a great, expensive and ambitious program of production and business development.

This is the substance of an announcement made recently by William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, which is one of the major motion picture organizations of the world. Of the $27,000,000, more than $20,000,000 will be spent on new productions to be made in the Los Angeles and New York Studios; $2,000,000, at a conservative estimate, will be invested in plays and books from which high class pictures designed to appeal to the constantly improving taste of theatregoers, and $5,000,000 will be expended in the new studio and grounds in Los Angeles.

Mr. Fox, in reply to definite questions, made a brief statement explaining precisely why he has resolved upon his tremendous program for 1924.

"Close study of the situation has convinced me," said Mr. Fox, "that the amusement business of America, Canada and the world at large is on the threshold of an era of the greatest prosperity we have ever enjoyed. I most earnestly believe that our country is finally settling down to work and to stable sensible productive effort in all lines of work. There have been times in the past when I felt pessimistic, but this is the time when I am most distinctly optimistic. However, it is not sufficient to be merely optimistic. In order to enjoy one's shares of the business that is plainly in sight one must give the people who are willing to buy the kind of entertainment they want to buy. That is what I propose to do in the coming season. That is why I am willing, with my board of directors, to spend $27,000,000 in productions and expansion. People will no longer flock to the theatres and spend their money to see inferior motion picture entertainment.

"As is their right, they are demanding the best—the best stories, whether originally written for the screen, or whether taken from book or play; the best direction, the best acting and the best possible settings. My judgment is that if a motion picture concern of first rate equipment and facilities can provide the people with this class of screen entertainment in large quantity, that concern need not lie awake at night worrying about investment.

"Our production program must not be taken to mean that we are going to indulge in extravagant salaries and exorbitant, reckless expenditure. Many persons seem to have an idea that profits in the motion picture business are fabulous and that the business can continue in an orgy of extravagance. That is not so at all. It requires rigid economy and tireless energy to obtain a satisfactory revenue without injuring the exhibitor. This has been our motto from the day we began business. There is no use making a contract that will pauperize the theatre owner, just because a director decided to use 3,000 persons in his cast when 300 would have answered every purpose."

At the present time, according to the announcement authorized by Mr. Fox, his corporation has now actively at work in Los Angeles and New York sixteen dramatic production companies and nine comedy production companies and in addition Fox News, Educational Division and Industrial Division maintain a constant, regular production output. These various producing organizations are employing 2,500 persons, and a weekly expenditure which stands now at a little more than $300,000 a week will be increased to between $400,000 and $450,000 immediately after January 1. The general expansion of production work will run the cost up to approximately $20,000,000 for the year of 1924, Mr. Fox states.

Among the new plays and books purchased by Fox Film Corporation for high class motion picture production such as Mr. Fox foresees must be had to meet the desires of a public which is weary of inferior pictures are "The Fool," by Channing Pollock; "Loyalties," by John Galsworthy; "The Man Who Came Back," which was dramatized by Jules Eckert Goodman from a story by John Fleming Wilson, and for which the record cash price in such motion picture investments was paid by Mr. Fox; "The Warrens of Virginia," David Belasco's play; "It Is the Law," by Elmer Rice; "Strathmore," by Ouida Bergere; "The Hunted Woman," by James Oliver Curwood; "Hearts of Oak," by James A. Hearn, and a score of other plays and books aggregating a $2,000,000 investment.

Possibly one of the strongest and most substantial evidences of Mr. Fox's confidence in American prosperity and improved world conditions generally is the new studio plant to be erected in the Beverly Hills-Westwood section of Los Angeles. This property of 444 acres is between the City of Los Angeles proper and Santa Monica on the Pacific shore. It is bounded on the north by the Los Angeles Country Club and on the south by the Rancho Golf and the Hillcrest Country Club, and is skirted on one side by the Pico Boulevard and on the other side by the Santa Monica Boulevard, the two main thoroughfares from the heart of Los Angeles to the Pacific Ocean. All of the studio buildings, which will soon be under construction, are of the mission type of architecture, and are of concrete fireproof construction. The stages will be among the largest cinema stages in the world, and the general equipment of the new Fox productions plant will be of the best obtainable.

In connection with his new Los Angeles studio plant, Mr. Fox is erecting also what is designed to be the largest and best equipped studio laboratory in the world. The total cost of the new plant will exceed $5,000,000, as has been stated. When this plant is completed and in full operation the present New York studios and laboratory will also continue under full operation, Mr. Fox's policy being to increase and expand production both in Los Angeles and in New York.

In the near future the original Fox studio and grounds will be dismantled to make way for the advance of Los Angeles business and homes toward the Pacific. The grounds will be cut up into lots for banks, a theatre, department store, a hotel and other business enterprises, but production work will not be interrupted or lessened in any degree. Mr. Fox will go personally to Los Angeles on January 1 to supervise the construction of the new plant and to oversee the larger details of his whole $27,000,000 program.

Mr. Fox pointed out in the course of a general talk on the film situation and his own plans that since September 1, in accordance with his policy of expansion, he has extended his business into every country in the world except Russia. Since September 1, he said, he has opened distribution offices and business agencies in Japan, Spain, Austria, Germany, India, Mexico, Cuba, Denmark, Norway, Sweden, Holland and Czecho-Slovakia.

Calling attention also to various items of his confident and ambitious program for the future Mr. Fox stated that he will open on November 19 a new theatre in Philadelphia, where he has established a sixteen-story building and motion picture theatre seating 3,000 people, and that he has recently opened a new theatre in Oakland, Cal. He said, too, that he has acquired, as the headquarters for his European business, a new building in London at 13 Bernera street, which, during the war, was the Canadian Army headquarters.

"I believe in the future of motion pictures," said Mr. Fox. "I am building on that belief. That is all there is to it."

Fox Films a Morris Story

Among the William Fox productions for the 1923-24 season is the adaption of the story by Gouverneur Morris, entitled "You Can't Get Away With It." Percy Marmont has the principal role.

Supporting Marmont are Betty Bouton, as the girl, Malcolm McGregor, Barbara Tennant, Grace Morse, Clarissa Selwyn and Charles Cruz. Rowland V. Lee directed the picture with rare technical ability.

SCENES FROM TOM MIX'S LATEST FOX PRODUCTION, "NORTH OF HUDSON BAY"

Fox Announces Eight Great Specials, Setting a New Standard for Screen

Prominent in the list of productions arranged for the 1923-24 season by William Fox are eight specials which are expected to establish a new high standard for pictures. Most of them are from original stage plays or widely known stories.

The list includes "Six Cylinder Love," "You Can't Get Away with It," "North of Hudson Bay," "Temple of Venus," "Hoodman Blind," "The Net," "The Shepherd King" and "Gentle Julia."

Ernest Truex, who played in the stage production of "Six Cylinder Love" which pleased Broadway two years ago, has the leading role in the Fox picture. The original play, written by William Anthony McGuire, ran for fifty-three weeks in New York and then furnished the whole country with a series of laughs on the road. Truex seems to have met with the same success in pictures that marked his work on the stage. He is ably supported by Florence Eldridge, Marjorie Milton, Harold J. Mann and Thomas Mitchell. The picture was directed by Elmer Clifton.

Adapted from the story by Gouverneur Morris, the film version of "You Can't Get Away With It" has for its star the remarkable Percy Marmont, whose work in the Fox production "If Winter Comes" has made his name internationally known. He is surrounded by a capable cast consisting of Betty Bouton, Malcolm McGregor, Barbara Tennant, Grace Morse, Clarissa Selwyn and Charles Cruze. Rowland V. Lee directed the filming. The story, a typical Morris product, points to the strength of the moral code and the necessity for world conventions, in a striking way.

"North of Hudson Bay" is a Tom Mix picture, notable for several reasons, but primarily because it places the virile western star in an entirely new type of role. Instead of playing as a brancho-busting, hard-fighting, quick-shooting cowpuncher, Mix appears as a prospector in the frozen country beyond the last trading post. The picture was directed by John Ford from the story by Jules Furthman. In the cast are Kathleen Key, Eugene Palette, Will Walling, Frank Campeau, Frank Leigh and Fred Kohler.

"The Temple of Venus" opened at the Central Theatre in New York on October 29, scoring an immediate success. Directed by Henry Otto on Santa Cruz Island in the Pacific Ocean, this picture becomes one of the most spectacular novelties of the screen. Mary Philbin, winner of beauty prizes, is supported by a cast of a thousand west coast girls selected for their remarkable good looks. David Butler has the masculine lead. While the plot of the story is based on the love element, the entire production is a phantasy, featured by underwater photography, fantastic scenes.

"Hoodman Blind," adapted from the venerable success of the vintage of Wallacks, 1885, is a new Fox production which promises to be one of the best of the year. Written by Sir Henry Arthur Jones and Wilson Barrett, the play opened in London and came to New York in the same year. David Butler has the masculine lead. The picture is replete with extraordinary fight scenes, flashes of terrible ocean storms and shipwreck. A capable cast lends the principals strong support.

Another picture which promises to rank with the season's leaders is "The Net," from the play by Maravene Thompson. J. Gordon Edwards directed the production, the cast in which consists of Barbara Castleton, Raymond Bloomer, Albert Roscoe, Peggy Davis, Arthur Gordoni, Helen Tracy and others. The story tells of the folly of youth and points to the price that eventually is paid. The stage play was such a decided success that the picture, in the belief of the producers, cannot be less and is more than likely to be even greater.

There is a noticeable tendency toward the spectacle picture in the Fox list this year and none of them is believed to excel in this respect his production "The Shepherd King," another special directed by J. Gordon Edwards. This picture also is an adaption, having been taken from the stage play by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves, produced by William A. Brady. Violet Mersereau has the principal role in a cast of European performers, the same group, incidentally, which appeared in the spectacle picture "Nero." The Shepherd King" was filmed in the Nile country, where Director Edwards used thousands of extras, recruited from the wanderers of the desert and the hordes of Cairo.

No list of adaptations could be complete without at least one from the pen of Booth Tarkington. Accordingly, among the Fox specials is "Gentle Julia," with petite Bessie Love in the title role. This touching story of juvenile sweethearts, with its humor and pathos as real and tragic as any that come in the lives of adults, promises to become one of the most appealing pictures of the year. The picture was directed by Rowland V. Lee. A large cast presents the story with the natural ease which marks the writings of the Hoosier author. Harold Goodwin enacts the role of Noble Dill, opposite Miss Love.

This list of eight specials, in the belief of the producers, will assure the public one of the most interesting picture seasons in the annals of the industry.

"Gentle Julia" a Good One

Listed prominently among William Fox screen adaptations from the 1923-24 season is the Booth Tarkington story "Gentle Julia," Bessie Love has the title role and Harold Goodwin is the juvenile. Rowland V. Lee directed the picture.

The balance of the cast consists of Frank Elliott, Charles K. French, Clyde Benson, Frank Norcross, Harvey Clark, Emma Tansey, Harry Dunkinson, Jack Rollins, Frances Guant, Bill Irving, Mde. Sul-Te-Wan, Agnes Aker, William Lester, Gypsy Norman, Frank Farrington, Virginia Johnson, Mary Arthur, Richard Billings and Edwin Johnson.

"Six Cylinder Love" Speedy Film

Remembered for its success during a run of fifty-three weeks on Broadway, the play by William Anthony McGuire called "Six Cylinder Love," promises to exceed its own speed record as a picture produced by William Fox.

Ernest Truex who played the leading role in the legitimate production, has the same part in the picture.

Florence Eldridge, Marjorie Milton, Harold J. Mann and Thomas Mitchell give characterizations of the principals.

Clifton and Truex Produce Ideal Picture

Seldom indeed does circumstance permit the joint efforts of a director and leading actor in the same production when their exact types are essential to the success of the finished task. This unique combination was realized in the William Fox production of "Six Cylinder Love," which was directed by Elmer Clifton and starred Ernest Truex.

Adapted from the original stage success by William Anthony McGuire, "Six Cylinder Love" required a director whose sense of humor would incorporate in the picture all the fun of the play, as well as the technical elements necessary in any good production. And it was essential that the lead be handled by a man who could actually live in his role.

Accordingly, Elmer Clifton, director of the great Fox picture "Down to the Sea in Ships," was selected to direct "Six Cylinder Love." Ernest Truex, who played the lead on Broadway for a year, took his familiar place on the studio set as the hero. The result was a picture as near perfection as could be expected, it is stated.

One of the first remarkable feats performed by Clifton was an innovation used in "shooting" lavish cabaret scenes with a marine background. In the foreground a scrim was stretched taut across the dancing floor. Upon this netting was painted a deep sea scene in rich colors. Beneath the powerful studio lights the background of the set was blotted out. When the front lights were extinguished, the dance hall came to view, showing the dancers in silhouette, with the backdrop apparently miles away. The result was a marvelous study in perspective and composition. To enhance its beauty, the director used girls from George's White's Scandals and the Follies.

In arranging the various sets Clifton went the limit, using 250 stage mechanics, sparing no expense or trouble in getting exactly what he wanted.

Immediately after he completed "Six Cylinder Love," Clifton was assigned to direct the new Fox Civil war picture from the David Belasco success, "The Warrens of Virginia."

Ernest Truex first entered the picture field in "The Good Little Devil," with Mary Pickford, after having played in the David Belasco stage play in the same role. He is 34 years old and has been acting for 28 years. His real screen career was launched with his appearance in "Six Cylinder Love," which also proved to be his greatest work on the stage. Fourteen New York critics saw his work in this piece and every review was favorable.

It is obvious then, that with these two men at the wheel, "Six Cylinder Love" was certain to run smoothly and take the hills on high.

"Temple of Venus" Hailed as Screen Innovation

In presenting "The Temple of Venus" as one of his 1923-24 special productions, William Fox offers a unique picture. The picture is frankly called a veritable "screen follies," with its cast of beautiful girls in bathing costumes, its under-water photography and its general air of spectacular elaboration.

Directed by Henry Otto on Santa Cruz Island. "The Temple of Venus" was first presented at the Central Theatre in New York on October 29, to an appreciative audience. Mary Philbin, noted on stage and screen for her beauty, heads a cast of 1,000 bathing girls recruited from the ranks of the most beautiful performers to be found on the West Coast. David Butler has the masculine lead.

The story is a love idyll with all the fantastical elements of "A Midsummer Night's Dream." The crystal grottos of Santa Cruz Island, the incomparable calm of the Pacific and the tropical beauty of the island itself, combine to present a picture more dazzling than the most luxurious set of a Broadway extravaganza. Considerable trick photography and some actually remarkable under water shots, add to the attraction. And above all, there are girls, of every type and all of them formed appropriately to be inhabitants of "The Temple of Venus."

In support of Miss Philbin and Butler are Phyllis Haver, Celeste Lee, Senorita Consuella, Marilynn Boyd, Lorraine Easton, Helen Virgil, William Walling, Micky McBain, Alice Day, William Boyd, Leon Barry, Robert Cline, Frank Keller and an enormous cast of extras.

In order to provide adequate lighting facilities for many of the scenes, Director Otto found it necessary to have a cable constructed from the mainland to Santa Cruz Island. This was one of the many heavy costs of the production, aside from the usual payroll expenses.

While the plot of the story is serious and the acting of the principals is excellent, little attempt has been made to emphasize anything other than the spectacular beauty and bizzarre elaboration of the scenes. "The Temple of Venus" is, it is said, distinctly different in every phase, from any motion picture ever produced and there are those who believe that it will open the way to ultimate "motion picture musical comedy."

Fox Early Releases Meet with Success

Returns from all sections of the country and in some instances from abroad, indicate the success which has attended the first series of William Fox specials released earlier in the current season, according to that company's announcement.

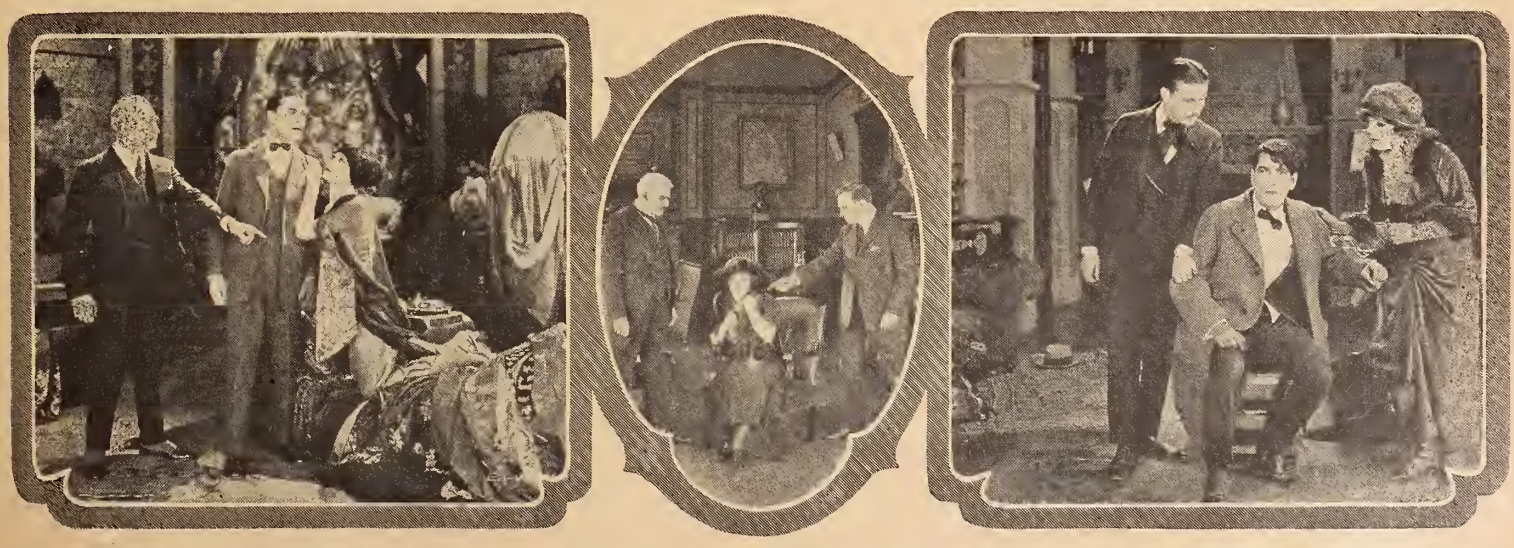
Leading all of this group is the Fox picture version of A. S. M. Hutchinson's novel "If Winter Comes," directed in England by Harry Millarde, with Percy Marmont in the leading role. This picture opened on Broadway early in September and still is showing to capacity audiences, with indications of an indefinite run. It also is showing in England and has been presented in more than 100 leading cities of America.

"Monna Vanna," from Maurice Maeterlinck's work, is another Fox special which was acclaimed. This production made a good impression in New York and met with equal success when it was presented elsewhere.

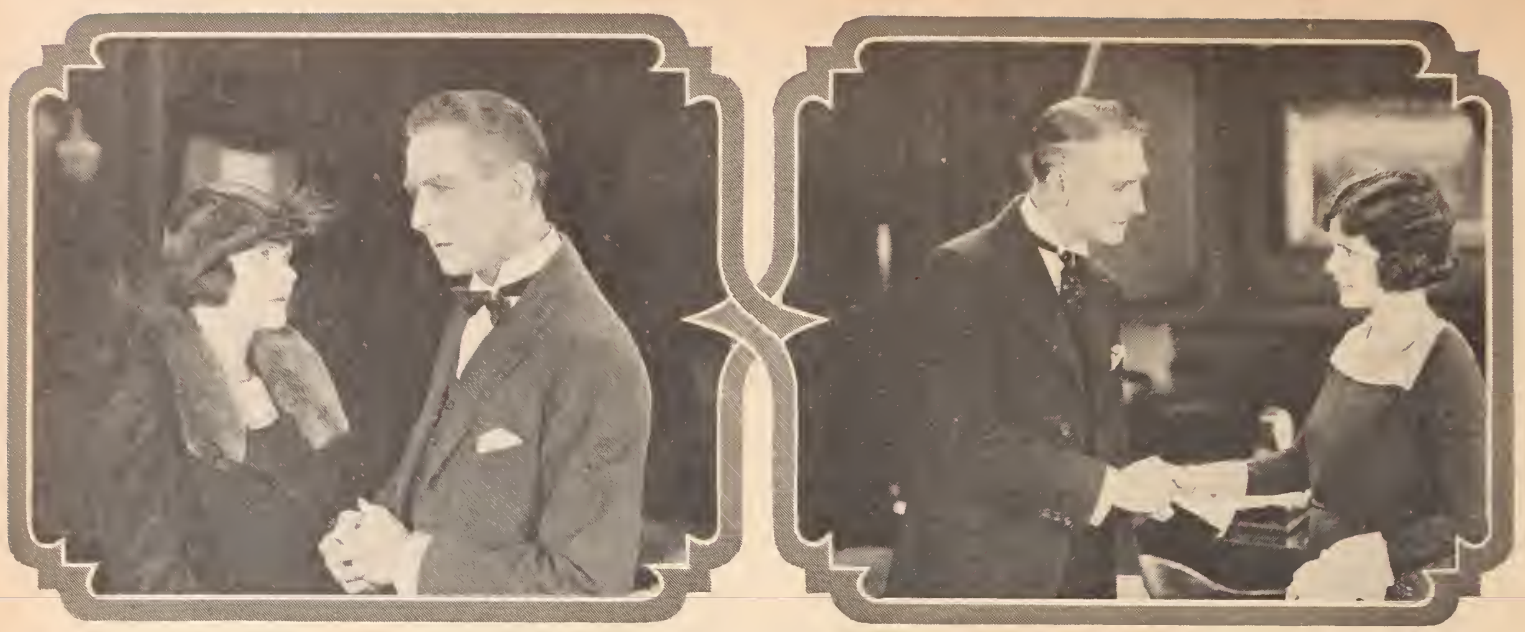
Few pictures of the year were more effective than "The Silent Command," a J. Gordon Edwards production with Edmund Lowe, Martha Mansfield, Betty Jewell and Alma Tell. Opening on Broadway in September, this production has received praise from critics and public wherever it has played. A tribute to the American navy, the production was included in many cities as a part of the program on Navy Day, Oct. 27, which also was the anniversary of the birth of Theodore Roosevelt.

Hailed throughout the country as a great thriller, the Lincoln J. Carter picture called "The Eleventh Hour," is meeting with the same success beyond New York which attended the premiere on Broadway.

Another early Fox release was the Tom Mix comedy special "Soft Boiled," introducing the western star as a timid shoe clerk. It provides a good laugh.



WILLIAM FOX PRESENTS "THE NET," STARRING BARBARA CASTLETON, RAYMOND BLOOMER AND ALBERT ROSCOE



SCENES FROM "YOU CAN'T GET AWAY WITH IT," A COMING FOX PRODUCTION

Tom Mix Appearing in a New Type of Role

Tom Mix in furs instead of chaps, on snow shoes instead of on Tony, his wonder horse—mushing through dreary white wastes instead of cactus desert—that, in a line, is the William Fox production "North of Hudson Bay." The picture was directed by John Ford from the story by Jules Furthman.

In support of the western star are Kathleen Key, Eugene Palette, Will Walling, Frank Campeau, Frank Leigh and Fred Kohler.

"Billeda" is a drama of the vast. The story relates the experiences of a youngster who tracked from his little home in Canada into the desolate north country in search of gold. His elder brother, a successful prospector, had struck a rich vein but while the boy was enroute to meet him, the older man was shot and under the rude justice of the north country, the man believed to have been his murderer was sent on the journey of death.

This journey of death is a sentence to strike out into the waste without food, arms or fire. The boy, meeting up with the luckless victim of this sentence, fed him and for his act, he too was sentenced to take the long trail. A crooked factor, or governor, was responsible for the sentence, having in mind the rich ore left by the older brother.

But it develops that the murder actually had been committed by a man other than the old prospector who was sentenced. But this phase of the mystery goes undiscovered until the younger brother escapes from the journey of death, returns to the settlement and after a series of hair raising experiences solves the problem. Of course, there is a girl. She loves him before she knows that he is the owner of the gold mine, so they really marry for love and everyone left alive is happy.

The story is different from any in which Mix has played before and he performs with his usual ability, it is said. The cast is exceptionally adequate.

Spectacular Scenes in Coming Fox Picture

Filmed in the Holy Land, within easy camel ride of the Valley of the Kings where Tut-Ankh-Amen's tomb was found, the William Fox production of "The Shepherd King," promises to be another spectacle of exceptional merit in his 1923-24 releases. The picture was directed by J. Gordon Edwards, Violet Mersereau has the leading role. With the exception of Gordon McEdwards, the cast consists otherwise of continental artists most of whom appeared in the Fox picture "Nero."

"The Shepherd King" was adapted from the stage play by Wright Lorimer and Arnold Reeves and produced by William A. Brady. It established a notable success as a legitimate production. The picture "shot" in the shadows of the Sphinx and the pyramids, shows thousands of desert Bedouins in their native element, hundreds of camels and as many tiny donkeys used as beasts of burden over the burning sands of the Nile country.

The story tells of the love of David, the shepherd king, for Princess Michal, daughter of Saul, the king of Israel. Warfare, intrigue, dramatic moments of intense power, all combine to make one of the most spectacular pictures of the year, it is stated. The battle between David and Goliath, the giant of the Philistines, was filmed in detail. Samuel Belastra was cast as Goliath and his proportions are said to warrant the selection.

The march of the Children of Israel, being led out of Egypt by Moses, required 5,000 desert Arabs, an army of camels and donkeys and long days of steady work beneath a desert sun.

Supporting Miss Mersereau, who has the role of Princess Michal, are Nerio Bernardi, Guido Trento, Edy Darclea, Ferruccio Biancini, Ernesto Tranquili, Virginia Lucchetti, Adraino Bocanera, Allessandro Salvini, Amerigo Di Giorgio, Samuel Belestra, Eduardo Belsamo and Gordon McEdwards. Most of the European performers in the cast starred in "Nero," which will be remembered as a notable Fox special a year or two ago.

Director Edwards and the American performers spent weeks in the desert before he felt that his work and been completed.

Fox Spectacle Filmed in Shadow of Pyramids

J. Gordon Edwards has not contented himself with making the William Fox production of "The Shepherd King" an impressive spectacle. He has made it a vivid page from ancient history with its incidents reenacted in the actual scenes where they first took place.

Of the millions who will see the picture, there are doubtless some who would be perfectly satisfied with those brilliant illusions created in the studio by elaborate sets and clever photography. But Mr. Fox has planned to please also the discriminating who insist on reality and whose taste is flawless.

Those who have traveled in the East and those to whom it is a dream of future travel will sit enraptured while all the beauty and colorful charm of Egypt and Palestine unfold before them.

In making "The Shepherd King" Director J. Gordon Edwards and his company spent nearly a year in the shadow of the pyramids. Lavish settings of ancient temples were erected on the desert. Vast hordes of picturesque, dark-skinned Bedouins were employed for the mob scenes. Thousands of camels were pressed into service. The Sphinx, the lazy Nile—all the colorful backgrounds of the desert go into the making of this great film.

The principle male roles are played by Continental actors and Michal—Saul's youngest daughter—is played by Violet Mersereau who scored such a success in Nero some time ago. All the characters are cast in strict conformance to type. There is not a single false note, it is stated.

The story itself has been called the strongest love story ever told. When it was produced as a play in 1904, it was given the highest praise by New York critics and later, when it went on tour, by critics throughout the country. All the dramatic power of the play has been retained in the picture, and added to it is the tremendous advantage of the natural settings and native cast.

NEWS AND REVIEWS OF SHORT SUBJECTS AND SERIALS

Pathe Offers Big Two-Reel Animal Film "Why Elephants Leave Home"

Pathe will on December 9 release a special two-reel production "Why Elephants Leave Home" which is said to be unique in the field of nature films. According to the announcement it "is not a sex picture, neither is it a tale of unrequited love nor a romance burdened with a perpetual triangle" but is described as an amazing adventure depicting for the first time on the screen the thrills and perils incident to the hunting and capturing of wild elephants and training them to the service of man.

Pathe points out the fact that the picture has been cut to two reels from its original length of 6000 feet thereby condensing the action and getting away from a criticism of too great length, also that there is nothing that would repel the most sensitive in the audience, as there is no killing, bloodshed or evidence of cruelty. Further that the method of its presentation follows a humorous, smile-provoking order and every effort has been made to get away from a plain matter-of-fact treatment. The subtitles which are by Katherine Hilliker will, it is said, win a smile and a laugh while the action is provoking a thrill.

The Pathe statement contains the following description of the production: "In India and Ceylon wild elephant herds multiply to such an extent that wide stretches of cultivated areas are devastated by the beasts during their foraging expeditions from the jungle. To prevent these depredations, the Government conducts an "Elephant Kraal," in which thousands of natives participate, the native being qualified by agility and experience to cope with the hazards entailed in the perilous task of corraling the thousands of untamed pachyderms.

"The action of the kraal in 'Why Elephants Leave Home' was taken in Ceylon. Every phase of the perilous round-up is entertainingly shown with an abundance of thrills and human interest sidelights. Tamed elephants are used as decoys and eventually as the actual captors in these kraals. How these domesticated animals, responding to the demands of their masters, lead their untamed fellows into the great stockade and then complete the capture by pulling them to the anchorage of the jungle trees is one of the most interesting and thrilling chapters contributed to the screen's record of wild-animal life in its native haunts."

It is announced that "Why Elephants Leave Home" will be accompanied by a full compliment of accessories including one and three sheets, eight 11x4 sepia views of thrill scenes, five 8x10 black and while stills, slides, ads, cuts and mats. Tie-ups are also being arranged with natural history museums and sportsmen's organizations.

Century Signs Baby Dawn O'Day

Julius and Abe Stern announce the following new players have been engaged for Century Comedies; Dawn O'Day, Lillian Hackett, Harry McCoy and William Irving. Dawn O'Day is a charming little actress just five years old who has already won praise for her work in "Moonshine Valley" and "The Spanish Dancer." She will make her debut with Century in "The Poor Little Rich Pup" starring Pal the dog and in this connection it is interesting to note that Baby Peggy made her Century debut in a comedy starring the dog Brownie. The other players are known for their work with Sennett, Jack White and Christie.

Heavy Exploitation for Doyle Film

Prominent theatres are heavily booking the Pathe two-reel special "Is Conan Doyle Right?" and are said to be making unusually extensive plans for exploitation as the nature of the subject admirably lends itself to this. Among recent bookings are Stanley Company, Jensen and Von Herberg, and Ike Libson for his houses in Cincinnati, Dayton, Columbus and Indianapolis.

Centuries Finished

Three more Centuries have been completed recently. Arvid Gillstrom has finished "Boys Will Be Boys" starring Buddy Messinger; Bobb Kerr has filmed "The Process Server" featuring Jack Earle the giant and Noel Smith has completed a Century Follies Girls two-reeler.

Educational's "Secrets of Life" Prove Popular on Pacific Coast

Educational's new "Secrets of Life" series of single reel subjects is meeting with great success during pre-release showings at leading theatres on the Pacific Coast which bid fair to establish it as one of the most popular series on the market.

The first of this series of Louis H. Tolhurst's microscopic films dealing with insects, "The Ant," was shown at the new Criterion Theatre in Los Angeles and Manager H. B. Wright reported to Educational in part as follows: "After looking over nearly forty reels to get a reel suitable for the opening of the Criterion Theatre with the premieres of Charles Chaplin's "A Woman of Paris" under our new policy of two de luxe shows daily at $1.00 and $1.65 I finally selected the Educational film "The Ant." I am mighty glad I did, for this little picture has been a riot at every show. The audience applauded vociferously each time it was shown."

It is also announced that "The Bee" met with the same sort of a reception during its run at Loew's State in Los Angeles, and as a consequence was booked for Loew's Warfield in San Francisco. It was accorded exceptional reviews by the press, some classing it as the real feature of the program.

The popularity of this series with theatre patrons is believed to be due to the fact that Louis H. Tolhurst, the scientist who produced these films has been able to present these interesting microscopic pictures in such a manner that they provide real entertainment for all classes and offset prejudices which certain exhibitors and patrons have against subjects of an educational nature on the theatre screen.

Big Pathe Bookings

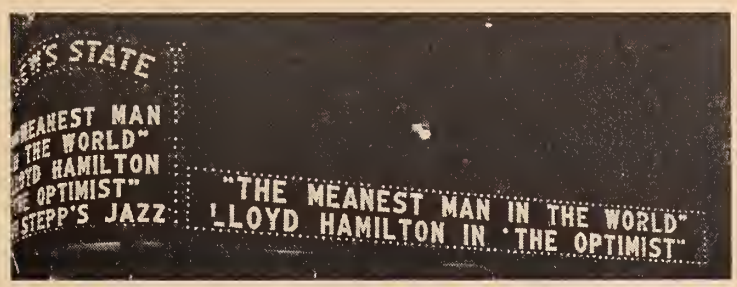
Following the record made by "It's A Gift" which was the only short comedy on Broadway last week, another Pathe single-reeler "The Knockout" one of the Dippy-Do-Dad series is being shown at the Strand during the current week. Pathe two-reel product has strongly invaded Philadelphia's theatrical stronghold on Market Street with "Asleep at the Switch" at the Stanley, "Frozen Hearts" at the Carlton and "Jus' Passin' Through" at the Victoria.

Our Gang in "Derby Day" on Pathe List for November 18

For release during week of November 18, Pathe offers a variety of subjects. Heading the list is an "Our Gang" comedy, "Derby Day," which is said to set a rapid pace for uproarious fun. It shows the little rascals staging a race-track event in which a wide assortment of "steeds" participate including a cow, pony, mule, several breeds of dogs and even a tricycle jockeyed by Farina.

More adventures are introduced in the Ruth Roland serial, "Ruth of the Range," which is in its sixth episode. Stan Laurel appears in a single reel comedy, "Save the Ship," in which a staid married man takes his family for a holiday on the rolling deep and encounters sword and flying fish.

The Aesop's Fable, "Farmer Al Falfa's Pet Cat," shows the havoc wrought by the mice when the cat temporarily deserts the homestead. Pathe Review 46 including a group of photographic gems, picnicking near the crater of a volcano, Chicago as photographed in the lens liar series, and a fishing section, "trolling for blues," and a pictorial section in Pathecolor.



GETTING AN EVEN BREAK

Loew's State in Los Angeles gave the two-reel Lloyd Hamilton Comedy, "The Optimist," a fifty-fifty split with the feature in the electrics. Don't be afraid to do this with your own house.

"Down in the Ships to See"

(Universal—Comedy—Two Reels)

Pal, the clever Century dog is featured in this two-reel comedy in which he is assisted in the fun-making by Roscoe Karns as his master who meets with varied experiences ranging from a near-thrashing by a man whose tent he has wrecked, a flirtation in which the girls chaperone takes a hand and finally a number of sequences on shipboard where Pal's master is chased all over the ship by an irate sailor. There is not much plot and the various incidents are but slightly related however there are several amusing situations and the canine star does some clever work as usual. —C. S. S.

"Derby Day"

(Pathe—Comedy—Two Reels)

The "Gang" has its own race track and its own collection of back yard thoroughbreds as the contestants in this number which has the usual large measure of delicious comedy. In the first reel, the gang runs a hot dog stand beside the race track and a real race furnishes the thrills. In the second, they have their own race track and the various members mount dogs, the mule, a bull and a goat. Little Farina rides a tricycle. It is amusement that all patrons will enjoy and features the famous gang to fine advantage.—M. K.

"Hang On"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

Ending with the thrill of a runaway rescue, this Cameo comedy gives the final impression of being satisfactory amusement. A "goose" chase and an exciting dinner scene showing the fiery effects of tobasco sauce are the best features of the number which is not unusual on the whole.—M. K.

"The Idea Man"

(Universal—Comedy—One Reel)

Not only is the theme of this comedy developed in an out-of the-ordinary manner but it also presents the star Bert Roach in several characterizations quite different from his familiar tramp role. As a tramp with bright ideas to sell he explains them to a possible buyer and acts them for him. They include travesties on Washington cutting down the cherry tree, the balcony scene from Romeo and Juliet, and others. It is amusing and cleverly done and should please the average patrons.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 45"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

Indians of the Ojibway tribe are pictured as the feature of this group. Some picturesque shots of the country and a few squaw and flapper types are included. The audience is given a glimpse of the interior and mechanism of an electric battery and lastly some beautiful views of the Pyrenees in color.—M. K.

'A Comedy of Terrors'

(F. B. O.—Series—Two Reels)

Round Seven of the second "Fighting Blood" series is very good entertainment. The interest is turned into slightly different channels this time, as a misunderstanding between the prize fighter and his trainer, Kelly, is the issue. Gale is kidnapped, apparently through Kelly's maneuvers, but it is only a scheme for Kelly to get more money to bet on Gale. Both girls figure, but Rosemary is more decidedly in the lead this time.—M. K.

"Lightning Love"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

As the title implies, lightning plays an important part in this Larry Semon comedy. Larry appears as the suitor for the hand of a charming young lady whose father favors a big rough guy. Almost the entire action takes place inside the home of the girl during a severe electric storm. The manner in which Larry and the other principal are being continually struck by lightning and the way the lightning follows Larry all over the place, up and down stairs and around corners, is cleverly done and will bewilder the average patrons.—C. S. S.

"A Perfect 36"

(Educational—Comedy—Two Reels)

A familiar idea is put to surprisingly effective use in this Christie comedy featuring Bobby Vernon. To escape detection, he wears girl's clothes, pretends to be the bride of his best pal, goes on a yachting trip, finding and making much trouble because of two girls with whom his pal and he are in love. There is constant action and amusement as well as a number of hearty laughs.—M. K.

"The Gown Shop"

(Vitagraph—Comedy—Two Reels)

In this two-reel Vitagraph Comedy, Larry Semon goes in for elaborate settings and beautiful backgrounds representing the interior of a swell Fifth Avenue gown shop, and there is a fashion parade of models in gorgeous gowns. The comedy, however, is the same rough-and-tumble and slapstick type with which Semon has been identified; the only difference is in the backgrounds, for there are revolving doors, knocking over of columns, etc., and a general mix-up as usual. There are a number of amusing situations and plenty of action and this number should prove entirely satisfactory to Larry Semon fans.—C. S. S.

"Pathe Review 46"

(Pathe—Magazine—One Reel)

A group of finely photographed scenes called "The Misting Hour" opens this number. Chicago, as misinterpreted by the lens liar is spectacular and amusing; picnicing near a volcano where the luncheon is cooked by the heat of the crater; and some attractive color views of "A Home in Hyeres" combine to make interesting material.—M. K.

"Farmer Al Falfa's Pet Cat"

(Pathe—Cartoon—One Reel)

While the cat's away on a honeymoon, the mice over-run Farmer Alfalfa's home and steal everything from bed quilts to champagne. By the time she returns with a husband and family the mice are legion. It testifies again to Paul Terry's distinguished skill and should be highly amusing.—M. K.

Bruce Coming East With Many Negatives

Robert C. Bruce, creator of "Wilderness Tales," which are released in single reel lengths by Educational Film Exchanges, Inc., has finished his season's work among the beauty spots of the Pacific Coast and is now en route to New York where he will superintend the final editing and titling of the large quantity of material which he secured during the last six months.

Three Circuits Book Pathe Two-Reelers

Pathe reports that the Sanger Amusement Company, of New Orleans, controlling over sixty motion picture theatres in Louisiana and Mississippi has contracted for the entire 1923-24 series of Pathe two-reel comedies. The signing of contracts for the entire series by the Marx and Goodman Theatres on the West Side of Chicago and by the Nirdlinger Circuit in West Philadelphia is also reported.

Century Working on 1924 Productions

Century Comedy directors are at work on the first of the new releases for 1924. Al Herman is producing "The Poor Little Rich Pup" starring the dog Pal; Arvid Gillstrom is busy with the Buddy Messinger comedy "Boys Will Be Boys"; and Bob Kerr is producing "The Process Server" featuring Jack Earle. The other two directors, Noel Smith and McCoy have chosen their stories and casts and will begin active production within a short time.

"The Way Men Love"

moment there is excitement elsewhere. Downstairs the mother is conducting a Mah-Jong party and in another part of the city the child's father is terrifying the girl whom he has relentlessly pursued and whom he has at last cornered. Here the primal motive of the picture is at its height. It will probably not meet with approval everywhere, as it is an extreme touch. The child is shown calling for her daddy and this is repeated over and over again in the subtitles to show the strength of the message which is commuted mentally through the faith of a man of saintly character. Her father feels the urgency of the call and leaves for home. Later the child is restored by the same man and her father is awakened to a higher standard of living.

This point will naturally be subjected to criticism in some houses. But regardless of whether the "miracle" angle is accepted or not, the production has a great force and unusual emotional depth. Elliott Dexter plays with an understanding of the unusual appeal which the chief character makes. He gives the picture something entirely new, so that it can be said honestly that the picture is not ordinary. Mildred Davis's performance is of real support to him. The heavy is played by Aders Randolf, who makes his character convincingly bestial.

"The Way Men Love" is within the understanding of the average person and has sufficient color, dramatically and pictorially, to be both stirring and entertaining.

Cast

Austin Farrol.....Elliott Dexter
Lorraine Meade.....Mildred Harris
Johnson Trent.....Anders Randolf
Mrs. Trent.....Grace Carlyle
Farley.....De Witt C. Jennings
Tug Wilson.....Sydney Bracey
Betty Trent.....Jeanne Carpenter

Story by Adam Hull Shirk.

Directed by R. William Neill.

Adapted by Joseph von Sternberg and Florence Hein.

Length, 7,541 feet.

Story

Austin Farrol, who conducts a mission for the poor classes, is framed by Johnson Trent, who desires a girl in Farrol's employ, and Austin is sent to jail. He has faith that he will be saved and in a train wreck he is able to escape and returns with his beard shaven and Trent fails to recognize him, giving him a position in his own home. Farrol saves Trent's little daughter from being a helpless cripple, changes Trent's character and wins the girl.

PROJECTION

EDITED BY F. H. RICHARDSON

Why It Is

Sam R. Truedon, Gainsboro, Illinois, is puzzled. He sets his trouble forth as follows:

I am home on the first real holiday I have had for four years. Have been projecting in a small town near St. Louis, using two Powers projectors. What puzzles me is this: When the framing carriage of the right hand projector is clear down there is travel ghost. When it is either clear up, or even half way up there is none. Why is this?

The gearing of the projector is, I think you will find, pretty badly worn. When the framing carriage is clear up, the toggle gear between the pinion on the flywheel shaft and gear 680, figure 237, page 636 of the Bluebook, meshes more snugly than when the carriage is clear down. Examine it carefully and you will, I think, understand. When the framing carriage is clear down you will find that you can rotate the shutter more when the flywheel is held stationary than you can when the carriage is up, and that is the answer. There is just enough additional lost motion to allow of travel ghost.

Better have the propector thoroughly overhauled and new gears installed.

Sprocket Changing

C. V. Danielson, Allerton, Missouri, inquires:

I have had an argument with my friend the Boss as to how often an intermittent sprocket should be changed. Will you be good enough to tell us how often the sprocket ought to be changed? We have two projectors and run every evening, with Saturday matinees.

No, friend Danielson, I could not tell you that, but can tell you how to tell when a sprocket needs changing. It is very simple indeed. Once a week, using a condensing lens as a magnifying glass, carefully examine all sprockets on your projectors. The moment there is the slightest indication of "undercutting" (A, Figure 226, page 602 of Bluebook) they should be changed.

For the information of the newer men who may not have a Bluebook, undercutting is the cutting or wearing of a small notch at the base of the sprocket teeth on their working side. This notch should NEVER be allowed to become deeper than to be barely perceptible when a magnifying glass is used, see page 602 of Bluebook.

Simplex Users

Charles E. Travis, projectionist, Barcli Theatre, Schenectady, N. Y., orders two lens charts, one for himself and one for the president of the Schenectady local, who is projectionist at the new State Theatre, and says:

I ought not to speak to you, as you went through our fair city on Nancy Hanks and stopped over night in Albany (that was a year ago.—Ed.) and I do not recall anything I ever did to you to deserve such treatment in return.

Well, I guess I'll have to forgive you, as you probably had some good reason for snubbing Schenectady and tenting in the Home of the Politician.

The following is for the benefit of users of Simplex projectors, though I think it surely will apply equally well to all makes of projector. Set the sprocket idler rollers one (1) thickness of a film away from the sprocket. This dope is from the Simplex company, and works fine. I had trouble with the lower loop and this stopped it.

With best wishes and hoping that you will be able to stop that fast express you ride on your next trip through Schenectady, I am yours for better projection.

The time Travis speaks of was on my return from the Rochester meeting of the S. M. P. E. last fall. Friend daughter was along and we had made a trip to Toronto, Hamilton and Kingston, Ontario, had been gone nearly two weeks, and the weather was getting frosty. We were both tired, and thought of little else than home and rest about then, except that we hoped to get there before icicles formed on our noses. A mile was a mile then, brother Travis, and Albany was several of them closer to our hearthstone and fires. I certainly will stop next time I pass through Schenectady.

As to the idler roller, I have for many years (see "Sprocket Idlers," page 606 of Bluebook, or 466 of Third Edition) advised the setting of sprocket idlers two thicknesses of a film away from the sprocket. One thickness would be right, were it practicable to so adjust the idler that the roller would just barely touch the film, without pressing upon it. My advice is to place an extra thickness of film over the sprocket and lower the roller until it rests on the film, setting the holder so that the roller just rides the two thicknesses of film. When the extra thickness is removed it will be found that the roller will just barely clear the surface of the single thickness when the film hugs the sprocket, and that is exactly what is wanted.

There is no more prolific source of film jumping the sprocket than being pinched by the sprocket idler rollers, especially if the idlers be not in perfect alignment with the sprocket. If the bracket spring be a strong one, this is especially true. I have found the two-thickness adjustment to be more certain of giving satisfaction than the single thickness, though mind you, the latter is alright if VERY carefully and intelligently done.

Notice! Notice!

The report of the Nomenclature Committee of the Society of Motion Picture Engineers was laid over until the Spring meeting. It is proposed to adopt "PROJECTOR ROOM" as designating the room from which pictures are projected, instead of "PROJECTION ROOM," as proposed by the Nomenclature Committee.

The reason is that some producers call their screening room a projection room, and that is quite sufficient reason why the projectionist should stand clear, keep away and keep his hands off the name "projection room."

I want a letter from every one of you who approves "projection room" and disapproves "projector room." One local, Rock Island-Moline No. 433, has officially endorsed "projection room" and objected to "projector room." I would like to see other locals come to life and do the same, remembering that the nomenclature adopted by the S. M. P. E. will become standard.

Wake up, men, and show your interest. Write your endorsement of "projection room" on a separate sheet—as an entirely separate letter, which may be sent in the same envelope with another letter, if you wish. GET BUSY!

A Little Stunt

E. K. Shirley, projectionist, Woodbine Theatre, Homer, La., says:

Here is a little thing which might help some of the men working in a small town, as I am.

For a brake for my rewinder I took an old spindle from the upper magazine of a projector—the complete spindle, I mean—and placed same on dummy part of my rewinder, placing a leather washer between the spring and the dummy to help eliminate wear on end of spring. Find that with this I can get the exact amount of brake tension I desire, merely by tightening or loosening the nut.

Here is a brother who meant well. His intent was to be of assistance, and we all appreciate that, BUT he should have told us what kind of a rewinder he has, and what make of projector he subtracted the magazine spindle from. With the kind of rewinder he has, the kind of spindle he has works just fine, or so he says. With some other sort of rewinder, or some other sort of magazine spindle it most likely wouldn't work at all. All this is to draw your attention to the desirability and necessity of giving full details when describing things. We appreciate the intention of the good brother, but his performance of that intention leaves things to be desired.

Important

John Griffith writes:

Dear Frank: I see, October 6 issue, you ask for more definite explanation with regard to flexibility of crater position when using the new Cinephor condenser. When I mentioned the fact that the crater position is flexible when this condenser is used I merely stated what I had observed while trying out the Cinephor.

In connection with this statement I did not advise that any change should be made in laying out the projector optical system as per the lens chart. The only thing to do when using Cinephor is to gauge the correct crater position by the screen illumination, and not by the spot at the cooling plate. It is not so much a question as to whether or not this feature of Cinephor has any practical value, as it is to know why it is so with Cinephor and is not so with plano convex condensers. The reason is that there is no ghost zone on the beam from Cinephor, whereas there is in the beam projected by plano convex or meniscus bi-convex.

With Cinephor the crater position is not critical because of the fact that a clear field will be projected to the screen, regardless of what the position of the spot may be ("spot" as here used means most narrow point of cross section of light beam), because the light is evenly distributed at any cross-section of the beam, and the discoloration action shown in figure 45, page 178 of the Bluebook is absent.

With plano convex the crater position is critical, because of the fact that the light is only evenly distributed in cross sections of the beam at or near the spot, hence a slight alteration of the crater position will cause unevenly distributed light at the aperture plane, which unevenness will, of course, be focused on the screen.

IMPORTANT

One important thing I forgot to mention is that, when using the new chart to adjust the projector optical system with Cinephor condenser, distance Y must be measured from face of the converging lens to spot position, instead of from face of converging lens to aperture. This makes distance Y two inches less than lens chart distance Y reads.

Lens Diameter and Cinephor

Maximum screen illumination is obtained by advancing the spot (narrowest point of light beam) through the aperture towards the projection lens. The smaller the diameter of the projection lens the further must the spot be advanced in order to get maximum screen illumination, BUT the maximum screen illumination is less for a small diameter lens than it is for a lens of larger diameter, with a light source of given area and an equal working distance.

That last seems to me to be the one big, important thing we must thoroughly understand. According to my understanding, it is quite possible to get the entire light beam which passes through the aperture into any diameter projection lens at any working distance, but it may only be done at the expense of, in effect, reducing the condenser diameter, as shown in the diagram I have drawn. At A the entire beam enters the lens; also it does at B, but there is not nearly so much light because of the fact that by shortening distance Y we have enormously enlarged the spot (light beam at the aperture). Perhaps I am in error in this. If so, I shall be glad to know exactly in what my error consists.

Later, Griffith has the following to say with regard to my comments, which were submitted to him before publication:

Dear Frank: Accompanying diagrams are to show that your comments and diagrams do not quite cover the situation. In figure B you will see that as you advance the "spot" (most narrow part of beam) the aperture begins to cut off some of the light from the marginal zones of the condenser, gradually cutting into the center zones. Were you to advance further than shown in diagram B you would begin to cut light from the center zone of the condenser.

The beam cannot be reduced in cross-section less than the diameter of the spot, no matter how far it be advanced.

Darn Griffith anyhow! I wish he had the same ability in expressing his ideas as he has in understanding them himself. I don't think one of you will "get" him in that last sentence any better than I do. I presume what he has in mind is that the minimum diameter, or cross section of the beam, is fixed, no matter what its location, and this point he calls the "spot," which it is not. The spot is the spot at the collong plate. I don't know just what we might call the most narrow point of the beam, which is not at the spot with Cinephor, but some name must be evolved for it. Image of the light source won't do, because the image, in some cases, covers a distance of several inches.

Vision

I am amused when I read of an orchestra of anywhere from six to sixty men demanding and getting as much as sixty to seventy dollars a week per man, whereas the projectionist would, except in comparatively few places, drop dead of heart failure were he to be offered seventy dollars for a mere week of his time. When a man speaks of the projectionist getting sufficient money to make the projection of pictures a really worthwhile job, the exhibitor promptly counters with: "I can't afford it. If there was only one of them I could, but look! There are two, and in many cases four!"

But he, at the same time, is paying a dozen or more musicians and is not ruined at all.

In the purchase of such things as the labor of musicians or projectionists it is largely a matter of vision, both on the part of the employer and employee.

The employer has the musician right before both his own eyes, and the eyes of the audience. He can estimate the effect excellence of music has on the audience. He has vision to believe that an investment in plenty of high-grade musical skill will pay —that the sale of tickets will be increased by reason of the fact that there is a large, high-grade orchestra.

And he is right, too. But when it comes to the projectionist, the audience cannot actually see him perform, hence does not so keenly sense how much of its enjoyment it owes to the man or men back there in the dark. Also this out-of-sight thing has its effect on the mind of the manager, and somewhat in the same way.

In this case the theatre manager must have vision. He must sense the fact that it is just as necessary to back up the drawing power of "Our Mary" by having her put before the audience at 100 per cent. value as it is to supplement her drawing power with a good orchestra. He must sense the fact that a high-grade feature for which he has paid much real money will have far greater drawing power if it is put on the screen by high-grade men in a high-class way, than it possibly could have if it were put on by a low-grade man in a low-grade way.

Perhaps I might better amend that last, in this way: The theatre which puts on its pictures at 100 per cent. value of projection will have much greater drawing power, using the same subjects, than the theatre which puts on its pictures in a low-grade way. It is just as useless to dispute that as it would be to dispute the fact that the sun rises in the East. You may dispute either proposition, but that does not in the least degree alter the truth.

The projectionist, on the other hand, also must have vision. He must be able to understand that the path which leads to success is swept by the winds of toil—that there is no primrose path to excellence in anything. He must sense the fact that because he studies and tries hard and meets with no approbation from a square-head employer is no reason on earth why he should get discouraged and quit trying.

You, or most of you, say that Richardson has "succeeded"—whatever that means. I wonder how many of you realize that my "success," such as it may be, came only after THIRTY YEARS OF TOIL, all more or less, as I can see now—preparatory. And yet the great mass of projectionists who start out to really learn their profession get tired and discouraged and quit after anywhere from a month to a year of more or less desultory effort, because they have not seen tangible results.

Have a little vision, men! Don't think the boss is altogether a fool. By and large he knows that what you actually do is not worth, as things go, any very large remuneration. You are not listened to when you offer advice about screens, auditorium lighting, motor generators and a dozen other matters, because you have not been able to, or have not convinced the boss that you have anything more than a very sketchy knowledge of those various things.

The musician has vision. You, friend projectionist, have vision too, but it is of one thing only,—pay night. Of course there are exceptions, and the exceptions grow more numerous as the years pass. But of the great mass it still is true that "pay night" is the one vision they bother with.

Let Me Prophesy

Let me prophesy that when the great mass of projectionists wake up to the real importance of their profession in the motion picture industry, and SET OUT TO MAKE THEMSELVES WORTH REAL MONEY, they will get it; also the paying of it under those conditions will be a blessing to the exhibitor, because it will increase his income three dollars for every dollar paid out.

BETTER EQUIPMENT

CONDUCTED BY E. T. KEYSER

Stewart Says That We've Started Something. Why He Wants Mail Order Service. Economy of Isolated Plants.

IN practically the same mail we received a statement from a correspondent that the Benn Theatre of West Philadelphia had installed a $24,000 organ, and the following letter from a North Carolina exhibitor:

Spruce Pine, N. C., Oct. 30, 1923.

Mr. E. T. Keyser,
Moving Picture World,
New York City.
Dear Mr. Keyser:

In a recent issue of The World you had the nerve to inform the little fellows of the country that some progressive manufacturer was turning out a small organ, suitable for small theatres, and that the cost would not exceed that of the building and a lifetime monthly payment—or something to that effect. Anyway, I would certainly appreciate the address of the concern and enclose a stamped envelope for your convenience. I believe you have started something this time sure, so please take a few minutes of your time and shoot some names along.

Thanking you for your interest and with all good wishes for Equipment Department, I remain,

Yours very truly,
A. G. STEWART,
Piedmont Theatre.

We advised the correspondent to go back and look over the organ installation again and also to ascertain from the manager of the theatre how much of the $24,000 quoted was real and how much stage money.

To the North Carolina exhibitor we sent an illustrated catalog of a manufacturer which contained the description of an instrument, the cost of which is well within his means.

We agree with Mr. Stewart that the Moving Picture World has started something. Some day the organ builders themselves, who are now kicking so strenuously against the press agent tactics of their competitors in boosting paper prices, may start something also in the way of telling, in plain United States language, just what they have to offer the average exhibitor and what it will cost him.

AND here is another communication, which, because it constitutes something of an indictment of the methods by which the supply business of his city is conducted, we suppress the writer's address:

October 31, 1923.

Editor, Equipment Section,
New York City.

Will you be good enough to give the names of one or two reliable houses which handle motion picture supplies, issue catalogues and make prompt deliveries by parcel post, a la the mail order houses?

Our needs are not extensive, relating exclusively to the motion pictures of one religious denomination, but even these needs can't be met here satisfactorily. It seems that virtually nothing is kept in stock. I had to wait two weeks for a film waxer, and then didn't get what I wanted. I waited the same length of time for a humidor, and then was given a fireproof reel cabinet. I should have preferred a different type of rewinds than what I have.

This is the sort of equipment in which I'm chiefly interested now. Can you give me a lift? I'll appreciate it very greatly indeed.

Respectfully,
DWIGHT H. FEE.

We have suggested that the gentleman get in touch with the Howells Cine Equipment Company of New York City and Erker Bros. of St. Louis, Mo.

From time to time we have heard criticisms, expressed more or less courteously, by supply dealers of other supply dealers who invaded their territory.

If conditions, such as described above, are at all prevalent there seems to be a good reason for the aforesaid intrusion.

ON another page we publish a communication from a Long Island exhibitor who describes the trouble which he has experienced in connection with his local light service and who furnishes concise and definite data as to his requirements.

His case is typical of that of so many exhibitors that a large percentage of our readers will be interested, not only in Mr. Edwards' complaint but in the remedy which we have prescribed for same.

The fact that his initial expenditure for an independent lighting plant would be a trifle less than the amount of his current bills for two years, to say nothing of what he is losing each year through defective light service, constitutes a strong argument for the economy of the isolated lighting plant.

THIS is evidently the day of the good, moderate sized picture house.

Last week we described the six hundred seat Peerless of the Bronx. In this issue we jump across the continent to Bandon, Oregon, whose Hartman, a house of seven hundred seats, constitutes another illustration of the beauties which are embodied in the modern theatre of modest seating capacity.

The picture is the thing, and always will be, but the up-to-date exhibitor realizes that the patron of the small house likes to be comfortable while viewing the screen, and the Hartman's cry room would appear to make for peace and quiet of all concerned.

MENTION of the Peerless reminds that some one pointed out that we had neglected to mention just how much that attractive house had set its proprietors back financially.

As others are probably interested in that rather important point, we take this opportunity of informing them that the total damage to the bank roll was forty thousand dollars—quite moderate when one considers what they received for their money.

A CONVENTION of the Eastern Zone of the Association of Motion Picture Equipment Dealers of America, Inc., will be held at the Hotel Astor November 12-13.

It is expected that President Oldnow and Secretary Barth will be present at the convention, at which matters of importance to distributors, supply dealers and manufacturers will be discussed.

The territory of the Eastern Zone comprises Maine, Massachusetts, Vermont, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Rhode Island, New York State, including New York City and the state of New Jersey, Scranton, Pa.; Philadelphia, Pa.; Baltimore, Md., and Washington, D. C.

Attention of Mr. Harry Blumberg

Dear Mr. Blumberg:-

I want to take this occasion to thank you for your co-operation and the service you rendered in completing my projection installation at the Benn Theatre.

It is hardly necessary for me to call attention to the perfect picture which the Powers Projectors are showing on my screen. You know my opinion of the Powers as the one machine best adapted to furnish the kind of projection which a theatre of the size and importance of the Benn requires. My fourteen years' experience with projectors in the various theatres I have operated have taught me that the Powers is the projector of the greatest satisfaction and the least worry.

Very truly yours,

Marcus A. Benn

A SIDE WALL OF THE HARTMAN THEATRE

Showing the method employed in decorating the panels into which upper portions of walls are divided.

The Hartman, of Bandon, Oregon, Is a Credit to Its Community and Owners

BANDON, Oregon, is the proud possessor of a modern theatre, beautifully decorated and appointed, equipped to handle any sized road show as well as motion pictures. The theatre, which is named the Hartman, and is the property of Mrs. E. A. Hartman and Son, occupies a plot 52 feet wide by 125 feet deep. It has a double lobby, a foyer, main auditorium and balcony and has a seating capacity of 741, with twenty-four velour upholstered loge seats in addition.

Construction is of reinforced concrete, made as fireproof as possible. The building has an asbestos roof. All wiring is in conduits. Lighting fixtures consist of two large lights at either side of the ceiling of main auditorium. These fixtures have indirect center bowls of etched opaque glass. An iron rim around the set holds twelve amber globes. This is further augmented by six etched indirect bowls in the back of auditorium and over balcony. In the foyer, amber lanterns, with a center light of iron and polychrome add an artistic touch. The etched bowls, close to ceiling, give lobby lights.

Color Scheme French Gray and Old Rose

The color scheme is French gray blended with old rose and purple in sufficient degree to give a tone of warmth. Walls are French gray throughout the house. Drapes are of mulberry velour, trimmed with dull gold galoon. Walls in the main auditorium have art panels of Gobelin tapestry effect. Flower gardens give an attractive finish.

The stage dimensions are 52x24 with proscenium opening of 24 feet. Full stage equipment, lighting effects, scenery is installed with the purpose of attracting road attractions, and modern dressing rooms insure convenience and comfort. An asbestos drop curtain, overdraped with velour curtains, completes the stage appointments.

Fotoplayer Supplies the Music

A number 46 Fotoplayer, installed in an organ pit, directly in front of the stage, supplies the music.

Projection equipment includes two projectors, a motor generator, Bausch & Lomb Stereopticon. The projection room is placed in the center of the balcony.

The ticket office is in the center of lobby, with French doors at either side, leading into the inner lobby, which in turn leads to the foyer by means of six one-panel doors. Wiring has been installed for a marquee and electric sign which will be added later.

The loge seats occupy three rows across the front of the balcony. Twenty-four seats in the front row are of upholstered velour, the balance of upholstered leather. All are of Heywood-Wakefield manufacture.

A modern, well-appointed women's rest room, men's smoking room, lavatories and office help to round out the beauty and comfort of the house. A feature of the service is the soundproof glass room situated over the women's rest room and entered through it by a stairway. Here mothers can take their crying children and still enjoy the show without spoiling any one else's pleasure.

Opera chairs and all interior decorating were done by B. T. Shearer, Inc., of Seattle. The house is attractive and is a credit both to the community and the family whose name it bears.

A Concrete Example of the Economy of an Independent Generating Plant

THE following communication illustrates a condition which is common to many picture theatres throughout the country. And the fact that Mr. Edwards has, in his first letter, definitely described his requirements and his present current cost puts us in a position to be just as definite in suggesting a remedy.

What Mr. Edwards Writes

East Hampton, N. Y., Oct. 30, 1923.
Moving Picture World,
New York City.

Upon reading the Moving Picture World of November 3, on the independent generating plant for motion picture theatre service, I immediately became interested.

I have considerable trouble with my light service which costs me quite a sum of money each year. Only last week I was without light service for three consecutive nights and am unable to get any rebate from the light company.

Would like very much to find out how much it would cost me to install an independent generating plant in my theatre capable of running the whole plant.

I have a throw from the Powers 6A machines to the screen of 137 feet. Have two machines and silver sheet screen. I use 110 volts and 60 amperes.

Loses $300 Per Annum

I also have a one horsepower organ motor and six electric fans and about thirty-five house lights.

During the month of August, 1923, I used 516 K W hours, at 14 cents an hour, costing me $70.07. I am open six days a week, run two shows a night.

As near as I can tell I lose about $300 per year due to failure of light service.

The yearly cost of furnishing my theatre with electricity is $630.88 per 1922.

Any information that you can give me on this subject will be more than appreciated.

Thanking you in advance, I am,

Very truly yours,
L. A. EDWARDS,
Manager, Edwards Theatre.

The Remedy

What we would prescribe would be a 7½ K. W. 110-volt direct current generating plant.

Such a plant can be obtained consisting of a 4-cylinder 4-cycle motor, direct connected to a standard compound wound multiple pole generator.

The entire outfit, the shipping weight of which is approximately 1,350 pounds, is mounted compactly upon a heavy base, with radiator, fan and switchboard and muffler all mounted on the motor, making for economy of space occupied. Such an equipment would cost approximately $1,200, and, with kerosene as fuel, would cost approximately 21 cents per hour, with fuel at 14 cents per gallon, or, operated on gasolene, at 22 cents per gallon would cost 33 cents per hour, when operating the plant to its full capacity.

Pays for Self in Two Years

It will be noted that, at an annual cost of $630.80 per annum for current cost, a two years' electric bill would practically pay for the outfit.

Theatres Projected

This Mermaid Comedy with a hard-working, funny, all-star cast is the best two-reeler that firm has issued, in the humble opinion of the writer—and Mermaid has had quite some winners put through E. W. Hammons' organization. But this is a darb, for you know what that means. For those who are in ignorance concerning the show definition of a "darb," the writer ventures to say it is to the picture theatre box-office what the shekels passed over at a world's series booth is to baseball. A corking good two-reeler worthy of being featured on any bill and illuminated out in the electric lights. A long, riotous laugh from beginning to end. If this comedy doesn't make them double up with laughter, we'll stop looking at pictures. ROGER FERRI, in Motion Picture News.

AL SANTELL'S Greatest Picture

Weekly Film Review, Oct. 20

"Lights Out" is a crackerjack comedy that should clean up, it's a picture in a hundred and certainly ought to make money for exhibitors. It is action from the word "go" and the tempo never slackens. Advertised right—and F. B. O. is getting out a hot line of paper. "Lights Out" stands every chance of going over big.

Ex. Herald, Sept. 29

If you want something unusual in screen entertainment, something different, our advice is to hop out and get "Lights Out," which is probably the most unique story ever screened.

Amusements, Oct. 6

They seldom make mystery plays any better than this one, fast moving from the word go—suspense is held up to the final fadeout. Laughs and good thrills and a lot of comedy that registers—these ingredients should insure the success of the picture. In addition there is a novel angle and any audience will get considerable kick out of this novelty—you can practically guarantee the picture from the standpoint of pleasing the majority.

L. A. Times, Aug. 22

Excellent entertainment—the picture affords quite the most delightful caricature I've seen on the screen for a long time, really, it's superb as comedy and highly enjoyable.

M. P. News, Sept. 22

In working out this theme, the producers have built as many laughs as thrills into the picture—is rich in comedy. Cabaret scene in South America is a real novelty, much fast action in the climax, when many surprises are sprung—you will be able to please any audience with this one. The theme is out of the beaten path.

Ex. Herald, Oct. 20

Will entertain the average person and as the average person constitutes the overwhelming majority of moving picture patrons, there is no question at all as to whether this is a good box office attraction. Story is excellent, and exhibitor, no matter where his theatre is, will have no difficulty in attracting attention to this picture.

Harrison's Reports, Oct. 6

A good crook-melodrama; the story is sufficiently compelling, the action sufficiently fast, and thrills close enough together. "Lights Out" is good stuff.

It's an F. B. O. Picture

"PANIC"

"Panic" is too harsh a word, but something approaching mild alarm is in the air.

And here's a strange condition:

Our shelves are over-stocked with product. The logical and necessary remedy is more selling, better selling.

Synonymous with: More advertising, better advertising.

But what is happening?

The first move: "Let's close down the factories." The second step: "Let's cut down the trade paper advertising."

Can you beat it?

Well, here's a stranger thing:

"Don't touch the national advertising. That must be kept up in full force."

Let's analyze:

The most prosperous years ALL BRANCHES of this industry have ever known were 1917 and 1918—when trade paper advertising reached its greatest heights. When national advertising was a seldom-tried experiment.

In the last two years national advertising has been given a one hundred per cent. trial. Nothing has been stinted; in brains; or in money.

Fine copy has been seen; consistent space has been used; appropriations have climbed to the six figure mark.

National advertising, we have been told, creates consumer demand, retail interest—AND MOVES THE GOODS.

BUT THE GOODS HAVEN'T MOVED.

And we have had to shut the factories down.

* * *

In these same years trade paper advertising has been an orphan step-child.

"Use just enough to get the publicity by and to let the salesmen know that we are still in business."

That has been the policy.

AND THE GOODS HAVE FAILED TO MOVE!

Think it over—a long, long time.

Get away from the spell of the rounded phrase, the impressive statistics, get away to this thought: In any business where the retailer can handle only ONE MANUFACTURER'S PRODUCT AT A TIME your chief problem is to sell the retailer!

And think over this:

I defy any man to spend seven thousand five hundred dollars IN ONE WEEK on trade paper advertising for a single picture and not find his goods moving from the shelves.

I know of a lot of seventy-five hundred dollar pages that haven't disturbed a speck of dust on the shelves.

Think it over.

Robert E. Welsh

"WARNER FIRST,"

is sworn testimony of Charles O'Reilly, chief of T.O.C.C., at Commission hearing

Warners First in Season's Product

"[redacted] does not dominate the market in the city of New York today," testified Charles O'Reilly, head of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce at the Commission's last hearing. The chief official of the organization, embodying several hundred of Greater New York's most prominent exhibitors, rated [redacted] as fourth on the list in grade and quantity of product this season. Warner Brothers comes first in this respect, according to Mr. O'Reilly's opinion.

Warner Baxter and brilliant cast

OUTSTANDING exploitation backs this new F. B. O. picture. Rotary Clubs, Kiwanis, Lions, Chambers of Commerce, Civic bodies of all kinds throughout the entire country have been approached to use the slogan—"BLOW YOUR OWN HORN" and hundreds have accepted.

This title "BLOW YOUR OWN HORN" admits of new ideas to boost this production different and better than any you've seen to date.

The picture is "there." The advertising, exploitation and ballyhoo is all ready. Even the most half-hearted exhibitor can make a noise with this picture and this title in his community. To those who "get behind" their pictures "BLOW YOUR OWN HORN" is a young gold mine. Speak NOW to your nearest F. B. O. exchange and ask for a copy of the big time idea press sheet.

"There are a number of picturesque shots. The storm on the desert, the bandit raid, and the climax in which the English troops rout the desert brigands are fairly elaborate spectacles." —Motion Picture World.

A SURE-FIRE SEAT SELLER

HODKINSON PICTURES

$5,000

and tremendous new

PRODUCERS' SECURITY CORPORATION, through Hodkinson Pictures, will pay $5,000.00 in 166 cash prizes for the best essays by patrons of motion picture theatres on any one of five particular Hodkinson pictures.

That's the idea in a nutshell.

The plan is simplicity itself—and means BIG MONEY to the exhibitor. Every detail has been worked out carefully. All that YOU have to do to create all this extra patronage is to tie up to the following five Hodkinson Pictures.

"The Mark of the Beast"
"Dollar Devils"
"Bulldog Drummond"
"The Kingdom Within"
"The Lion's Mouse"

The first prize is $1,000.00 in cash; second prize, $500.00; third prize, $300.00; 3—fourth prizes, $150.00 each; 10—fifth prizes, $50.00 each; 50—sixth prizes, $25.00 each; 100—seventh prizes, $10.00 each.

In the event of ties the full amount of the prize tied for will be awarded to each of those so tying. THE CONTEST IS OPEN TO EVERYONE. A complete description of the pictures will be furnished free of charge at your theatre, and it is not essential for a contestant to see the pictures to enter the contest. The contest closes May 20, 1924.

Your Hodkinson Salesman

in cash prizes for your patrons

business for YOU!

PRIZES will be awarded from selections made by the theatres themselves and by national judges, names to be announced.

Every aid in putting over the contest in a big way will be furnished exhibitors. There will be special advertising material—posters, slides, trailers, etc. Entry blanks will be furnished.

Hodkinson branch managers and salesmen will co-operate in making it the biggest money-making plan exhibitors ever knew. So carefully has every detail been worked out that all the exhibitor has to do is to—GET ABOARD!

It's a BIG, MONEY-MAKING idea—just what YOU need to start you off on an era of NEW business; just the thing to build up a permanently increased REGULAR PATRONAGE.

It's big-time stuff, men!! If you want to make REAL MONEY—ask any Hodkinson exchange about the big contest, and DO IT NOW!!!!

Will Give You Full Details!

WORLD
Founded in 1907 by J. P. Chalmers

Let's Quit Talking

MAYBE something is going to be done about it! That is the chief thought that comes to us as we conclude reading the statement by F. J. Godsol, elsewhere in this issue.

There is nothing bomb-like in the declaration that production costs must be curtailed by individual courage and efficiency; nothing startling in the proposal that joint distribution is the solution of the producer's selling problem.

But there is an attitude of goaded desperation; the suggestion of a brave decision that something must be done about these words from Mr. Godsol:

"Today, in the motion picture industry the real vital issue is whether or not the producer is to receive fair and reasonable prices for his pictures. .....Why do not the producers take action—not talk—to destroy this danger, the greatest menace to the picture industry!"

There, flatly and plainly, is an invitation to action; a challenge, if you prefer it that way.

Will there be a response? In deeds—not in further talk?

IT is our belief that Mr. Godsol's interest in his own statement is confined entirely to the probable reception accorded the few words quoted above.

Mr. Godsol, in our mind, set out to extend an invitation to action, nothing more, nothing less.

Assuredly, he can have no hope that his words will make a dent in the hides of the exhibitors whose control of their territories has brought about the present situation.

For so many moons that the beginning has been forgotten we have had our few pet evils to complain of in this business. Sometimes we talk ourselves up to the point where we see naught but EVIL and no BUSINESS.

And for as many moons we have had as many favorite and pat panaceas to solve those problems.

Mr. Godsol's attitude is that of a man who has grown weary of the drone of complaint and suggestion—dreary to the point of [illegible] banging the the pros or cons of the problem of stabilizing production costs; nor to discuss and analyze the many angles to the joint distribution bubble.

But we would like to see a half dozen of our better-known film men get around a table and thresh out the joint distribution argument face to face. And, maybe, settle it for once, and for all.

At any rate, it would clear the air—and save a lot of time for work back in the individuals' own offices.

Through the medium of a trade paper statement issued this week by Mr. Whoozis, a commentary the week following by Mr. Whatzis, a criticism the next from Mr. Whichiz—and the whole operation repeated three months later—we are getting nowhere.

And wasting a lot of time, considerable breath, and much white paper and printer's ink.

Who will be the first film man to write Mr. Godsol:

"Your invitation received. Am not sure whether I care to go to your party or not, but at least you interest me. Suppose we get a bunch of the boys together for dinner some night next week and talk it over?"

Mr. Laemmle? Mr. Rowland? Mr. Loew? Mr. Fox? Huh?

"The Hunchback" is going to the exhibitor pretty soon, according to our tried and true friend, Dame Rumor. If true, we think this is one of the wisest moves yet taken by Messrs. Laemmle, Cochrane, et al. "The Hunchback" has shown on Broadway that it is a real money-getter. And with the air full of shut-down talk the exhibitor is ready for money-getters as never before. He has heard a lot of talk about the big and bigger pictures of this season—now he'd like to see one at work for his box office.

This Week

The only trouble about giving the Silver King a dinner is that you can't very well ask him to be his own toastmaster. And a film dinner without Harry handling the gavel will have its drawbacks.

Harry's best line in a year was his introduction of Samuel Goldwyn at the Fredman luncheon. "I wish to introduce the man who is my partner in the film business"—then sotto—"He owns a ninety-five per cent. interest in my pictures."

Will some one please page the two-thousand-a-week actor who has consented to alter his contract to read seven hundred and fifty a week? We read about him in the daily papers. Jesse Lasky is understood to be his discoverer. We would like to see this rare bird. We have known of actors to walk the streets until their names were forgotten before they would take a ten per cent. reduction—and the fellow who at the first sign of storm drops from two "thou" to seven-fifty must have come from a museum. Or at least deserves a niche there.

Got an interesting slant the other day from a man who has considerable contact with the financial district and money interests generally:

"The one happening of the past year that has done more than anything else to scare capital away from the picture industry," he declares, "was the announcement that Jackie Coogan was to receive oodles of millions a year."

And he concluded sadly: "You can't cram that down the neck of a sixty-year-old banker who still considers a fifteen-thousand-a-year man a valued and adequately paid executive."

[illegible] attitude [illegible] part of a nationally known newspaper editor who has probably slaved some forty years in a half dozen countries to reach the munificence of ten thousand a year.

Let's have it understood: That the press agent who can't break on the first page except by talking of million dollar salaries or million dollar pictures is just laying down on his job. Taking the line of least resistance—and most harm. That the press agent who is barred from using this means will just expend a few hours more thought on the job and evolve an idea really worth while.

Travel note—Ben Amsterdam is now making weekly trips to Philadelphia. Inmates of the Hotel Astor have heard a rumor that Ben runs an exchange in Quakertown.

Had a few words with Henry Ginsberg during the week. And found the Preferred atmosphere perking up. It ought to—with a picture like "Maytime" on the horizon, and a few other bets of the calibre of "The Virginian" in the neighborhood.

If ever the "reg'lar fellows" in this industry did any rooting, now is the time. There is a hundred per cent. good will and loyalty cheering section on the job rooting for those two boys, Benny Schulberg and Jack Bachmann.

Earl Hudson is in town. Hope to shake hands at least before he gets away. But he's a busy boy. Always was, for that matter. The chorus will now sing, "And that's why he is where he is today."

F. J. Godsol, Jesse Lasky and Richard Rowland had a merry scrap during the week for the top of column first page positions. Naturally, the newspapers disregarded the meat of Godsol's statement—the distribution problem—and hit on the more popular angle of production costs. Then Jesse stepped up to say that the trouble was all settled as far as he was concerned; his players are acting nicely. Dick Rowland came in at the end of the discussion and said the most important words as far as production goes: "Put in the time and [illegible] on the continuity. Here you are only paying one salary and no studio rent."

Ben Grimm dropped in to see E. J. Smith, at Universal, and found him snowed under contracts. Literally. Here is one sales executive who buries himself in the job at hand—hard work and lots of it.

Developments in the trade paper field. Leaving only one real "edited, published and printed" in New York paper. The esteemed Moving Picture World. We now have papers at Chicago, Stroudsberg, Pa., and one about to move to Albany.

Ricord Gradwell has always said: "The job of the distributor in this business is to sell seats for the exhibitor." Then steps forth to practice what he preaches with the big national contest announced elsewhere in this issue.

The panic is on. If you don't make daily calls on some of the film companies you are seven moves behind in checking up the roster of employes.

And as for keeping track of film salesmen and exchange managers—it just can't be done.

When the storm is all over, some one will say, "Who shouted 'Fire!'—Let's lynch him."

The Fight Has Only Begun

DAY to day developments in the Admission Tax situation are rather trying on those publications that prefer to take their views in inspired doses.

One day we are told that there isn't a chance in the world that Washington will look with favor on the repeal of the Admission Tax. The gloom lies in thick, heavy clouds.

"No one is working," we are told. Then in the next breath, "The fellows who are working so hard are making too many mistakes." It's a contradiction that can only be swallowed if you are hypnotized by the importance of being with "the inner circle."

Then no less a personage than the Secretary of the Treasury comes forth with a flat recommendation that the Admission Tax be lifted in its entirety.

The same columns that so recently dispensed the globules of gloom now tell us that the outlook is rosy and bright. The same "inside sources" that provided the initial reliable information rush a telegram across the country that seems to say nothing in particular but is essentially a shoddy bid for a seat on the band wagon.

And—shucks—there isn't any band wagon yet.

The fight has only begun!

DAY to day it is one thing; but day in and day out we get this chorus:

"There is too much politics in exhibitor ranks. We must eliminate the politics and banish the glory-seekers."

It was a good song—the first time we heard it. But many years on the fringe of the picture business have taught us that the Film Man's Dictionary puts it this way:

"Politics—Activity on the part of anyone who is not in our crowd. 'The Exhibitor Politician'—the fellow whom we don't like at the particular minute. 'The Exhibitor Leader—the same fellow when he consents to play in our yard."

That sums it up.

And the chorus is getting tiresome.

It strikes us this way:

If you want to play baseball—GET IN THE GAME. If you don't like the other fellow's game—start one of your own. But we have never heard of anyone who won a ball game SITTING IN THE GRANDSTAND bawling out the players on the diamond.

That's straight talk; meant sincerely and without another thought than to clear the air.

Switching the metaphor to football we say: It's about time to stop wrangling over who will give the signals and—GET IN THE GAME.

ALL this is aside from the consideration or concern of Mr. Average Exhibitor.

Many hundreds of that species included among our own readers have been busy for months with personal appeals to their Congressman and Senators—by word of mouth, by letter.

They haven't waited for signals, nor have they needed them. Unless it can be said with all due modesty that the humble efforts of Moving Picture World have constituted the signal to action.

To this multitude we wish to reiterate:

The fight has only begun!

Keep up YOUR fight! Hew to the lines that you have followed to date. Let the "star players" work out their own method of getting into the game. YOU STAY IN THE GAME.

The nation will take care of itself.

Your concern is your theatre, your town, your Congressman, your Senator. See that YOUR people know the facts in the amusement tax situation.

Nothing more will be asked of you; nothing more is needed.

Take care of your own situation; and if impelled to further action, lend the cheer of your support to the fellows who have been IN THE GAME. From the first inning.

Above all, don't slump NOW. Don't prepare to count the fruits of victory. Lots of good work has been done; miraculous work to those who know past efforts in this industry.

All the more reason to take a second breath now and KEEP ON FIGHTING.

Spurred by Mellon Tax Proposal, Cohen Urges Immediate Action

Leaders in Congress are not showing any favorable enthusiasm over Secretary Mellon's tax-relief recommendations. The general trend of thought seems to be that the side-tracking of the Soldiers' Bonus is not a move calculated to arouse public approval. Some there are who prefer to believe that the income tax relief offered by the Mellon proposals would redound to the chief benefit of big capital and not to the pocketbook of the average working man. However, little has been said of the amusement tax individually. To most members of Congress the amusement tax is merely a small part of the whole; to YOU—and to the great mass of theatregoers, it is the most vital point in the whole proposition. See that YOUR Congressman knows your attitude AT ONCE. Strike NOW, while the iron is hot—WRITE THAT LETTER THIS MINUTE!!!

THAT Hon. A. W. Mellon, Secretary of the Treasury, favors the repeal of the Admission Tax was definitely assured by his statement appearing in the newspapers of the country on Monday, November 12. The portion of his remarks of especial interest to theatre owners as well as to the entire motion picture industry was:

"8—Repeal the Tax on Admissions. The great bulk of this revenue is derived from the admissions charged by neighborhood moving picture theatres. The tax is, therefore, paid by the great bulk of the people whose main source of recreation is attending the movies in the neighborhood of their homes."

Commenting upon this declaration from the Secretary of the Treasury, Sydney S. Cohen, as president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, issued the following statement:

"We have seen the public statement issued by Secretary of the Treasury Mellon with respect to the recommendations for the repeal of the Admission Tax in the coming session of Congress.

"We are much gratified with the decision reached by Mr. Mellon in this regard, as it is in entire conformity with the purposes of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and our campaign for the repeal of the taxes which have been so oppressive to motion picture theatre owners.

"The writer, accompanied by National Secretary George Aarons and M. J. O'Toole, visited the office of the Secretary of the Treasury at Washington early in October and laid the case of the motion picture theatre owners with respect to the repeal of the Admission Tax before the Treasury Department officials, and our statements in this relation, which were supplemented by our brief, are reflected in the public statement just issued by Secretary Mellon.

"While the recommendation of Secretary Mellon is in itself a great step forward in our campaign for the elimination of the Admission Tax, theatre owners must realize and appreciate that the unified and concerted effort of motion picture theatre owners in the United States is still required with their representatives in Congress, so that the relief sought will become a reality in the next session of Congress."

The foregoing statement has been sent from the headquarters of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America to all theatre owners, and supplements a campaign which has been carried on for weeks past. Already the theatre owners of the country have been supplied with a series of three suggested letters to be sent by them to their Congressman, together with other ammunition stressing the position of the theatre owners, and reflecting the attitude of their audiences, toward the burdensome Admission Tax.

It is of supreme importance that every owner of a motion picture theatre in America should appreciate the necessity for quick and concerted action. The time remaining for their concerted action upon their Congressmen is short. The attitude and recommendation of the Secretary of the Treasury for the repeal of the tax makes the presentation of the theatre owners' case to their Congressmen at this time a matter of supreme importance. It is the duty of every theatre owner to make the effort. By unified, concerted, constructive work, the advantage thus far secured must be followed up if the desired repeal is to be secured.

This necessity is further emphasized by a telegram received by the president of the M. P. T. O. A. from John A. Schwalm, a national director of the organization, at Hamilton, Ohio. Mr. Schwalm says:

"Congratulations are due you and other Eastern leaders on Secretary Mellon's article in newspaper this morning regarding admission taxes. Exhibitors should not think this is a settled matter. You and other leaders know that the fight has only begun. It will take concerted effort to get the Secretary's recommendation through Congress. Suggest you advise exhibitors immediately to write their Congressmen and Senators to support the recommendation of the Secretary."

Famous Well Fixed, Says Saunders

Famous Players-Lasky Corporation earnings this year will be somewhat parallel to those of the past annum and, with the present economies in mind, the position of the company should be a strong one by March 15, states Controller R. W. Saunders. This statement refutes reports that Famous was in need of new financing or recapitalization.

Advances going on for more than a year caused Famous to "take the bull by the horns" relative to stars' salaries. With material on the shelf to provide for releases during the next few months the company was in a position to take its present stand, the statement reveals.

The statement also discloses that Adolph Zukor now holds, but not in his own name, more stock than he did in 1920. The recent listing of 14,228 shares of the company's common stock was to provide for the acquisition of one-half of the capital stock of the Hill Street Fire-Proof Building Company of Los Angeles and one-half of the capital stock of the New York and Pacific Coast Amusement Company, also of Los Angeles. This makes the corporation the sole owner of these two companies, it was explained.

Ray Visits New York

Charles Ray, Associated Exhibitors' star, is now paying his second visit to New York, expecting to remain in the East for several weeks. He is accompanied by Mrs. Ray, Albert A. Kidder, Jr., general manager of Charles Ray Productions, and Frederick Sullivan, who directed the production of "The Courtship of Myles Standish."

Fredman Returns

After a visit here of several weeks Ernest Fredman, editor of the Film Renter, published in London, returned home Saturday, November 10. During his stay here Mr. Fredman met many of the leading lights in the industry.

Godsol Calls Exhibitor Control Industry's Real Menace

Production Evils a Matter for Individual Care He Says in Statement That Minces No Words

[Editor's Note—F. J. Godsol, President of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is not using the pat phrase when he says that he is not addicted to the practice of issuing statements. The declaration that follows takes on additional weight, therefore, from that fact. Further, between the lines, there is a very evident invitation to other executives to come forth and take definite action this time instead of letting the present situation evaporate in another flurry of talk.]

By F. J. GODSOL

I HAVE always refrained from giving interviews or issuing statements about the picture industry as I feel the public is not interested in what I might have to say. Besides, nothing that has appeared in the press about the ills of the industry has helped to cure them.

I have again been asked for a statement and I now feel like expressing my views, although with very little hope of any good resulting.

Much has been said about the present high cost of production. High cost of production exists and should be remedied. But nothing will be gained by any plan so far suggested.

Cost is simply a question of supply and demand of material and labor.

There are too few leading film artists, outstanding directors, continuity writers, art directors and others for the yearly production of pictures, with the result that all producers are continually bidding for the same people.

This cannot be remedied by temporarily shutting down studios because as soon as the studios reopen, the producers will again start fishing out of the same pond and salaries will again soar.

Another fundamental factor entering into high cost is the unnecessary extra time taken by directors in the production of their pictures. This is and has been difficult to control because of the arbitrary attitude assumed by the present day director of importance.

There are also the large carrying and overhead charges which can only be fairly absorbed by greater instead of lesser production.

In my opinion, high cost of production is not an issue for the industry collectively but for each producer to individually solve and it can only be accomplished by the individual developing unknown artists and by the employment of uncelebrated directors on reasonable terms who will agree to and will "shoot" their pictures within a limited number of days.

Today, in the motion picture industry, the real vital issue is whether or not the producer is to receive fair and reasonable prices for his pictures.

If rental prices come down with a reduction in costs, the producer will be no better off than now.

Exhibitors have merged their interests in a great many cities with the result that all the theatres are in the control of one man or one group of men. In many other centers they have formed booking combinations. All to force the producer to accept rental prices arbitrarily fixed by the exhibitor.

Why do not the producers take action —not talk—to destroy this danger, the greatest menace to the picture industry!

At present there are a few so called competitive points where the exhibitor is required to pay more than the true value for pictures to partly make up for the producers' forced underselling in other towns. This is unfair to that exhibitor and is unsound business.

Pictures should be sold everywhere for what they are worth—no more and no less—and to enable the exhibitor and the producer each to make a fair profit on their respective investments.

At present there are exhibitors in dozens of large controlled cities getting pictures at a mere fraction of their value.

This serious situation is well known to all producers and, in my opinion, it is only the vanity of the heads of the larger producing companies which permits this condition to exist and will permit it to continue until it strangles them. It seems to me these executives are sitting back, each thinking they will weather the storm, and that all their competitors will go bankrupt, when they will then single handed stamp out this evil.

Another important element is the cost of distribution. Why should there be ten offices in each of thirty cities with thousands of employees selling the same kind of merchandise to the same customers? Others have already made suggestions to remedy this.

The cost of distribution can be reduced one-half and the saving applied in reduction of film rentals.

All of these unsound conditions can be remedied if three or four distributing companies, or more if others should choose to join, distribute as one.

Joint distribution would put an end to the dictation of prices by exhibitors. If a sufficient number of pictures were in the hands of one distributing agency, exhibitors who persisted in their present strangling methods would soon find themselves facing a shortage of good pictures and they would then be willing to deal on a fair basis.

A joint distributing organization should agree to supply pictures to all exhibitors throughout the United States on a percentage of the theatre's gross takings, the percentage to be fairly arrived at by an arbitration committee composed of exhibitors and producers. Such percentages must allow each exhibitor a fair profit and also permit each producer a fair, even though proportionately smaller, return.

What I have here expressed will probably bring an avalanche of protests and reproaches from producers, exhibitors, artists, directors and everyone connected wtih the industry, but I am stating my honest belief.

Mine is not a cry of personal distress. In fact, I feel that with the warm personal friendships of many leading exhibitors and with the powerful co-operation of Mr. W. R. Hearst, Goldwyn Cosmopolitan is better able to cope with the situation than some of the other companies.

The Goldwyn Pictures Corporation is stronger today than ever in its history. Its pictures are good and the exhibitor's demand for them is greater than in former years. Its sales have never been so large. Its financial condition is sound.

I have been asked why, if these are the facts, Goldwyn stock is quoted so low. My reply is that I am building up the Goldwyn business and not the stock market. Our accountants' (Price, Waterhouse & Co.) last audit shows that the book value of Goldwyn stock is forty dollars per share, excluding good will. Nevertheless the fact remains, we are not getting adequate rentals for our pictures in a great number of territories.

Taught by Movies

More than 3,000 pupils are now receiving lessons by motion pictures in Crandall's neighborhood theatres, Washington, D. C., as part of an experiment undertaken this year by the Washington school board. The experiment is being watched with a great deal of interest, not only in Washington, but in other cities where visual instruction is under consideration.

Throw Out Your Chest

By Carl Laemmle

I am proud to be in the moving picture business.

Once upon a time I was anything but proud of it. I considered it a game, a gamble, a good way to make money. Others felt the same way.

We called it a game. We felt it was a make-shift, a good one while it lasted, but we didn't expect it to last very long. There wasn't anything institutional about it. It looked like a case of "gather ye roses while ye may." So we gathered. And in gathering, we now and then nearly ruined the bush. We never thought much about fertilizing it. We thought but little of its future growth. We were sure its future was almost past.

Then, in spite of our carelessness, the blamed thing grew and flourished and gave off a more beautiful flower than ever.

Today it is giving rare flowers to the world—Beauty, Happiness, Entertainment, Education, Development!

Let's quit calling it a game and thinking of it as such. Let's think of it as one of the most solid institutions in the whole world of business. Let's talk of our pride in it and of our love for it, and let's do so at every opportunity.

Let's quit apologizing for it!

Think! What other business has a greater right to live and to command respect? Think of any line of business. Compare it with the moving picture business. How does it stack up? Is it more necessary? Is it doing a greater good? Is it a source of satisfaction to more people? You'll have a mighty hard time finding any line of endeavor more worth while.

Our business has had its detractors. The trouble is that we have not fought back hard enough. We have let them hammer at us for years and we have put up all too feeble a resistance.

Let's spread the gospel about our industry. Let's make the knockers put away their hammers.

Let's start with ourselves. Let's quit belittling our own work. Let's quit befouling our own nest. Then let's spread out from our own circle and tell our friends about our business. Call it propaganda or what you will. Let's show the world that we are not a trifling set of easy-virtued men and women.

We've gone through the throes of the birth of a new art or business long enough. We've learned to crawl. We've learned to walk. We've learned to run and we are hitting a pace which commands the wide-eyed wonder of men in other lines of industry.

If you're in this business, you don't have to back water for anybody, anywhere, anytime! You're an important piece of work. You're in one of the biggest things in the world.

Throw out your chest!

Industry Not Hurt by Salaries Paid to the Stars, Says Brandt

B. P. SCHULBERG, of Preferred Pictures, says that his experience as a motion picture producer does not coincide with the recent statement made by William Brandt, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of New York State, that the difficulties now being felt by the film industry can be traced to the enormous salaries paid to screen stars.

"I do not doubt for a moment Mr. Brandt's discovery that, on one production cost sheet, he found salaries constituted two-thirds of the expense. But I do feel that the picture he mentions must have been an unusual case—the exception, not the rule.

"In my own experience salaries average ten per cent. of the cost of producing. At this rate I think almost any one will admit that to put names of players who are proven successes into a picture is added insurance against failure, not extravagance by any means.

"To my mind the biggest difficulty seems to be in expenditures made to serve the purposes of a selfish or conceited director or producer who puts thousands of dollars into a picture that will never register when it reaches the screen.

"When I study production costs I can't help but feel that most of the high-salaried players today earn every cent they make. They could not command the salaries they do if they didn't bring that much in at the box office."

Business on Upgrade

Pathe Branch Managers Report Prosperous Conditions

Reports of good film business have been brought to Pathe's home office from two branch agencies in widely separated territories. Reports from these agencies do not state that Pathe alone is enjoying prosperity, but that the motion picture business in general is on the upgrade.

Pathe's branch manager at Cleveland, Oscar J. Ruby, who has been in conference with home office officials in New York during the past week, reports business in the Cleveland territory to be on the upgrade and the outlook decidedly encouraging.

"Business generally in the Cleveland territory is on the upgrade," declared Mr. Ruby when interviewed this week. "Conditions at Akron, O., a stronghold of the rubber industry, and at Youngstown, the steel center, are unsettled at the present time, but in the rest of the territory prosperous conditions prevail, and the picture market reflects the era of good business."

The continuance of prevailing prosperous conditions in the Milwaukee territory is confidently anticipated by exhibitors and film men in that part of the country, declares W. A. Aschmann, Pathe's Milwaukee branch. Mr. Aschmann, who is at present on a business trip to the Pathe home office in New York, points to the extensive theatre building operations in that territory as indicative of the confidence of local theatre men in the future.

"There has never been a wider distribution of screen product than right now in this territory," Mr. Aschmann stated.

J. S. Woody on Tour

Associated Exhibitors' Official Visiting Branch Sales Offices

John S. Woody, general manager of Associated Exhibitors, left early this week for a tour of branch sales offices of that organization. He expects to go as far west as Chicago, making several stops and conferring with the branch managers of Associated and important exhibitors at centers between that city and New York.

Since he became general manager Mr. Woody has reorganized and considerably increased the company's field staff, and placed it upon a basis of greater efficiency than ever before. It is understood that the present swing around the circle is only the first of a series of trips which will bring him in close touch with Associated representatives and leading theatre managers. These travels will cover many weeks, with only brief returns to New York.

Before his departure Mr. Woody expressed complete satisfaction with the present business of Associated Exhibitors and the excellent prospects for the new season.

Goldwyn Club Dance

Annual Event Promises to Be Brilliant Affair

The Goldwyn Club will give its annual dance in the grand ball room of the Pennsylvania Hotel, New York, Friday evening, November 23. The Dance Committee has been hard at work for nearly a month preparing for the event and it is a foregone conclusion that their efforts will be crowned with complete success.

Vincent Lopez will be there with his famous Pennsylvania Hotel Orchestra. The Capitol Theatre entertainers will participate. Many prominent screen players will attend. Marion Davies, Thomas Meighan, Gloria Swanson are among those who have accepted invitations.

Lull Affords Good Opportunities

An example of the bigger casts now available soon will be seen in the Gasnier production of "Poisoned Paradise," a Preferred Picture from the novel by Robert W. Service. B. P. Schulberg, who had listed the players to take part in the picture, immediately discarded the early selections with the announcement of the studio shut downs.

"I am delaying the selection of players because I am sure I can find a better cast, not only for the principal roles, but for the minor parts as well, than ever before has been possible," said Mr. Schulberg. "The list of genuine favorites now available for any big picture makes it possible for the careful producer to give theatre goers a thing they seldom have seen—all-star productions that are all-star in fact as well as in name." Clara Bow will enact the leading feminine role.

National Changes Hands

National Non-Theatrical Motion Pictures, Inc., which has been in operation over two years, has changed hands. The interests formerly owned by Harry Levey, Louis Weiss and Don Carlos Ellis have been purchased by a group of men who were financially interested in the company for the past year.

The newly elected officers are: F. C. Pitcher, president; C. M. Strieby, vice president, and W. J. Bold, secretary and treasurer. Francis M. Hugo, formerly secretary of New York State, is chairman of the board of directors. In addition to the above gentlemen, the following comprise the board of directors: Mark E. Gillis, Rose E. Tapley and T. R. Pitcher.

Waste Eliminated, Says Lasky; New Production Plans Forming

OUR movement to eliminate waste in the production of motion pictures has already borne fruit in a new frame of mind in Hollywood. This change of attitude is extremely vital, because the waste of the past was largely due to the mental attitude with which the studio people approached production. Because of this mental readjustment I am confident that in the future we shall be able to make pictures at a cost less than the present price levels—and we'll make better pictures. So confident am I, in fact, that we are preparing for the production of additional pictures which, released on a schedule of one a week, will carry us through to next September."

This was the word brought back from Hollywood this week by Jesse L. Lasky, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, whose recent pronouncement against extravagance in picture-making caused a furore in the picture business. Mr. Lasky, having seen the effect of the closing order on the studio forces, declares half the battle against soaring production costs has already been won.

"Some people got the idea that we were not going to make any more pictures," said Mr. Lasky. "This is silly. There will be no curtailment of production, but there will be a curtailment of waste. Others are construing the move as a step back to cheaper pictures. This is equally ridiculous. Pictures are not good enough now—probably never will be good enough. And it is our job to make them better and better.

"We are simply determined to make every dollar spent in production return us a dollar value on the screen—and we will make better pictures.

"Since we announced our determination to curtail extravagance in pictures there has been a great deal of loose talk. Some producers said they were going to follow our [illegible] spend of the situation are extremely simple and should not be cloaked in mystery. They are as follows:

"For a long time production costs have been mounting. This nobody can deny. Everybody agreed something should be done about it. But, as in the case of the weather, it was all talk and no action.

"Having been the pioneer in pretty nearly every movement looking to the betterment of this business, Famous Players decided to take the bull by the horns and, regardless of what anybody else did, make some move that would eliminate the waste that was the besetting sin of this business. We were able to do it, because we had foreseen that some such action was inevitable and had prepared for it by getting far ahead of our release schedule.

"Our action does not mean that there is anything radically wrong with the picture industry. The picture business is sounder now than ever before; and if there be anything wrong it is entirely because of lack of co-operation among producers. All actors are not overpaid, but some actors are. All directors are not extravagant but some directors are. When salaries of actors and directors are out of proportion you can attibute the condition to the unethical and foolishly shortsighted competition among producers.

"We realized all this before we made our decision. We realized that some producers would attempt to make capital out of our action and make us the goats. But we decided that, whatever any other company might do, we were going to set our own business straight.

"So far as we are concerned the remedy for the condition which grew up is in the reorganization of our studio forces and methods to the end that directors, writers and players will have more time to map out each production thoroughly before turning the camera. Waste has been caused to a great extent by the rush in production. By giving each producing unit time to figure out its continuity, its sets, its camera schedule and its costs we shall get infinitely better pictures at a cost which will represent 100 per cent. value for 100 per cent. expense.

Ibanez to Pen for Films; Says Movies Excel Books as Outlet

By TOM WALLER

V. BLASCO IBANEZ embarked today, November 14, for France where he will spend the next few months at his country place in Mentune. According to impressions he seems to have made at Will Hays' office, the writer of "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse" is firmly convinced of the great power wielded by the movies. This conviction has been fortified by his intensive survey of the American industry which he temporarily adjourned for the homeward trip. Such a limitless scope is covered by the camera that the great author is understood to be thinking seriously of relinquishing his novelizing to a secondary position in order to make way for stories exclusively adaptable for the screen.

Mr. Ibanez, with his secretary acting in the capacity of an interpreter, spent over an hour in the Hays' sanctum. This visit with the president of the industry thus closed the writer's tour and study of America's cinema field. Through the interpreter Mr. Hays sounded the author on many points relative to the American product.

Thus Mr. Hays learned officially that the Spanish author is delighted with the skilful manner in which local producers have handled many of his works of fiction. Accuracy of detail and truthful interpretation seemed to be literally engrained in practically every American director who has translated his novels to the screen, Ibanez is said to have commented. Proportionately, the American scenario writers, who adapted such fiction into filmdom material, were extolled by the writer.

The dean of the industry here enthusiastically coincided with an observation of the author that the movies by far constitute the greatest outlet for graphic and constructive ideas. Whereas thousands of people have read and are reading his books, mil- would seem to be that many of the globe's citizenry, lacking in imaginative genius, either fail to appreciate or to construe correctly the ideas and motives which to them are obscure in book type. Another argument along this line is that many are easily exhausted or discouraged in page turning

The percentage, therefore, of those who visualize the true movements and climaxes of penned thoughts is comparatively small to the vast populace that would sit back and have such interpretations reviewed in film life before their eyes.

Accordingly, the Hays' office understands, the author of so many vividly colorful narratives and masterpieces will devote considerable of his time in the future to writing stories which will be equally illuminating, only that they will meet in plot and action with all of the conformities of screenland.

Mabel Condon Marries

Russell Juarez Birdwell, "Bird," magazine writer for Mary Pickford, formerly newspaper writer, has taken Mabel Condon, manager for a group of motion picture stars, as his bride. The couple were recently married in Hollywood at the Church of the Blessed Sacrament, the Rev. Father Stack officiating. Attendants were Cherie Valentine, the groom's sister and famed Kosloff dancer, and Charles R. Condon, the bride's brother and well known writer on film subjects.

Declares Dividend

At a meeting held Monday afternoon the Board of Directors of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation declared the regular quarterly dividend of $2.00 per share on the common stock, payable January 2, 1924, to stockholders of record at the close of business on December 15, 1923. The books will not close.

Fifty Exhibitors to Serve on F. B. O. Advisory Board

AS a first move to better productions for their coming schedule the Film Booking Offices are establishing an exhibitors' advisory board to pass on all stories and production possibilities before the actual production has been started, according to a statement made this week by J. I. Schnitzer.

The idea of a film board is an entirely new one in the industry and marks the first step to be taken by producers and distributors to co-operate with the distributor and the public to supply them the kind of production they want. "The exhibitor," stated Mr. Schnitzer, "will now be able to say what kind of pictures he can sell and we will know in advance what pictures he is willing to buy."

The board will consist of fifty of the most prominent exhibitors in the country and they will [illegible] questionnaire which the members of the board will fill out. These will be returned to the F. B. O. home office and the advice they contain will be acted upon.

"It will be our endeavor," continued Mr. Schnitzer, "to supply the public what they want in the way of pictures and the only way we can feel the pulse of the public is through the exhibitor. For this reason we have established the board and to date a half dozen very prominent men in the exhibition field have volunteered their services. We will abide by their decision; they know what the public wants and we are willing to take their advice."

Over 200 letters have gone forth from the F. B. O. to exhibitors throughout the United States asking that they serve on the board. Of these fifty will be selected from the principal cities. They will be non-salaried and will serve solely for the purpose of bettering of pictures.

With this in view, salesmen, branch managers and divisional chiefs of the F. B. O.

Motion Picture Day Campaign Wins Theatre Owners Support Everywhere

Big Mass Meetings in Boston, Philadelphia, Seattle, Cleveland, Newark and New York City

THE campaign for National Motion Picture Day, sponsored by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, is sweeping to a triumphant climax. The enthusiasm which has marked the campaign from the day it was begun has mounted to tremendous heights during the past week. As November 19 draws near, the theatre owners of the entire country are co-operating to an extent never before secured for an individual campaign. Their enthusiasm is being directed along comprehensive lines of action with the result that National Motion Picture Day is sure to be the biggest achievement of its kind in the history of their organized body.

Boston Holds Big Mass Meeting

Giant strides were made in New England as a result of a giant mass meeting of New England theatre owners, held at the Hotel Lenox, Boston, Mass., on Thursday, November 8. A banner turnout marked the session which was presided over by Ernest Horstman and Jacob Lourie, as chairmen. Addresses were made by Harry Davis, president of the M. P. T. O. of Western Pennsylvania; R. F. Woodhull, president of the New Jersey unit; David Adams, president of the New Hampshire body, and Sydney S. Cohen, national president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America. Their remarks were received with great enthusiasm and every theatre owner in the big crowd present signed a pledge card to participate in the observance of the day, and to turn over 25 per cent. of his receipts on November 19 to the national treasury.

Matters of organization were then taken up and as a result of this discussion, Massachusetts has been divided into districts with a special committee in each district to secure pledge cards and facilitate the exploitation plans of the various theatres. In addition to the local committees, a general committee of three men was touring the state outside of Boston, consisting of Stanley Sumner of Newton, George Ramsdell of Malden and E. D. Rhind of Attleboro.

It is expected that Mayor Curley of Boston will issue a proclamation on National Motion Picture Day and efforts are being made to secure a similar endorsement from the Governor of Massachusetts. Mr. John H. Casey, representing Mayor Curley, was present at the meeting and promised the active co-operation of the city's chief executives and department heads.

Mr. Adams and Mr. Bean, Jr., representing the M. P. T. O. of New Hampshire, pledged the fullest support of their state and returned home with pledge cards and exploitation material for distribution among theatre owners.

Cleveland Meets

On Friday, November 9, a similar mass meeting was called at Cleveland, under the auspices of the M. P. T. O. of Cleveland, of which O. E. Bellis is president and William J. Banks is business manager. Also active in the arrangements for the meeting was David Schumann, a member of the board of directors of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio, and Martin G. Smith, president of the M. P. T. O. of Ohio.

Mr. Bellis introduced Mr. Smith, who gave a comprehensive report on the activity of the state on behalf of National Motion Picture Day. He stated that pledge cards were coming in rapidly, that splendid co-operation is evident everywhere and that the theatre owners of Ohio are heart and soul behind the movement. As a case in point, the following wire was read from John A. Schwalm, a member of the National Board of Directors, who was at the moment touring the southern part of the state: "There is so much to do here and so little time to do it in, I thought I would be able to serve the organization better by staying here on the job. With men like Dave Schumann, John Urbansky, Martin Smith, Harry Davis, Sydney Cohen and other leaders at the Cleveland meeting I do not doubt the results. Retail merchants here have endorsed our movement. Tonight we will endeavor to get the endorsement of the trades council. We will spend five hundred dollars in this district advertising National Motion Picture Day. Cincinnati is going fine. Have arranged a pep meeting for Middletown for Monday. Success is written all over this event. Southern Ohio challenges Northern Ohio on results for Motion Picture Day. Regards." Mr. Schwalm's telegram was sent from Hamilton, Ohio.

The challenge was accepted by the theatre owners of Northern Ohio and the race is on. As an opening gun the Cleveland contingent read an official proclamation from their Mayor, as follows:

Cleveland Mayor Endorses Day

"Monday, November 19th, has been set aside throughout the United States as National Motion Picture Day. During the week of November 19th, educational motion pictures will be shown in all the moving picture theatres, all of whom have pledged 25 per cent of their gross receipts of Monday, November 19th, to endow a fund for said purpose. The marvelous motion picture photography has become universal in its scope, both as entertainment and education, and has done many enlightening things, including patriotic and social movements for the country. The leaders of the motion picture enterprise are anxious to go forward and improve their art. The appreciation of the public will be of great aid in this effort.

"In calling attention to this important movement, I recommend the support of it and urge attendance at the moving picture theatres to the extent that it will encourage the leaders in their far-reaching enterprise."

The above proclamation is signed by Fred Kohler, Mayor of Cleveland.

Music Tax Discussed

Following this, George P. Aarons of Philadelphia discussed the music tax situation and a heated controversy developed between him and a representative of the American Society of Authors and Composers, Mr. Frankel, an attorney of Cleveland.

The theatre owners present agreed to a man to unite in their legal campaign against the American Society because of unfair and oppressive tactics pursued by its representative in the Ohio territory. Mr. Aarons pointed out that theatre owners in Philadelphia, through litigation with the American Society, have paid no license fee to the society in over three years and are paying none at the present time. He states that the theatre owners would take their legal battle to the highest court in the land to secure relief.

The discussion of National Motion Picture Day was then resumed and definite plans arranged. All present signed pledge cards and guaranteed their support. The State Headquarters has sent to every theatre owner in the territory a four page folder, outlining the purpose and importance of National Motion Picture Day and stating the various tie-ups, contacts and endorsements which have been secured. It also contains suggestions for a definite campaign of participation and announces the State Committee of Local Chairmen, comprising 200 active workers from every section of the state. It is signed by John A. Schwalm and Martin G. Smith.

"Go-to-Movie Week" in Hamilton

Fred S. Meyer of Hamilton, Ohio, accepted appointment in the following wire, as announced by national headquarters: "I herewith accept your appointment as Chairman of National Motion Picture Day for Butler County and will put forth every effort to make it a success. Hamilton theatres, acting as a unit, will make week of November 19th "Go-to-Movies Week." Have already procured unanimous endorsement of Merchants' Association and will ask other civic organizations for backing."

Cincinnati in Line

The National Motion Picture Day Committee for Cincinnati and Southern Ohio met on Tuesday, November 6th, at the Hotel Gibson, Cincinnati. J. A. Ackerman, president, presided and Godfrey Kotzin acted as secretary. All plans for the day were endorsed and the theatre owners present agreed to celebrate the event and signed cards to that effect. Committees were designated to carry on the work.

Washington Endorses Day

The Far West is also active. The first step of the newly formed M. P. T. O. of Washington, which is actively affiliated with the M. P. T. O. A., was to give the hearty support of the body against war tax measures and in favor of National Motion Picture Day. A wire received at National Headquarters from Ray A. Grombacher, trustee, M. P. T. O. of Washington, reads in part as follows: "Association went on record to affiliate with national organization, giving their hearty support against war tax measures. Also their support of National Motion Picture Day, November 19th. Slides will go on screens and advertising in newspapers immediately all over the state. Appointed entire Board of Trustees sub-chairmen for state. Immediate action will be taken to secure every possible theatre in state to give support and twenty-five per cent. of receipts to national organization. Keep your eyes on Washington organization."

Huge Campaign in New York

Affairs are progressing splendidly for the big street parade which will be held on Saturday, November 17th, under the direction of J. Arthur Hirsch. Charles Schwartz and Joseph Jamie, Hy Gainsboro and the chairmen of the various precincts. The services of the Police Band have been offered by Commissioner Enright of New York and it

Clemmer Heads Washington Organization of Exhibitors

THE first annual convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of the State of Washington, held November 7 and 8 at Seattle, went on record by its first resolution to affiliate with the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America and to endorse the policies and principles of the national body, including its activities against the admission tax and in favor of National Motion Picture Day.

Howard S. Clemmer of Spokane was elected president of the new unit; L. A. Drinkwine of Tacoma, first vice-president, and J. M. Hone of Bellingham, secretary and treasurer. The following theatre owners constitute a board of trustees: Ray A. Grombacher, Spokane; L. A. Drinkwine, Tacoma; G. G. Johnson, Kelso; C. A. Swansen, Everett; J. A. McGill, Port Orchard; W. H. Bruen, Seattle; F. B. Walton, Bellingham; W. F. Flint, Arlington, and John Danz, Seattle.

A telegram received by Sydney S. Cohen, national president, from Ray A. Grombacher, a trustee of the new association, reveals the interest which the State of Washington is taking in National Motion Picture Day. He says: "The association went on record to affiliate with the national organization, giving their hearty support against war tax measure. Also their support for National Motion Picture Day, November 19. Slides will go on screens, advertising in newspapers immediately all over the state. Appointed entire board of trustees-sub-chairmen for state. Immediate action will be taken to secure every possible theatre to give support and 25 per cent. of receipts to national organization. Keep your eyes on Washington organization."

Wins First Suit

Knickerbocker Theatre Co. Not Liable for Musician's Death

The first suit for damages to be tried as a result of the callapse of the Knickerbocker Theatre in January 28, 1922, resulted in a directed verdict in favor of the Knickerbocker Theatre Company. Suit was brought to recover damages for the death of George S. Freeman, a member of the Knickerbocker orchestra. Justice Frederick L. Siddons directed the jury to find a verdict for the defendant on the ground that a servant could hold his employer liable only by showing a specific act of negligence and that Freeman's administrator had failed to show evidence of such negligence. It was announced that the attorneys for the administrator will appeal from the verdict.

The action of the court in directing a verdict for the theatre company, it is pointed out, will not establish a precedent for the decision of other suits, because the points at issue in the Freeman suit involve only the relations between the theatre, as an employer, and its injured servant. Patron rights are under a different rule.

Theatre Owners Support Motion Picture Day

is expected that the Postman's Band will also be in line. Both in scope and originality this parade is expected to outdo anything of the kind ever attempted.

Eastern Pennsylvania Active

A mass meeting was held on Friday, November 9th, at the Hotel Vendig, Philadelphia, by the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania. Addresses were made by Harry Davis of Pittsburgh and M. E. Comerford of Scranton. The large gathering of theatre owners present promised that their territory would be up among the leaders when the returns are all in and pledged their cooperation to the movement.

Kentucky Busy

Kentucky is hard at work, according to a letter received by the National Headquarters from Fred J. Dolle, Chairman of the drive there. He states, "In connection with Motion Picture Day, we have secured the cooperation of the various civic departments in the city of Louisville, also that of the four local dailies, and we are now giving our attention to the state of Kentucky. Cards are being mailed to every exhibitor in the state, soliciting their cooperation on this day and we expect to get a great deal of results therefrom."

Maryland, Too

Word has likewise come of a big drive in Maryland, where Frank G. Durkee, President of the M. P. T. O. of Maryland, in connection with W. E. Stumpf, Secretary and with Thomas Soriero and C. E. Whitehurst, the campaign is arousing much interest. Over one half of the theatre owners of the state are signed up already and by November 19th it is expected that practically every man will be in line. The committee recently sent a hurry call to National Headquarters for additional trailers, slides and one sheets.

New Jersey Meeting

Wednesday, November 13th, was the date of a big gathering of New Jersey theatre owners, at Achtel-Stetter's, 840 Broad Street, Newark. Harry Hecht and Peter Adams lined up the Passaic County theatre owners: D. J. Hennesy and Louis Rosenthal those of Essex County; David Kaiserstein, Hudson County; and Henry P. Nelson, Union County. R. F. Woodhull, President of the New Jersey unit, was present on behalf of concerted action for National Motion Picture Day. Joseph Seider, Chairman of the New Jersey Motion Picture Day Committee, is touring the state and reports that theatre owners already are advertising the event and great result are expected.

Thus it appears that all over the country, theatre owners are aroused to the importance of the big celebration and are realizing that extra effort must be put behind it. They are getting behind the day as they would the biggest pictures they ever have shown and are turning their showmanship to good account in accomplishing the desired results. They are co-operating in every way; securing endorsements from Governors, Mayors and public officials; tying up with merchants and establishing valuable connections with civic and social organizations of all kinds.

Monday, November 19th, is established already as the one big day of the theatre owners' calendar. Every exhibitor in the country, large or small, should do his share in accomplishing the object of the day in furtherance of his own interest and the progress of the industry.

Big Guns' Ulterior Motive Is Amalgamation, Fairbanks Tells Commission

IN unmistakable language Douglas Fairbanks told the Federal Trade Commission that the big boys of the industry, despite their external pacification, are internally centered on one big ulterior motive. That, he said, is amalgamation.

This started with a bang the commission's inquiry into Famous Players-Lasky at Los Angeles to where it had been adjourned at the previous session a few weeks ago in New York City.

Pending the outcome of this investigation Fairbanks said he has postponed all action on his next production. Existing conditions, he testified, give him no assurance of the financial outcome of his picture, "The Thief of Bagdad," which, he stated, will cost him close to $2,000,000.

Advises from the coastal hearing are that Mary Pickford, succeeding her husband on the stand, attacked the block booking system with vehemence, claiming that it would ruin the business and force her retirement if it and other conditions continue to exist for much longer. The actress maintained that key cities constitute two-fifths of the returns and that the block system will eliminate those endeavoring to make big films.

Attorney Robert Swain, chief of Famous counsel, attempted to learn how Miss Pickford had been damaged by the so-termed combinations. In this respect he sought to disclose her earnings as a producer. Commission Counsel Fuller objected and Examiner Alvord reserved decision. Should he over-rule, Famous will endeavor to obtain this information when the Commission returns to New York City.

The next session will probably take place in Jacksonville, Fla., in January.

Baby Peggy visits Carl Laemmle, Universal President, during her stay in New York. While at the Universal home office she perched on Laemmle's knee and saw the screening of her first big feature production, "The Darling of New York," a Universal-Jewel production soon to be released

Changes Title

Rupert Hughes' new Goldwyn picture is to be called "Reno," instead of "Law Against Law," which was the tentative title it bore while in production.

While "Law Against Law" fitted the theme of the story which deals with the different divorce laws of our various states, it was felt that "Reno" was even more fitting, inasmuch as Reno is the big divorce colony of this country.

Films Eliminate Sectionalism, N. Y. Mayor Tells Exhibitors

THEATRE owners at a meeting championed by the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce in the Hotel Astor on November 14 had a distinguished speaker in Acting Mayor Hulbert of Manhattan. This official enthusiastically expressed his approval of National Motion Picture Day. The movie, he emphasized, has become wedded to American life.

Dr. William L. Ettinger, Superintendent of Schools in New York City, also endorsed filmdom. "Many motion picture theatre owners cooperate with the school authorities and throw open their show houses mornings to pupils of the schools when educational pictures are shown," he stated.

In addition to their educational value, the speaker remarked, movies are fast growing to rival travel, since travelogues depict all and more than many a traveler in foreign lands would observe.

In introducing Dr. Ettinger, it was brought out by Charles O'Reilly that the Superintendent had taught more than one of those present at the dinner how to read and write.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of America, unabashed by the pointed remark, bared the point when he arose and said that Dr. Ettinger had inculcated in him the problems of mathematics. "I did not know there were such things as motion pictures in those days," Cohen laughed.

The big parade along the White Way two days prior to Movie Day was discussed at length. Prints of this manifestation will be in the hands of exhibitors all over the country to show in their houses on November 19.

Acting Mayor Hulbert's speech, which was the feature of the meeting, in part follows:

"Motion pictures have accomplished such splendid results within such a comparatively few years that one hesitates to predict their potentialities of the future for fear of underestimation rather than exaggeration.

"As a popular form of entertainment, the movies have become wedded to our American life and given a spur to latent enthusiasms that have been productive of individual as well as civic advantage. The human reaction from the delimiting atmosphere of the loft and the office, from the grind of poverty and from the ennui of monotonous existence finds measurable compensation in the flickering film which touches life at every angle with an influence at once basic and beneficent.

"As a means of visual education the motion picture occupies a unique place. The current happenings of the world now appear before our eyes. The past lives again with vividness and reality, the mysteries of the sciences are made comprehensible to the most unlettered, the great panoramas of history, colorless within the covers of a book, are bathed in a flood of illumination on the motion picture screen, and the wonders of nature in its countless manifestations become the instant possession of all.

"The City of New York is easily the greatest amusement center in the world. We are all glad to observe, however, that the resentful attitude toward New York by reason of its priority in things theatrical is rapidly subsiding before the smoothing influence of the cinema. The smallest towns enjoy first-run photoplays at the very moment that we are being thrilled.

"At least the motion picture has been one instrument for the removal of animosity and sectionalism that should help to a closer understanding and a better feeling of friendship between this city and the rest of the country."

Battle Over Film Contract Nears Amicable Settlement

By TOM WALLER

ONE of the most bitter litigations over contractual rights of a picture ever recorded in the annals of movie history will doubtless be amicably settled and as such relegated to the files by the time this edition reaches you. The trouble, which had its inception in a mere squabble last April, took form with such rapidity that it soon developed into a lawsuit, after all attempts at covered mutuality and closed conferences had failed. The plaintiffs were headed under the title of the Theatre Owners Chamber of Commerce and the defendant was the Cosmopolitan Productions and Goldwyn as a distributing agency. But who actually owned "Enemies of Women," around which the fuss centered, no one knew and no one could find out. Thus recourse to the courts was futile.

Matters looked hopeless for the plaintiffs even a few weeks ago when Will Hays arrived from Europe. Charles O'Reilly, head of the T. O. C. C., unloaded the entire situation to Hays for a verdict on the next move. Hays promised to address the organization, according to reports, but at the time in question was unable to attend.

Things seemed to have died on their feet, as far as interested exhibitors were concerned, when an announcement today, November 15, sprung the startling surprise. This was that as the result of a secret powwow yesterday among Hays, O'Reilly, Nathan Burkan, counsel for Cosmopolitan, and Senator Walker, attorney for the Greater New York organization, a compromise agreeable to them all was effected.

It remains for some 100 exhibitors to sanction this armistice among officials before it really can be put into a working capacity. That meeting is scheduled for November 16 in the Hotel Astor.

Unquestionable advices as to the nature of the compromise is that Goldwyn recognize Famous contracts for both "Enemies of Women" and "Little Old New York."

At the very outset when Cosmopolitan changed its distributing source from Famous to Goldwyn the Theatre Owners Chambers of Commerce adopted a resolution invalidating all other contracts for the two pictures except for those obtained through Famous. This condition, naturally, did not extend beyond the bounds of Greater New York but was such as to attract universal attention.

"Enemies of Women" has occupied the center of the stage, as so far only contracts relative to it have been violated. "Little Old New York" has had an exclusive run at the Cosmopolitan, New York, until a short time ago, when it was transferred to the Capitol here. Accordingly, up to the present time it has not been in a position to further the agitation and will not be flooded on the open market until the latest adjustment is effective.

As the number of resolution violators, exhibitors who played the forbidden fruit under a Goldwyn contract in territories where a Famous signature had the precedence, total but between five and ten per cent. of the Chamber's entire membership, it is obvious that the financial casualties caused thereby are comparatively few.

"Romeo and Juliet"

Inspiration to Make It Abroad With Lillian Gish and Barthelmess

"Romeo and Juliet," with Richard Barthelmess and Lillian Gish in the leading roles, will be produced by Inspiration Pictures, Inc. The production of Shakespeare's immortalt drama of love and passion will be made in Italy. The city of Verona where the feud of the Capulets and Montagues brought the romantic love of Romeo and Juliet to a tragic ending, will be utilized as a setting.

Actual filming of "Romeo and Juliet" will begin soon after the completion of George Eliot's "Romola," in which Lillian and Dorothy Gish are now working in Italy. In the meantime, the announced version of "Joan of Arc," starring Lillian Gish, will be deferred until after the completion of "Romeo and Juliet."

Balaban-Katz Summer Earnings Show Big Increase Over 1922

The directors of Balaban & Katz have inaugurated payment of dividends at the rate of $3 per annum on common stock by declearing two dividends of 25 cents per share, payable December 1 and January 1 to stock of record November 20 and December 20 respectively. There also was declared the regular quarterly dividend of 1¾ per cent. on the preferred stock, payable January 1 to stock of record December 20.

The company's income account for the third quarter of 1923 showed net increase, after interest, depreciation, reserve for income taxes, etc., of $422,429, or 13 per cent. more than the amount shown in the similar quarter of 1922. Earnings for the third quarter were at the annual rate of $5.64 per share of common stock outstanding.

The Illinois M. P. T. O. held a meeting at the Sherman Hotel last week to discuss plans for fighting the admission tax.

Dave Fineberg has sold the Savoy Theatre to the Savoy Theatre Company, composed of Tom Saxe and H. L. Pearlwitz.

Lou B. Houseman, western manager for Al H. Woods, has issued a statement that the Woods Theatre has not been sold to a syndicate composed of Marcus Loew and Aaron Jones, of Jones, Linick & Schaefer.

The following exhibitors from the Illinois association will attend the meeting at French Lick Springs next week: Ludwig Siegel, A. Schaab, L. Zahler, Samuel Abrahams, Julius Lamm and L. Brunhilde, all of Chicago; J. Miller from Woodstock, Glen Reynolds from DeKalb, Ben L. Berbe from Rochelle, R. C. Williams from Streater, and Joseph Hopp from Rock Island. The meeting will take up the question of wiping out the admission tax and exhibitors are expected from many cities in the Central West.

Jazz Week at the Stratford Theatre on the South Side was one of the banner weeks of the year. The musical program as well as the headliners from the vaudeville stage jazzed up the program so that the attendance records were smashed. Mrs. Henoch knows how to attract the crowds to this well known house.

Harry Gramp, well known exhibitor, is carrying his arm in a sling due to an automobile accident near Decatur, Ill.

Henry J. Merle, manager of the Irving Park Theatre, has bought the building and additional property, paying $313,000 for all the property.

Another movie theatre is projected for Herrin, Ill., by the Marlow Park Corporation. The plans call for a house to seat 3,000.

The Janet Theatre at 617 West North avenue is now under the management of Nathanson and Sufkin, who also operate the Ideal and Orchard theatres.

George Mence has been named manager of the Argmore Theatre on Argyle avenue, which belongs to the Gumbiner chain of houses.

This week instead of another new movie house we have an old one that is being remodeled into a bank. The Park Theatre at 3234 West North avenue, one of the best known houses in that part of the city, has been sold to the newly organized Second Humboldt State Bank.

Will Morrisey tells his friends that another new office building and theatre will be erected in the loop and the house will be named the Morrisey Theatre.

The run of "Little Old New York" at the Roosevelt Theatre has been extended for several weeks.

Manager George H. Moore of the New Orpheum Theatre on State street says that on the opening day of the run of "Rosita" more than 5,000 patrons passed the turnstiles and the house record for attendance was smashed. More than 21,000 saw the film during the week.

The new Capitol Theatre that opened last month at Whiting is doing a banner business. Will Bedell is manager.

Work has been delayed on the Blackstone Theatre at Lansing, Mich., owing to the failure of materials to arrive on time. The house will seat 1,400 and cost about $150,000.

The next week's program at the McVickers Theatre will be "The Three Ages" and "Jus' Passin' Thru."

The Lyric Theatre will open at Jamestown, Ill., this month under the management of Mr. and Mrs. Ben Mischke. This is a new coal mining town between Cutler and Christopher, Ill.

Perry J. Kelly, formerly a well known manager of this city, died recently while on an eastern tour. The remains were shipped for burial to Arcadia, Cal., where his sister lives.

C. N. Jacobs has sold the DeLuxe Theatre at Forrest, Ill., to Mrs. Ella Morris, who will improve the house. More women in the movie owners' ranks for this territory.

Another new movie house is projected for Antioch, Ill., and it is reported that Earl Johnson is having plans drawn for the house.

One of the best bills of the season was that at the McVickers Theatre last week with Thomas Meighan in "Woman Proof." A presentation of the Lace Fan Ballet made a hit with the patrons of the house, and in honor of the opening of the Civic Opera Director Spitalny had a real operatic musical program to go with the show. The Friday night musical programs now are broadcasted by radio.

The Elite Theatre at Waukegan, Ill., is operating as a first run house and Eddie Trinz has fixed it up so that it looks like a new theatre. New blowers have been installed and the house redecorated and refurnished throughout.

The Great Northern Theatre has been added to the list of legitimate theatres that have been given over to the movies, as "The White Sister," with Lillian Gish, opens there this week for an extended run.

Manager Lou Weil of the Bryn Mawr Theatre keeps on breaking attendance records at his cosy little house on the North Shore. Last Sunday he stood them out until almost 10 P. M. and the house records for attendance were smashed. The week of November 12 will be anniversary week for the house.

"The Hunchback of Notre Dame" opening at the Harris Theatre was a huge success and the press reports have all given the film a lot of praise. Seats are being sold two weeks in advance.

The movie houses at Holland, Mich., across the lake, which were recently closed on account of an epidemic, have been reopened.

Walter Thimmig plans to open a movie theatre at Duquoin, Ill., this month.

Cincinnati

Manager Jules Frankel of Gifts Theatre is holding over "The Common Law" for another week, making a total of five weeks for the picture at this house. Business has been unusually good. Manager Libson is showing a return of "Merry Go Round" at the Family, having previously screened it at his Capitol Theatre.

Word comes from Columbus, Ohio, that the receivership on the amusement holdings of J. W. and W. J. Deusenbury was lifted recently when W. M. James and his associates took over the Vernon and State theatres, which are the last of the Deusenbury string. James will show pictures at both houses, in connection with the James, Broadway and Grand, all of which houses he controls.

David Avery, who claims Findlay, Ohio, as his home, has acquired the Victory-Strand Theatre at Cleveland, and will play a combination of vaudeville and pictures.

E. C. Carter has disposed of his Dreamland Theatre, at Cardington, Ohio, to T. Fortune, who was previously in the game at Warren, Ohio. Fortune, who has been "on the outside, looking in" for several months, could not longer withstand the call of the blood, and says he is happy to again be numbered with the exhibitors.

In going into the Valentine Theatre at Canton, Ohio, one intuitively feels the absence of Manager Bokius, who is hattling with a case of la grippe. Bokius says there is some truth in the old adage that there is a pain for every pleasure, since he hut recently returned from spending the summer at Cape May, where he had the time of his life.

L. B. Wilson, manager of the Liberty Theatre, Covington, Ky., is donating a liberal portion of his program to the Kenton county chapter of the Red Cross for the showing of propaganda films, incident to the forthcoming Red Cross membership drive.

Manager John Schwalm is booking in feature pictures between road show dates at the Jefferson Theatre, Hamilton, Ohio. He is this week showing "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," to be followed by "Rupert of Hentzau," "If Winter Comes" and "The Common Law."

Hamilton, Ohio, while vigorously celebrating National Motion Picture Day, is going the project one better by having inaugurated a "Go-to-Movies Week" from Nov. 19 to 24 inclusive, this in reality being a continuation of the National Motion Picture Day movement. Fred S. Meyer, managing director of the Palace Theatre, is chairman for Butler county, all movie houses adjacent to Hamilton having joined in the plan.

Kansas City Showmen Launch Their Public Service Bureau

The exhibitors of Kansas City, Kas., in launching their Public Service Bureau planned by the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Kansas, will co-operate with the health bureau of their city by donating their screens during November 15 to 25 to the showing of a special film in the interest of the National Anti-Cancer campaign.

M. W. Hubbell opened the New Hubbell Theatre at Trenton, Mo., October 25. The remodeling, which took three months, consists of adding a foyer, a marquise and an electric sign. The lighting system has been completely changed and new lighting fixtures have been installed. There is also a new pipe organ. The color scheme throughout is ivory, with blue and mulberry relief.

The Strand Theatre, which was opened nearly eight years ago by Herbert J. Thatcher at Salina, Kas., has been sold to S. E. Schwahn and E. O. Schwahn of Scandia, Kas. The theatre will continue operating under its former policies.

Jack Gross of the Eldorado Theatre at Eldorado, Kas., was arrested and sentenced to thirty days in jail for violating the anti-boxing law in his town. He was putting on an amateur contest in his theatre. Mr. Gross secured a parole.

T. S. Wilson, formerly a booker for the local branch of Pathe, has become an exhibitor, having purchased the Seelye Theatre at Abilene, Kas.

Recent development in the remote southeast district of Kansas City has been sufficient to justify a suburban picture theatre, according to Sam Schultz, who plans to start construction soon. The building will contain two ground floor storerooms, one on each side of the theatre entrance in the center. The theatre will seat 1,000.

The Missouri Theatre, Kansas City, operated by the Shubert interests, closed its career recently as a stock house and reopened November 11 with pictures of the special type. "Scaramouche" is the first production to be shown, at prices from 50 cents to $1.50. The management plans to show only super-features such as "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "The White Sister" and others. There will be two performances daily, with a special orchestra accompanying each performance.

Sol J. Davidson is the new owner of the Empress Theatre at Enid, Okla.

The new Rialto Theatre at Tulsa, Okla., has been reopened after being completely remodeled and refurnished. William Smith is owner. He recently purchased the Broadway Theatre in Tulsa from Ensley Barbour, in which he played vaudeville, which was originally intended for the Rialto.

John Graham is the new owner of the Tourney Theatre at McPherson, Kas.

Wallis Brothers are the new owners of the Isis Theatre at Russell, Kas., having purchased the theatre from Ed Smith, who is looking for another location.

The Linwood Theatre, Kansas City, has installed two new Simplexes.

M. F. Kiel is opening a new theatre at Richmond, Mo. The house will seat about 250 and is equipped with Simplex machines and Mazda equipment.

Alex Schmidt of Marysville, Kas., is remodeling a building and making an up-to-date theatre. The remodeling will cost around $25,000 and the house, which will be called the Isis, will seat 1,000.

The Jefferson Theatre at Coffeyville, Kas., which recently took over a picture policy, has installed two new Power projectors, a generator and a screen, furnished by the Cole Theatre Supply Co.

Among the out-of-town visitors at the film exchanges here recently have been: O. L. Dowell, Electric Theatre, Eldon, Mo.; N. W. Huston, Liberty Theatre, Columbus, Kas.; Allen Karf, Hippodrome Theatre, Okmulgee, Okla.; W. E. Billings, Piper, Kas.; Stanley Chambers, Miller Theatre, Wichita, Kas.; A. Kuck, Empire Theatre, Maryville, Mo.; John Tackett, Tackett Theatre, Coffeyville, Kas., and E. M. Boyleson, Victoria Theatre, Hiawatha, Kas.

Pittsburgh

The Regent Theatre in the East End, Pittsburgh, one of the first-run houses in the Rowland and Clark chain, celebrated its ninth birthday the week of November 5, "Rupert of Hentzau" being the attraction. J. P. Donovan, who opened the house, is still in charge and has had much to do with the continued growth in popularity of the Regent.

R. J. Hiehle has closed a lease for the Hippodrome Theatre, one of the original picture houses in Parkersburg, W. Va., which he opened fourteen years ago, and which for the past two years has been conducted by the Smoot Amusement Company.

E. F. Nutter, of Rowlesburg, W. Va., has leased the theatre in the new building of the Knights of Pythias at Terra Alta, W. Va., and will conduct a picture theatre.

Samuel Geffner, of Weirton, W. Va., and Steve Manis, of Steubenville, Ohio, are erecting a four-story business building at Weirton, which will contain a picture house seating 2,000.

Barth Dattola, owner of the Alhambra Theatre, New Kensington, who only recently returned to this country after a four months' stay at his old home in Italy, says it looks to him as if the most popular star in that sunny land is our own Jackie Coogan. He told of one theatre there playing "My Boy," and that the crowds waiting to gain admittance to the house were two blocks long all afternoon and evening.

The Littlestone brothers, William, Abraham and Herman, who formerly owned the Grand Theatre at Braddock and now are conducting the Loyal, East Pittsburgh, have purchased the Colonial Theatre property and building at Turtle Creek for $40,000 from Nick Milanos. The new owners took charge of the house November 15 and immediately began extensive remodeling without any interruptions to the regular performances, the Colonial having an evening house only. It is solely a theatre building, stands on a lot 40x160 feet, and seats 550 persons. It is planned later to build either business offices or an apartment dwelling on top the theatre.

We haven't heard yet whether or not Mike Rosenbloom of Charleroi has been elected school director in his town, but whether he has or not, since the campaigning is over, we may expect to see more of him on Film Row in the near future.

Work on the new Harry Davis Theatre in downtown Pittsburgh is progressing at a satisfactory rate, although it is hardly possible that the house will be ready for opening before Christmas. This newest addition to Pittsburgh's picture theatres will be known as the Ritz, and will play pictures first run with six-day stands.

St. Louis

The Amuse U, Capital, Strand and New Empress theatres in Springfield, Ill., have settled with the projectionists and they have returned to work. The men asked for an increase in wages which the theatres declined to grant, and when the old agreement expired the theatres declined to enter into a new one. The Lyric, Gayety, Princess and Vaudette are said to be still operating as open shop theatres, the proprietors and managers running the picture machines.

Incorporation papers for the Grand Theatre, Alton, Ill., were taken out the past week by John Karzan, John Pano and John Jiankopolis. Each carries $1,700 stock in the company. Karzan also operates several theatres in St. Louis, including the Casino, Olympia and Lincoln.

Charles LaPee is building an addition to his house in Sullivan, Mo., and when completed it will accommodate 500 persons. Present capacity is 250.

Mrs. I. W. Rodgers of Popular Bluff and Cairo was a visitor of the week. Henry Lowry of the Palace, Highland, Ill., was seen along Picture Row. A. Siegfried of the Bijou, Decatur, Ill., called on Barney Rosenthal of the Universal Exchange during the week.

Reports from Memphis, Tenn., state that Famous Players will shortly close the Strand Theatre which has been operating for eighteen years. With Sunday closing and lack of patronage during the week days, it has been found advisable to reduce the number of houses in the Southern city. Famous Players also control the Palace and Majestic theatres in Memphis.

E. R. Ship recently purchased the New Empress Theatre, Springfield, Ill., from George Koehn. The policy of the house will be unchanged.

Visitors of the week included Mr. and Mrs. C. C. Jones, American Theatre, Cambria, Ill.; Leo Deloney, Monroe City and Shelbina, Mo.; Jim Reilly, Princess Theatre, Alton, Ill.; Steve Farrar, Harrisburg, Ill., and George Hamilton, Gem Theatre, Marissa, Ill.

Tony Serara has opened his new theatre in Pawnee, Ill. His opening feature was "Human Wreckage," which he showed on Wednesday, November 14. Lew Bent succeeded in selling him all of the F. B. O. product for the current season.

The Kansas Sunday Labor Law

W. J. Gabel, owner and manager of the Grand Theatre at Beloit, Kas., was acquitted 11 to 1 of violation of the Sunday labor law recently and the case against him dismissed. It was explained that the accusation against Mr. Gabel was not that of keeping open or operating a picture show on Sunday, as neither the law of Kansas nor city ordinance of Beloit forbids such practice, and attorneys agreed that the law invoked in this case was passed in 1868, and is found in section 3661 of Kansas statutes, forbidding unnecessary labor on the first day of the week.

The evidence failed to disclose that on Sunday, Oct. 14, Mr. Gabel labored himself or compelled others to labor in any capacity whatsoever at the Grand Theatre. Those of his employes who admitted that they were active at the theatre on that date deposed that their services were entirely voluntary and unrecompensed. Patrons of the theatre on that date stated that they simply deposited their tickets in a box and found their seats in the theatre, while combined testimony for the plaintiff failed to establish positive, personal or actual knowledge of occurrences within the Grand Theatre in support of the allegation.

Thousands Attend Opening of New National, Richmond, Va.

The greatest advance reservation of seats ever recorded in the opening of a theatre in the South will attend the formal opening of the new National Theatre, Richmond, Va., which is scheduled for November 12 and will be a matter of history before this is in print. Handsomely engraved invitations of a formal nature have been mailed not only to the entire Richmond mailing list but to thousands all over the South, and four days before the opening date it is believed that the reservations far exceed the entire seating capacity. From all over the southeastern states hundreds will attend, and the affair will be the most extravagantly and handsomely staged formal opening ever held in this state, if not in the entire South.

The National, which has been two years in the building, is by long odds the finest theatre in the South. It is owned by the same interests who built and operate the National Theatre, Greensboro, N. C., and who are extensively interested in many other theatrical properties, each, however, operated under its own separate corporation title.

The most important step of the Hays organization as affecting the South, and one that it is believed will cause a better feeling to exist as between the Southern exhibitors and the national produceer-distributor organization, was the appointment two weeks ago of DeSales Harrison, formerly of Southern Enterprises, as Southern representative of the Better Films Committee, which is being sponsored nationally by the Hays office. He will be directly under the supervision of Colonel Jason S. Joy, and his work in most respects will be similar to that carried on by the Southern Enterprises department supervised by Turner Jones.

All Southern Enterprises district offices now are in operation, with the final moving of head offices to New York. F. L. Metzler, T. L. Varnon, of the legal department, H. L. Robinson, auditor, and eight members of the auditing department have gone to New York in the final operation of moving the Southern Enterprises offices to New York City. The last car of files and furniture has gone.

Headquarters of the district office will be in the Cone Building. Montgomery Hill has gone to Charlotte as district manager, taking with him A. H. Frazier, formerly in the auditing department, as booker. Loyless Kennedy left Saturday for Jacksonville to act as booker in that office under District Manager Arthur J. Amm. E. R. Rogers, Tennessee district manager, will remain in Chattanooga instead of moving his office to Memphis as was originally intended.

Frank Bell, formerly connected with the Howard, Atlanta, Ga., came over to Atlanta from Memphis last week. He is assistant to Manager Harold Horne, of Loew's Palace, Memphis.

Joe Burton, the well known Toccoa, Ga., exhibitor, was in Atlanta last week en route to a meeting of the Masonic Grand Lodge in Macon.

C. D. Stanbaugh has taken over the Pastime at Cornelia, Ga. He operated a theatre at Demorest, Ga., some time ago.

Homer Edenfield, son of the late R. G. Edenfield, who has been operating the Dreamland, Augusta, since his father's death, was in Atlanta the past week.

Albert Hill, formerly in Jacksonville, has gone to Miami to become assistant manager of the Fairfax Theatre.

Philadelphians Rally to Aid National Motion Picture Day

Co-operation with and by the civic and federal authorities was pleaded for at the meeting of the M. P. T. O. A. in an all-day rally held during the week at the Hotel Vendig and the high light of which was furtherance of the financial and artistic success of National Motion Picture Day on November 19. Harry Davis, a director of the national body, made an inspirational address. Applause greeted his statement that in Pittsburgh 100 per cent. co-operation of the picture houses has been assured.

Charles M. Rapoport, national representative for the district comprised in the M. P. T. O. of Eastern Pennsylvania, Southern New Jersey, Delaware and Maryland, suggested that a committee of seven be appointed to urge Mayor Moore to issue a proclamation on the event. Those appointed were George P. Aaron, David Barrist, Robert Lynch, Michael Lessey, Mr. Rapoport, Lewelyn Pizor, William Hunt.

Reports indicated that there will be a minimum of 65 per cent. co-operation of all the picture houses in Philadelphia. The Stanley Co. of America did not report.

Building operations at the Fox Theatre, 16th and Market streets, Philadelphia, are nearing completion and it is proposed to have the $1,000,000 theatre building ready for opening by the early part of December, although an announcement had been previously made stating that the first showing at the theatre would be made on November 19. Erno Rapee, former conductor of the orchestra at the Capitol Theatre, New York, has been appointed managing director. He also will conduct the orchestra.

Word was received from Trenton of the seizure by the Government of the pictures of the Dempsey-Firpo fight in New York, which were shown at the Palace Theatre in the Jersey city last week. Warrants were issued for the arrest of Walter Reade of New York, owner of the theatre, and others. Charles Stemmerman, a film salesman of New York, was arrested and held under $5,000 bail.

The Lyric Theatre of Allentown, which heretofore has been a legitimate theatre, has changed its policy to a frequent change of program including moving pictures in the future. A very modern and complete picture equipment has been installed under the management of Philip Levy.

Nebraska

E. A. Harms, who owns and operates the Apollo, Mueller and Hippodrome theatres in Omaha, took a vacation touring Europe the past summer.

A. W. Knight, Belgrade, Neb., has installed a lot of new equipment, including a Power 6-B improved projector, a screen, and a General Electric Mazda unit.

Exhibitors from Platte county and adjoining counties in Nebraska recently journeyed to Columbus, Neb., for the express purpose of having a meeting with Edgar Howard, congressman-elect from that district, and discuss the proposed repeal of the admission tax. Mr. Howard assured the men that when the bill for the repeal comes up in congress he will do all that is honorable in an effort to obtain the repeal.

Baltimore

Louis A. DeHoff, booking manager for the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century, New, Parkway and Garden theatres and Century Roof in Baltimore, Md., has resigned his position with that company. Mr. DeHoff has been associated with Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Whitehurst Interests, off and on, since Mr. Whitehurst operated the Red Moon Theatre, now extinct, way back in 1908. Mr. Whitehurst and Mr. DeHoff were two of the pioneers in the film business in Baltimore. Prior to his association with Mr. Whitehurst, Mr. DeHoff was an electrician. Rumors are rife that Mr. DeHoff has gone to Harrisburg, Pa., or Washington, D. C., to manage theatres, but no definite information can be gained as to where he has located at present. But whoever gets Mr. DeHoff will get an A-1 film man and manager.

Through the efforts of the Exhibitors' League of Maryland, by its committee of four members including Louis Schlichter, chairman; Charles E. Whitehurst, Frank Durkee and Frank A. Hornig, all the members of the league have agreed to heartily endorse the celebration of National Motion Picture Day on November 19.

Charles E. Whitehurst, president of the Combined Whitehurst Interests, controlling the Century, New, Parkway, Garden and Century Roof in Baltimore, seems to be out for Gene Sarazen's laurels as a golfer. The distance between to the ninth hole on the Baltimore golf course is 150 yards and Mr. Whitehurst did it in one stroke, dropping the ball in with a mashie.

If the Keith interests take over the Loew interests in the Hippodrome Theatre, Baltimore at Eutaw street, Baltimore, after February 1, 1924, within a few months after that time a new Loew theatre will be under construction, according to N. T. Granlund, a representative of Mr. Loew in New York, according to a dispatch to the Baltimore Sun. F. C. Schanberger, Keith representative here, says there is no move pending which may result in the Hippodrome Theatre being operated under the Keith management.

Texas

A fire recently damaged the Queen Theatre, Sweetwater, Tex., a Robb & Rowley house, the loss being estimated at $15,000. This was covered by insurance.

The Orpheum Amusement Company of Okmulgee, Oklahoma, with a capital stock of $250,000, has been incorporated by W. J. Peterson, Albert Shelton and P. J. Shelton, all of Okmulgee.

Dallas men have purchased the Best and Gem theatres at Palestine, Texas, from Southern Enterprises, Inc. E. J. Callahan and S. T. Ray of Dallas will have charge of the Palestine houses.

Southern Enterprises, Inc., have contracted for the Universal output in 124 southwestern houses. The final details of the contract were arranged between Harold B. Franklin, director of theatres, and S. E. and Ned Depinet, assistant sales manager of Universal, who went to New York from Dallas to close the deal.

W. F. Box of Dallas, Texas, has leased the Temple Theatre, owned by the City of Temple, Texas, which was acquired for an auditorium. Mr. Box is interested in a number of theatrical ventures over the state and states that he will reopen this theatre and bring some of the best attractions to it.

The Park Amusement Company of Dallas, with a capital stock of $10,000, has been incorporated by A. A. Chauteaux, Jr., Tom Scurry and L. R. Hogg.

Two reel comedies

Even a seasick person would laugh at "Heavy Seas"

They say that sea-sick persons don't worry so much about whether they're going to die as whether they won't.

But a person in the worst throes of sea-sickness would laugh himself well if he saw the "Spat Family" comedy,—"Heavy Seas."

There's nothing heavy about "Heavy Seas" but the name. It's frothy with laughs and gags and it speeds its comical way over billows of laughter.

See it and you'll buy them all.

The Greater Movie

The greater movie is with us at last.

A cohort of "big" pictures have marched upon New York and taken Broadway by storm. More are to follow.

Broadway legitimate houses are at a premium. The New York newspaper critics are almost emotional in their praise. The stage business is wondering just what is going to happen to its Fall season. It is a fact that "The Covered Wagon," "The Hunchback of Notre Dame," "Rosita," "The Green Goddess," "If Winter Comes," "Little Old New York," and "The White Sister" will call forth the highest grade audiences New York can boast of today, the kind of people the stage itself does not reach right along.

It is all very fine.

For almost ten years this publication has been calling for, and prophesying, the individual picture, the picture individually made and individually handled.

That kind of picture has appeared from time to time right along; we don't for a moment, discount the successes of the past. Some may never be paralleled.

But the point is this: not only is the individual picture here, but the era of making the individual picture has at last arrived. Formerly, it was a matter of better vision and inspiration here and there with a few. Today the industry itself is gearing itself, through a new product-tion and distribution policy, to the point where the individual picture is an assurance rather than a hope.

A new era has set in.

This is great progress. Practical progress, as well as artistic progress.

The greater movie means greater movie audiences. We have more than enough seats for the greater movie. We have more than enough seats but not filled seats. Five or six millions a day are not enough for our 14,000 theatres; and while the admission price is a factor so, too, is the attraction. Every exhibitor knows the stimulating effect on attendance of the occasional outstanding picture.

But as we write—and while the critics' praises sound and the billboards flash and the electric signs dazzle and the larger newspaper advertisements impress—we are thinking of the eighty percenter.

The ten thousand and more theatres in the four thousand communities of this country! Then there's the fifty thousand population town.

What are they thinking of the New York onslaught? What does the new picture era mean to them?

In short: when will they get these pictures? And how? On flat rentals or percentage? What kind of prints will they receive? And last but not least what advertising will they employ to get the greater movie audiences?

It is one thing to make greater movies.

It is another—to handle them.

Let's not lose our heads. One of Wallace Reid's pictures booked 8922 theatres.

Tom Mix is called "the life-saver" by thousands of exhibitors.

Hoot Gibson is preferred to the greatest present male star in many and many a picture house.

And at a little gathering in New York last week of hard boiled picture men, the question was propounded: if you could have any one of the line-up of big pictures now playing in the metropolis which would you rather have?

And most of them selected "Why Worry?"

It goes right away into the picture theatres.

One Reel

WHERE can you buy one reel comedies with so much diversity?

Here you have the great novelty series of the "Dippy Doo Dads," bird and animal comedies that have attracted wide attention.

You have "Snub" Pollard; and you have Charles Chase, a new one and a good one, playing a lone hand, and a good one too, in others.

You can play these comedies every week with full knowledge that your public can't get tired of seeing the same faces week after week; that they'll find new gags, new laughs and new faces in liberal profusion.

Burglars Blow Albany Safe While Wm. Berinstein Naps

William Berinstein, who divides his time between Albany, New York and Elmira, in handling his chain of theatres, is a sound sleeper. This fact was established beyond any possibility of doubt the past week when burglars entered the Colonial Theatre in Albany, moved an 800 pound safe a distance of 100 feet, blew it with nitroglycerin, and escaped with $790 without awakening Mr. Berinstein, owner of the house, as he slept peacefully in an office over the front entrance.

The burglary took place within the shadow of one of the city's police stations. The burglars must have known that Mr. Berinstein was a sound sleeper, for the safe, which is about three feet square, was carried from the ticket office down the center aisle to the orchestra pit, where two holes were bored in the door and filled with the nitro. The burglars ripped up the aisle carpet, wrapped it around the safe and touched the fuse.

Charles J. Rose, for four years Oneonta resident manager for the Schine Theatrical Enterprises, became associated on Monday with William Smalley of Cooperstown as general field manager for the eleven houses which Mr. Smalley operates. Mr. Rose will continue to reside in Oneonta.

The Star at Potsdam, owned by H. L. Ives, has been acquired by O. P. Benson and Ruth P. Perrin.

"Little Old New York" drew such crowds at the Leland in Albany last week that Oscar Perrin, manager of the house, decided to hold the picture for another week. This is unusual in Albany. It is the second picture to establish such a record at the Leland, the other being "When Knighthood Was in Flower."

"Al" Elliott, who runs the Playhouse in Hudson, was a welcome caller in Albany last week when he stopped off on his way back home from the Eastman anniversary in Rochester.

"Al" Bothner, who manages three theatres in Troy for the Hall interests, got plenty of publicity last Sunday night in connection with a "Leatherpushers" picture. Mr. Bothner introduced four of the city's well known lightweights in fighting attire from the stage. A previous announcement that the fighters would appear in person packed the house.

Frank X. Breymaier, manager of the Barcli in Schenectady, has the distinction (and he even claims to enjoy it) of being the only one of his cult in the Electric City who goes without his lunch. Of course the fact that Mr. Breymaier tips the scales around the 200 mark may have something to do with it.

The Olympic in Watertown had a fine example one night last week of "damphoolery" on the part of high school students, following a football game. Several hundred students rushed the house and someone yelled fire, causing many of the spectators to jump from their seats and rush to the exits. Two women are said to have fainted. The students also tore up the brass railing at the Olympic, causing Dr. J. Victor Wilson, the manager, to call the police.

The Strand in Schenectady will observe its third anniversary at Thanksgiving and has scheduled "Circus Days" for a week. Manager Shirley is planning a huge cake with three lighted candles as one of the features.

Projectionists and stage hands in Schenectady are certainly well paid these days. A recent $15 a week increase brings the operators to $69, while stage hands, receiving a $10 a week boost in their wage envelope, are now getting $50.

Exhibitors in northern New York, at least, will never want for pictures. This fact was pretty well demonstrated one day last week when five film salesmen called on Victor A. Warren, owner of the Strand in Massena, during one day.

George F. Wright, a former exhibitor in Albany, is to follow the example set by John J. Walker, recent owner of the Barcli in Schenectady, and will shortly open a chop house in the Capital City.

Aside from running a theatre in Cambridge, N. Y., L. L. O'Connor is making the rounds of the American Legion posts these days in his capacity as vice-commander. Along with these two duties, Mr. O'Connor is selling vacuum cleaners.

William Benton, owner of the Congress in Saratoga Springs, firmly believes that good orchestra music is just as essential to the success of the house as good pictures. He is proving the correctness of his contention with a seven piece orchestra which is the talk of the section.

E. H. Arnold, former assistant manager of the Avon in Watertown, will open a large amusement park near that city next spring. The park will contain a dance pavilion, a number of small cottages and many forms of amusement. It will cost about $25,000.

Exhibitors in New York State, particularly those owning houses in the smaller cities and villages, are demanding pictures for Thanksgiving Day which show not only a happy ending but which present a pleasing story throughout. They contend that such pictures are absolutely necessary as a pleasant ending to a holiday, and that mediocre acting is even permissible if the story portrayed is a cheerful one.

The State in Schenectady, which has shown pictures up to the present time, will depart somewhat to the extent of several musical concerts, including one by Paderewski, during the next few weeks.

Jacob Troy, who owns the Park Theatre in Hudson, has just purchased the Allen in Chatham from Stanley B. Allen.

All foreign made pictures, largely Italian, will be shown for an entire week, beginning December 6, at the Colonial in Troy. It will be known as "Italian Week," and if successful similar weeks will be given at frequent intervals.

William Shirley, managing director of the Farash Theatre Corporation of Schenectady, confirmed a report that he will shortly erect a 1,200-seat house in Ilion. Mr. Shirley spent lsat Thursday in Ilion selecting a location for his theatre.

Amplifiers were used on the stage of the State Theatre in Schenectady on election night, with a direct wire to the General Electric broadcasting station, furnishing the returns to the audiences.

Captained by Ben Apple, owner of the American in Troy, a bowling team has been formed among the employes of the American and Troy theatres, and challenges any team in the entire district to a series of matches.

Michael Freedman of New York City is the new assistant to Manager William Shirley in handling the State, Albany and Strand theatres in Schenectady.

Ben Apple and Mrs. Apple were all smiles last Saturday, and the evening papers furnished the explanation. Abraham, a son, was confirmed that day.

The policy of the State in Schenectady has been changed to the extent that the week will open on Saturday. The Strand and Albany theatres open their weeks on Friday.

First-run houses in Troy have carried a protest to the Albany Film Board of Trade, claiming that their business suffers through unfair competition by at least one second-run house in the city which books practically the same pictures as the first-run theatres and then carries a screen notice advising the people to wait and see the picture later at a much cheaper price.

If experience counts for anything, then Walter M. Powers, the new manager of the Griswold in Troy, should have no difficulty in putting his house across. Mr. Powers managed the Colonial in Albany when it was owned by Moss and Brell, later going to Elmira, where he managed the Majestic and the Mozart for Mr. Berinstein, returning to Albany where he became the owner of the Pearl Theatre, which he recently sold.

Turkeys will share the honors with the pictures at the Rose in Troy during the next two weeks, for the owner of the house, Jacob Rosenthal, veteran showman, will give away many gobblers as door prizes during the week preceding Thanksgiving.

Open Sunday Overwhelmingly Approved in Endicott, N. Y.

The exhibition of motion pictures in Endicott, N. Y., on Sunday has been unanimously approved by the village board, the action being taken as a result of the referendum when citizens 18 years and over decided in favor of motion pictures on the Sabbath by an overwhelming vote of 1,046 to 148. The village board had authorized such a referendum to be held at private expense and had agreed to sanction the result.

Sunday pictures when shown in Endicott on Sunday have not been lawful since May, 1920, but their exhibition did not become the object of any popular or official concern until a few weeks ago. The board's resolution becomes effective ten days after its publication and posting or upon public service.

Representative Clarence MacGregor, sponsor of the bill to be introduced in Congress at its next session calling for the repeal of the admission tax, has informed J. H. Michael, chairman of the executive committee of the M. P. T. O. of N. Y., Inc., that the best way to gum up the works is for exhibitors to hold a meeting in Washington in December, as Sydney Cohen announced in Rochester he planned to do. Mr. MacGregor urges a small committee be appointed to work with him and to pass instructions on to the exhibitors when he gives the word. If such a move is made he feels sure the tax will be repealed. But stay away from Washington, says Mr. MacGregor.

The Border Amusement Company has taken over the Cazenovia Theatre, a community house, and will operate it under the name of Loco.

The Lyric Theatre, Endicott, N. Y., celebrated its sixth anniversary on November 12, with B. H. Dittrich, its capable and likable manager, in charge as he was the day it opened. The Lyric put on one of the biggest and best programs in its history. The theatre has recently been renovated and redecorated. A new marquise and electric sign add beauty to the front. The seating arrangement and ventilation are perfect.

The Zicofe Corporation, composed of F. M. Zimmerman, M. Cohen and George Ferguson, will erect a new picture theatre in Westfield, N. Y. The Grand, which they recently leased, was destroyed by fire recently.

National Theatres Increases Its Holdings in California

The National Theatres Syndicate of California, with main offices in the Loew Theatre Building, San Francisco, has added two more houses to its chain by purchasing the Strand and Webster-Granada theatres at Woodland. The deal, made through the offices of J. R. Saul, theatre and realty broker, represents an investment of more than $100,000. The Strand has been operated by W. Stuart Webster for several years, but became too small to accommodate theatregoers in Woodland, and the Webster-Granada was erected a couple of years ago. The latter is considered one of the finest houses in the Sacramento Valley. These two theatres make a total of five that have been purchased by the National Theatres Syndicate during four months.

Edward B. Baron, for almost four years the San Francisco representative of United Artists, has resigned to join the staff of the Herbert L. Rothchild Entertainment, Inc., as business manager. Within a week following his appointment he left on a business trip to New York.

Edwin H. Flagg, of the decorative studios bearing his name, is a visitor in San Francisco from Los Angeles, conferring with A. M. Bowles, general manager of West Coast Theatres, Inc., of Northern California, concerning decorative work in a number of theatres operated by this concern.

Robert A. McNeil, of the T. & D. Jr. Circuit, San Francisco, is back from a two weeks' trip to the southern part of the state. Theatre business was reported to be good.

The fraternity through the northern part of the state learned with regret recently of the death of A. Caro, formerly of the Novelty Theatre, Martinez, Cal., but more recently a part owner in the Gardella Theatre, Oroville. He was a familiar figure on San Francisco's Film Row. He passed away in a local hospital.

V. A. Wood, who took over the Orpheum Theatre at Cloverdale, Cal., is making extensive improvements.

Tentative plans are being made to open Reavis' G. & S. Theatre at Santa Rosa, Cal., on December 3. This will be one of the finest houses in the northern part of the state and the opening will be made a memorable one. It is being equipped for both stage productions and pictures.

Work has been commenced on the construction of a 400-seat picture theatre at Angels Camp, Cal., to replace the old Angels Theatre, destroyed by fire last year. It will be operated under the direction of A. A. Watkins.

The world premiere of "Hospitality" at the Warfield Theatre, San Francisco, the first week in November, will be followed by the world premiere of "Beware of a Dangerous Maid," featuring Constance Talmadge. Manager Charles Pincus, of the Warfield Theatre, says he is ready to take on more world premiere food as a steady diet.

Recent visitors on San Francisco's Film Row have included John Daly, of Chico, Cal.; Ed Stark, of the Opal Theatre, Hollister, Cal.; W. H. Wilson, of the Victory Theatre, Weaverville, Cal., and George Wahl, of Red Bluff, Cal.

James Lima, who purchased the old Dimond Theatre at Oakland, Cal., several weeks ago, has renovated the house, installed a new organ and changed the name of the theatre to that of the Liberty.

A picture theatre to represent an investment of $45,000 is to be erected shortly on Third street, near Quesada, San Francisco, for Otto Roeder, an old-time exhibitor of this city.

James Beatty, well known theatre man of San Jose, Cal., has been chosen first vice-president of the San Jose Chamber of Commerce.

A picture house has been opened at Colma, Cal., by Conrad L. Linder.

M. L. Markowitz, manager of the Strand Theatre, San Francisco, has arranged with Elmer Floyd, a well known producer of spectacles, to put on a series of elaborate acts in connection with the showing of some of the feature pictures that have been booked. The first of these, "The Enchanted Rose," will be offered in connection with the presentation of "Rosita."

The Rivoli Investment Company is having plans prepared for the erection of a theatre at Grove and Fifty-fourth streets, Oakland, Cal. Hutchinson & Mills will be the architects.

Seattle

After several weeks of dark houses, while musicians and operators were in deadlock with exhibitors over a demanded wage increase, the difficulties were satisfactorily adjusted Wednesday evening, October 31. The houses resumed on Nov. 3. It is understood that some concessions were made on both sides.

Calvin Heilig, owner of the beautiful Heilig Theatre, plans a new policy of combination entertainment. Feature photoplays will be presented with elaborate musical settings, prologues, etc. The opening bill will present "Cameo Kirby," augmented by Max Fisher's Ziegfeld Frolic Syncopators. The entire Fox product, with the exception of the "Eleventh Hour," "Soft Boiled" and "If Winter Comes," will be featured at the Heilig.

With the convention of the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Washington opening the second of its two day session for the purpose of effecting a permanent organization, things look bright for the successful building of a substantial state unit. Committees met in Seattle, with headquarters in the Hotel Calhoun, October 5 and 6. The convention opened October 7 in the Knights of Pythias hall. Mayor E. J. Brown addressed the gathering.

W. B. Henderson, trade expert, and R. Roe Holland, secretary of the Associated Amusements of British Columbia, spoke. At 7 o'clock a banquet was given at the Hotel New Washington, where exhibitors, exchangemen and their friends gathered for relaxation and entertainment.

W. L. Steele, owner of the Queen Anne Theatre, has recently completed extensive renovation and remodeling of his house. Foyer and lobby were remodeled, an office added upstairs and new loge seats installed.

G. E. Terhune of Walla Walla, who owns the Arcade, has just reseated his house with 450 new chairs.

Wisconsin

A business venture which is expected to net the Motion Picture Theatre Owners of Wisconsin $5,000 annually, has been launched in Milwaukee under the direction of Fred Seegert, president of the organization. The plan consists of a tieup with the Hearst newspaper in Milwaukee for the publication of a daily motion picture directory, designating the pictures at each house in the city. "The scheme has been tried out successfully in Detroit by the Michigan organization and I see no reason why we cannot obtain successful results here," declared Mr. Seegert. "It is great advertising for our theatres and at the same time benefits the organization."

Indiana

As a result of the Sunday controversy at Frankfort, Robert Keene, mayor, has ordered a strict enforcement of the old Sunday "blue laws." All except essential business places were closed last Sunday and it is understood the same condition will prevail for some Sundays to come. Garages, filling stations, cigar stores, shoe shining places, theatres and other business houses were included in the enforcement order.

After seeing to it that the law was being strictly enforced, Mayor Keene and a party of friends drove to Kokomo and attended a picture theatre. The mayor issued a statement the following day, saying his attendance at the Kokomo theatre was in no way caused by the fact the Frankfort theatres were closed.

The enforcement of the "blue laws" in Frankfort came as a result of the efforts of M. L. Conley, proprietor of the Conley Theatre, to operate the place on Sunday. Mr. Conley was arrested but was freed by a jury in the city court. Following the hearing, persons opposed to Sunday movies called on the mayor and reminded him of his pledge to enforce the law. Mayor Keene announced he would not discriminate and as a result ordered the "blue laws" enforced impartially.

The Capitol Amusement Company, of Indianapolis, has filed suit in the Marion county superior court against Ray Marsh Brydon, proprietor of a picture theatre at 2131 North Illinois street. The plaintiff asks judgment in the sum of $450 and that a receiver be named to take charge of the theatre. The suit was based on allegations that Brydon had rented the theatre at a monthly rental of $150 and had failed to make several payments.

Stock salesmen for the Consolidated Realty and Theatre Corporation have closed the office at Evansville and withdrawn from that field. Fred Gruenberg, one of the officers of the company, was in charge of the office. It is understood the office was closed because of the difficulty in selling stock in face of the failure of L. Dollings & Company, a large Indiana stock concern.

George Jacob, genial manager of the Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, was in Indianapolis Tuesday on a business mission. He left Wednesday for Chicago.

Canada

There has been an orgy of name changing among the theatre organizations at Toronto during the past few weeks and the casual reader of the local newspapers, in scanning the amusement pages, might be led to believe that he had accidentally taken up an out-of-town daily in looking over the theatre announcements. The Allen Theatre is now the Tivoli, the Strand is the Piccadilly and the Gayety is the Comedy among the downtown houses alone.

George Rotsky of Montreal, Quebec, has been appointed managing director of the Palace Theatre, Montreal, this having been the impressive Allen Theatre of Canada's largest city under the regime of the Allen Theatres, Ltd. Mr. Rotsky formerly had general direction of all Allen houses in the Quebec district and he has been retained by the Famous Players Canadian Corp. for the big Montreal theatre, the name of which was changed from Allen to Palace on November 10. Incidentally, a company has been organized, to be known as Palace (Montreal), Ltd., for the operation of the new Palace. Mr. Rotsky has announced that following the presentation of "Scaramouche," the opening attraction which is to have an indefinite engagement, the Palace will offer "The Covered Wagon" at prices ranging from 50 cents to $1.50. One policy of the Palace will be to have both English and French titles for all productions presented.

A DEPARTMENT FOR THE INFORMATION OF EXHIBITORS

EDITED BY A. VAN BUREN POWELL

Associated Exhibitors

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5:288 feet). Star cast. A real photoplay. Absolutely clean. A one hundred percent picture and at the right price. Admission 15-25. Grand Theatre, Terre Haute, Indiana.

TILL WE MEET AGAIN. (5,822 feet). Star cast. A good drama. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw working class in city of 13,000. Admission 10-30. O. M. Bertling, Favorite Theatre (187 seats), Piqua, Ohio.

F. B. O.

CANYON OF THE FOOLS. (5,180 feet). Star, Harry Carey. Good. Lots of action, that's what they want. Ran it two days, to very good business. Picture little too dark in some of night scenes. You can't go wrong on Carey if you can buy them right. Have run three so far all good. Will please any Western fan. William Thatcher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

First National

DANGEROUS AGE.— (7,204 feet). Star, Lewis Stone. Here you have another fine production. Satisfied everybody. You will receive many favorable comments when you show this. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

NOMADS OF THE NORTH. (6,000 feet). Star, Betty Blythe. Why can't we get more like this one? Pleased one hundred per cent. One of the best I have played this year. Should please any audience. Admission 20-25. Used ones, threes, slide, photos, heralds. Had good attendance. Draw best patronage. W. B. Dobbs, Victory Theatre, Gordo, Alabama.

PENROD AND SAM. (6,275 feet). Star, Ben Alexander. A true to life picture of small town domestic squabbles. It's hard to tell which one does the best acting. They are such natural kids. Leave your grouch at home when you go to see this one or you will lose it. Everyone liked it. Said they laughed, shed a few tears, and had a good time. Had a fair crowd. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

SMILIN' THROUGH. (8 reels). Star, Norma Talmadge. Splendid. Had big comments on this one from most of my patrons. I personally enjoyed it also. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all kinds of people in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

SONG OF LIFE. (6,920 feet). Star cast. Consider this a good one, if you don't pay too much. Domestic drama. Had good attendance. Draw small town and rural class in town of 1,474. Admission 5-10-20. T. W. Cannon, Majestic Theatre (249 seats), Greenfield, Tennessee.

TOL'ABLE DAVID. (7,118 feet). Star, Richard Barthelmess. A fine picture. Barthelmess is my idea of an actor. He is versatile and entirely lacking in the conceit some of the male stars fail to conceal. How the kids and men did yell. No need to ask if they liked it. It was written on every face. There are some of my audience who are scared to death lest they should not be the first ones out of the theatre, and start out before the end, but they all sat still last night. It was a genuine tribute to the picture. Although an old picture, the print was good. Attendance good. Good for week days, but a little too strenuous for the Sabbath. Moral tone is excellent. Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall Theatre (250 seats), Chester, Vermont.

The Index to Reports appears in this issue and includes all reports published since the beginning of July.

With the Index which appeared in the last June issue, this gives you a complete list of all pictures reported since the beginning of 1923.

Save it—USE IT!

TRILBY. (7,321 feet). Star, Andree Lafayette. Had a weak crowd for this one and glad of it. The star is unknown and, as my patrons say, she needs practice. Would lay off if you don't want to lose money. Rental too high for this sort of junk. Regular advertising brought poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

VOICE FROM THE MINARET. (6,685 feet). Star, Norma Talmadge. Fair picture for this star. Kind of slow in the first five reels. All the action lies in the last few reels which saves the picture from being called altogether too slow. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre, South Fallsburg, New York.

Fox

CATCH MY SMOKE. (4,070 feet). Star, Tom Mix. This picture was well liked by our patrons. Personally Mix does some of the most impossible stunts I ever saw but, the kids eat it all up. Used wild west ballyhoo. Had very good attendance. Draw middle and lower classes in city of 600,000. Admission 10-15, matinee; 10-25, evenings. Joseph F. Enos, New Lyceum Theatre (1,600 seats), San Francisco, California.

FOOL THERE WAS. (7 reels). Star, Estelle Taylor. A so-called special that was nothing more than a good program picture. Those who saw it liked it but kicked over raise in prices. Photography good, but these old vampire stories don't draw the crowds any more. Sad ending to picture caused a good deal of disappointment. Play it as a program picture, not as a special. Not suitable for Sunday. Had poor attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

LOVE GAMBLER. (4,682 feet). Star, John Gilbert. Positively one of the best program pictures I have shown this year. Patrons held their seats for this one, not a single walk out. John Gilbert can surely deliver the goods. He doesn't act, he lives his parts and his following is surely growing. This picture is a good, clean western with fine photography and a splendid plot. All this with the star's personality made a one hundred percent hit. Has good moral tone and you bet it is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

NIGHT HORSEMAN. (4,910 feet). Star, Tom Mix. Some picture, fine. Ran it two days. First day good. Second day bum. For some reason Mix and Buck don't get by in my house. But can't say anything against the stars, as they are all good. This one is better than William S. Hart. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

PAWN TICKET 210. (4,871 feet). Star, Shirley Mason. Good program offering a little above the average. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 15-25. Jack Kaplan, Rivoli Theatre (378 seats), South Fallsburg, New York.

ROMANCE LAND. (3,975 feet). Star, Tom Mix. About the same as the usual run of Tom Mix westerns. No better and no worse. Seemed to please and brought excellent business for three days. Not suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-30. Ben L. Morris, Temple, Elk, Grand, Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

SECOND HAND LOVE. Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Good little picture. Something different. They want Jones in Westerns, as some of them told me so on going out. Ran this for two days to a poor business. The title is against this picture for my house. Only reason we did not do any business. Not a picture for my house, as we play mostly Westerns. This is a good picture; if you want that kind, O. K. Ran "Dandy Dan," Sunshine Comedy, with above picture. Comedy also good. Good program, no business. Has good moral tone and is a good Sunday picture. William Thacher, Royal Theatre, Salina, Kansas.

SKID PROOF. (5,565 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Almost broke my Saturday box-office record with this. The best Jones since "West of Chicago." In fact, consider it the best Jones I've yet shown. Quite a few thrills and spills. Lura Anson an attractive leading lady. Had very good attendance. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre, Rochester, Indiana.

SKID PROOF. (5,565 feet). Star, Charles "Buck" Jones. Here is an automobile story that has any auto race that Paramount ever released with Reid and Roberts beat a mile, and I used them all; yet, with Reid I would pack my house and on this one just did take in enough to pay film rental. But it sure is not the fault of the picture. Every one went out boosting. The trouble is, they start out advertising "Buck" Jones, then it's "Charles" Jones, then it may be a western or a society play, and the public never knows what to expect. Business poor. Small town patronage, all classes. A. Mitchell, Dixie Theatre, Russellville, Kentucky.

Goldwyn

SPOILERS. (8,028 feet). Star, Milton Sills. A big picture, produced and well acted, every foot of the film. One of the greatest knock-em-down-drag-em-out scraps between Milton Sills and Wallace Beery ever screened. I played the other "Spoilers" some years ago and it was a "pippin" and they haven't forgotten it, and they shouldn't. When all is said and done I don't know candidly that this picture is any better. The business was good the first day, but fell off—way off—the second, and I don't know how to account for this, for the picture is "There." But exhibitors, I would give a sober thought to this rental, if it's too big, be careful or you may do as I did, just about break even. Used everything possible for advertising. Did not have big attendance considering the rental. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre, Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

Hodkinson

DOWN TO THE SEA IN SHIPS. 7,100 feet). Star cast. Picture not what it is cracked up to be. Should be cut down to five thousand feet. Patrons get tired of too much the same stuff. Had fair attendance. E. H. Haubrook, Ballard Theatre, Seattle, Washington.

Metro

HER FATAL MILLIONS. (6 reels). Star, Viola Dana. A "darb" of a comedy drama. Story is very humorous in places. Good cast. Good print. A good small town bet. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

JAZZMANIA. (8 reels). Star, Mae Murray. Little comedy and good setting, but the people are still wondering what it was all about, but they turned out good though. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw mixed class in town of 3,000. Admission 10-20. Charles Martin, Family Theatre (350 seats), Mt. Morris, New York.

Paramount

BLUEBEARD'S EIGHTH WIFE. (5,960 feet). Star, Gloria Swanson. Gave general satisfaction to all Gloria Swanson fans. Consider it her best effort to date. Business fair, but paid too much to realize any profit. Has fair moral tone and is not suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw small town class in town of 3,500. Admission 10-22. Henry Tucker, Tucker Theatre (960 seats), Liberal, Kansas.

DARK SECRETS. (4,337 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Just an average program picture; doubled it up with another to get rid of it. Suitable for Sunday?—no day. Poor attendance of family and student class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-22. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Miles Minter. Fair picture not as bad as I thought it would be. Miss Minter very pretty in this; that is about all I can say about her. Attendance fair. Adolph Schutz, Liberty Theatre, Silver City, New Mexico.

DRUMS OF FATE. (5 reels). Star, Mary Minter. Viewing it from my own angle it was rather far-fetched but our audiences liked it immensely. Star best I have ever seen her. Production is rich and story aside from a few glaring inconsistencies, is good. Did more than average business. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had big attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand Theatre (750 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

EXCITERS. (5,939 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. This one gave good satisfaction for us. Played it with views of a local convention which appeared in Pathe News and drew big business. Picture pleased all and helped second day. Nothing big about it, but satisfactory in every way. Advertising slants, Moreno is a good bet. Had big attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand & Liberty Theatres (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

Haynes, Keep Coming!

"I was glad to see Mr. Haynes' name once more among the faithful ones. The list he submitted was good. I have played or contracted for nearly all of the list.

"I don't use them very fast, but am glad to report on the few I do use."—Guy C. Sawyer, Town Hall, Chester, Vermont.

EXCITERS. (5,039 feet). Star, Bebe Daniels. Fine; pleased all. Another good one from Paramount, which is the usual thing, of course. William Noble, Rialto Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

FACE IN THE FOG. (5,569 feet). Star, Lionel Barrymore. This was very well liked by our audience. Had three stops in second reel due to film being wound on a very poor reel at the exchange causing interruption in our show. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. Just a fair picture which relies to some extent on the locations and photography. It's a "Bootlegging Affair" and that's that. A mediocre offering if that. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

FOG BOUND. (5,692 feet). Star, Dorothy Dalton. This picture proved seventy-five percent entertainment to our audience. Dalton is a good drawing card for us and this picture was better than some of hers I have seen. Had good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 10-15. C. A. Anglemire "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

HOMEWARD BOUND. (7,000 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Pleased here. Tom has had better and much worse, but his pictures here have been of good average value and consequently has established a following. Would say of this that you can promise good entertainment and send every one home satisfied. Used usual advertising. Had good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

MR. BILLINGS SPENDS HIS DIME. (5,585 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. This one failed to register even. Walter may be a star but he failed to twinkle even one little twink in this. "Mr. Billings Spends His Dime" made all of us wish we had our dime back. Oh well, life is short at the best. "Sixty Cents An Hour" was much better than this one. Had fair attendance. Draw society class in town of 7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

NE'ER DO WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Pleased thoroughly, as most of this star's pictures do. This is better than his average and should do fairly well anywhere. Advertising slants, Meighan, Lila Lee and the author. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in city of 14,000. Admission 10-25. E. W. Collins, Grand and Liberty theatres (750-500 seats), Jonesboro, Arkansas.

NE'ER-DO-WELL. (7,414 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Furnishes delightful entertainment of a high standard. It is worthy of extra effort on the part of every exhibitor and considering the author, Rex Beach, it has wonderful exploitation possibilities. Has excellent moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. T. H. Whittemore, Newcastle, California.

OLD HOMESTEAD. (7,606 feet). Star cast. Had a wonderful first night on this, but on the second night due to rain played to the smallest house in our history. A great picture for rural patronage. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance first night, poor attendance second night. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Hall (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

ONLY 38. (6,175 feet). Star, Lois Wilson. My patrons thought this great. Not a showy picture, but very effective and along original lines. I was out of town but that's the report of some of my "hard boiled eggs" and so I know that "Only Thirty Eight" must be there. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

OUR LEADING CITIZEN. (6,634 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. Excellent picture and excellent business prevailed. William Noble, Majestic Theatre, Oklahoma City, Oklahoma.

PRINCE THERE WAS. (5,533 feet). Star, Thomas Meighan. We have had better pictures with Meighan. Only a very ordinary program offering. Fairly well liked by female portion of audience. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw better class in town of 4,500. Admission 15-10. C. A. Anglemire, "Y" Theatre (400 seats), Nazareth, Pennsylvania.

PURPLE HIGHWAY. (6,574 feet). Star, Madge Kennedy. A well enough produced film, but was not thought to be anything worth while here and the attendance proved it. Usual advertising brought very poor attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

SALOMY JANE. (6,270 feet). Star Jacqueline Logan. A good picture but does not please everyone. Readers of the story will like it exceedingly well. Personally thought it above the average production. Print excellent. Will probably be suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw university students and better class. Admission 15-25, 15-30. P. A. Wills, Park Theatre (610 seats), Champaign, Illinois.

SIXTY CENTS AN HOUR. (5,632 feet). Star, Walter Hiers. Played this on a Saturday and had a clever supporting program and got by. Can't really say much for the picture, and it isn't Walter Hiers' fault at that. He does all that is asked. Usual advertising brought good attendance. Draw health seekers and tourists. Dave Seymour, Pontiac Theatre Beautiful, Saranac Lake, New York.

VALLEY OF SILENT MEN. (6,491 feet). Star, Alma Rubens. A good hot weather picture. Ran it when the thermometer registered around 90 degrees; still its ice and snow scenes couldn't entice them in. The few that saw it were pleased. Poor attendance, drawing mixed class in city of 110.000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,731 feet). Star, Betty Compson. We liked this one. Not well enough to rave about it under stand, but it was pretty and passed muster very well. Draw society class in town of

Shoulder Reports

7,000. Admission 10-20. Ned Pedigo, Pollard Theatre (800 seats), Guthrie, Oklahoma.

WHITE FLOWER. (5,731 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A fairly good picture. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 3,720. Admission varies. C. F. Krieghbaum, Paramount Theatre (294 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A good picture about the drug traffic, addicts, etc. Good moral tone. Attendance good. Town of 3,720. C. F. Kreighbaum, Paramount Theatre (300 seats), Rochester, Indiana.

WOMAN WITH FOUR FACES. (5,700 feet). Star, Betty Compson. A good program that pleased all my patrons. Moral tone okay and is suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre (246 seats), Irvington, California.

Pathe

DR. JACK. (4,700 feet). Star, Harold Lloyd. A winner for us. Two nights to very good business, although we didn't have to ante over any extra percentage to Pathe under our buying arrangement. Our opinion: As good as Grandma's Boy. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 300. Admission 20-30, specials 22-44. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

Preferred

HERO. (6,800 feet). Star cast. You won't miss anything by passing this up. Very ordinary. Had fair attendance. Draw family and students class in town of 4,000. Admission 10-25. R. J. Relf, Star Theatre (600 seats), Decorah, Iowa.

United Artists

ROBIN HOOD. (10,000 feet). Star, Douglas Fairbanks. A wonderful picture that shows every dollar supposed to have been spent on it and a one hundred percent box-office production. Will also please any audience. Don't overpay for this. Charge fifty cents and they'll be pleased. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw small town class in town of 6,000. Admission 10-30. L. O. Davis, Virginia Theatre (800 seats), Hazard, Kentucky.

Universal

BLINKY (5,940 feet), and OUT OF LUCK (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. In one picture Hoot Gibson is a sailor and in the other a soldier, which is the only difference between the two. Where he is liked, both are great pictures. Our crowd falls for Hoot and big audiences greeted and applauded both pictures. They are good ordinary action movie melodramas. Moral tone good. Suitable for Sunday. Draw general class in city of 15,000. Admission 10-40. Ben L. Morris, Olympic Theatre, Bellaire, Ohio.

OUT OF LUCK. (5,518 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. This picture is six reels of laughs mixed in with a good plot. Audience like the star in this type, although they came expecting to see him in a western. Excellent program picture. Ought to take anywhere. Was afraid at one time during screening that some of the ex-sailors in the audience would have to be carried out on stretchers. They laughed so much. All went out holding sides. Has good moral tone and it is indeed suitable for Sunday. Had fair attendance. Drew general class in town of 1,000. Admission 10-20, 20-40. H. H. Hedberg, Amuse-U Theatre, Melville, Louisiana.

SHOCK. (8,758 feet). Star, Lon Chaney. Do not pass up this one. A very vivid crook melodrama which should please any class of people. Chaney at his best. T. H. Whittemore, California.

SINGLE HANDED. (4,225 feet). Star, Hoot Gibson. Just fair. Moral tone O. K. Had good attendance. Draw village and rural class in town of 400. Admission 25-15. E. L. Partridge, Pyam Theatre (250 seats), Kinsman, Ohio.

SHOCK. (8,758 feet. Star, Lon Chaney. Of course this is a wonderful picture, but our patrons don't like the type. Too much tragedy to suit them. We had a pretty fair crowd. Just got by and that's all. The earthquake and fire was well done in the manner shown with the 'Shock." Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Draw country people and small town class in town of 2,200. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre, David City, Nebraska.

TRIFLING WITH HONOR. (7,785 feet). Star, Rockliffe Fellows. They all lived the ball game along with the actors and almost roared the roof off in the ninth inning. Pleased one hundred percent and they told us so. Packed the house for two nights. Made good money on it. Another good Universal. Has good moral tone and may not be suitable for Sunday on account of ball game. Had fine attendance. Draw country and small town class in town of 2,200. Admission 10-25. A. F. Jenkins, Community Theatre (490 seats), David City, Nebraska.

Vitagraph

DIVORCE COUPONS. (5,249 feet). Star, Corinne Griffith. This is different thanks to Vitagraph. The addition of the fourth angle to the "Eternal Triangle" is bound to be attractive. Pleased eighty-five percent. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw rural and small town class in town of 286. Admission 10-25. R. K. Russell, Legion Theatre (136 seats), Cushing, Iowa.

FLOWER OF THE NORTH. (7,130 feet). Star, Pauline Starke. Very good and very interesting from start to finish. You can buy this reasonable. Book it, you cannot go wrong. Has good moral tone and is suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Draw all classes in town of 1,000. Admission 10-25. Frank Fera, Victory Theatre (300 seats), Rossiter, Pennsylvania.

FORTUNE'S MASK. (4,975 feet). Star, Earle Williams. Fair program picture. Pleased seventy-five percent. Earle Williams is a good star, but this picture did not give him a good chance for using his talent. Suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre, Richmond, Iowa.

ISLAND WIVES. (5 reels). Star, Corinne Griffith. A very good program picture that seemed to please all classes. Usual advertising brought fair attendance. Draw rural class in town of 300. Admission 20-30. Charles W. Lewis, I. O. O. F. Theatre (225 seats), Grand Gorge, New York.

ISLAND WIVES. (5 reels). Star, Corinne Griffith. South sea stuff. How much more of that stuff do the producers think they make us swallow? A bit tiresome and cheerless, still some people said it was wonderful. Draw mixed class in city of 110,000. Admission 10-20. Al C. Werner, Royal Theatre (500 seats), Reading, Pennsylvania.

MAN OF MIGHT. Star, William Duncan. If you want thrills and lots of them book it. Not suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. Jack Snyder, Casino, Richmond, Iowa.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star, Cullen Landis. A good one. Run this one as soon as you can as it will please I believe anywhere. Had many favorable comments on this one. Had good attendance. Draw general class in town of 800. Admission 10-30. Frank G. Leal, Leal Theatre, (246 seats), Irvington, California.

MASTERS OF MEN. (6,800 feet). Star cast. Good. Good moral tone, suitable for Sunday. Had good attendance. drawing all classes in town of 7,400. Arthur B. Smith, Fenwick Theatre, Salem, New Jersey.

MASTERS OF MEN. 6.800 feet). Star cast. We agree with all the other exhibitors who have run this. It is one sweet picture and it pleases. Did not like the costumes of the period and while they were faithful to the times they got a laugh all through where it was not intended. Had big attendance. Draw general class in town of 15,000. Ben. L. Morris, Temple and Olympic Theatres, Bellaire, Ohio.

MY WILD IRISH ROSE. (7,650 feet). Star cast. Don't see how any one can find anything in this picture to make any noise about. Used regular paper and heralds. Draw local patronage. Had fair attendance. Ernest M. Cowels, Orpheum Theatre, Pelican Rapids, Minnesota.

NO DEFENSE. (5,700 feet). Star, William Duncan. This is a good outdoors picture. Duncan and Johnson make a good combination. Ran Semon in "Solid Concrete" with this and made a good card. In fact, Larry has them all cheated when it comes to slapstick. Draw small town class in town of 2,000. Admission 10-25. W. E. Tragsdorf, Trags Theatre (425 seats), Neillsville, Wisconsin.

SILENT VOW. (4,600 feet). Star, William Duncan. Good acting, fairly good program, but many said not as good as other Duncans. Not enough of Edith Johnson in it. Drew good crowd, rental fair. Draw mixed class in mining town. Admission 15-25. J. Cleva Jr., Enterprise Theatre (150 seats), Glenalum, West Virginia.

WILD CAT. Star, Alice Calhoun. "Wild Cat" was surely a fine picture. Miss Calhoun surely done some fine acting in this one. Book it by all means. It's a one hundred percent picture in every way. Film in good shape. Has fine moral and is suitable for Sunday. Had fine attendance. Jack Snyder, Casino Theatre, Richmond, Iowa.

SELLING the PICTURE to the PUBLIC

EDITED BY EPES WINTHROP SARGENT

Makes Prospective Patrons Blow Hard on a Simple and Good Ballyhoo Stunt

ABOUT every so often someone comes along with a stunt that is destined for a place in the advertising Hall of Fame, and often they do not seem to realize that they have hit something better than usual.

Lawrence William Carroll, of the Princess Theatre, Berlin, N. H., is almost casual in a report of a stunt he worked on Are You a Failure? recently, and yet it has the makings of a winner for anyone who wishes to figure out a connection with a title. Mr. Carroll worked it on the failure story, but a little thought will hook up to almost any title.

How He Worked It

Mr. Carroll set a box beside the box office, wired to a switch inside the office. Within the box was a card for the title and in front of this a red globe.

From the bottom of the box protruded a length of hose and an additional card asked: "Are You a Failure? See if you can light the lamp by blowing into the tube. A free ticket if you can."

This stunt was used for two days in advance of the picture, and scores of persons came into the lobby just to try the lamp, having heard of it from others. The lighting of the bulb was controlled by the cashier, who used her own judgment as to the number of persons who succeeded.

The stunt drew such large crowds that it was necessary to discontinue the ballyhoo at the rush hours, partly because the cashier could not attend to the switch, but more because the crowd blocked the lobby.

Work It Outside

We think this stunt will work even better in the lobby, with some attendant to handle the switch, and the crowd it will draw will be worth the salary paid the attendant, who should be a reliable person.

We believe, however, that this stunt will find its greater value as a window attraction. In this event the tube should be placed outside the window and the lamp within. This does not necessitate the cutting of the window, the tube can be affixed to a block set on the window or just below, or, where there is a ventilator, run through the opening, ostensibly to run up through the flooring inside the window.

Wherever it is placed, there should be an apparent join to a tube inside the window and running to the box on which the lamp is set, and which apparently conceals the mechanism.

Jazz It Up

The stunt can be worked up by having a number of lights of different colors and different values, a red lamp carrying one ticket, a green two and an amber a box or a limited season ticket.

In this case the lights should be worked so that the red lamp can be lighted first and held in while the blue comes on, and perhaps the amber, to convey the suggestion that the greater the inflation the larger the number of lights set in.

In any event the switches should be handled by someone in the window with a black scrim lookout which will permit the operator to see out and yet conceal him from the crowds.

Properly worked, this can be run into a local sensation even in the smaller cities, and it can upset a small town. Of course in window work the outside tube should be disconnected except at stated hours.

Be generous in the number of single tickets given out. It's a good stunt, be willing to pay for the crowd co-operation.

Here's a Hint

From the program of the Palace Theatre, Hamilton, O., which we read even to the advertising, we note that in an effort to boom a comparatively new business street, the Third Street Business Boosters organized a dancing party for Hallowe'en Night, providing two bands and street illumination. The stores were all lighted to display the bargains to be placed on sale the following day.

Here's a chance to horn in on a similar local movement, if you can find or create one. Get them down to the new street, and get your share of the advertising in what amounts to a municipal event.

If it is too late in the season for street dances in your locality, remember the idea again next spring.

In Search of Youth

A novel contest is being worked in New Orleans by the Item and the theatre which has booked Black Oxen. The Item will run the novel serially and to put it over is offering prizes for the youngest looking old man and woman. Of course this calls for an explanation about the Atherton novel and the First National play, and is getting the town all worked up for the engagement.

The start was a showing of stage stars over fifty who do not look it, including, of course, Edna Wallace Hopper, upon whom the mantle of Lillian Russell seems to have fallen.

Dan Is Fixed

Dan Roche, one of the original exploitation staff of Paramount, hired to put over The Miracle Man, and who since then has been in charge of exploitation in the Chicago district and who has achieved some wonderful results, was let out along with most of the others in Claud Saunders' department in the recent Paramount housecleaning.

He was immediately engaged to put over The Hunchback of Notre Dame at the Sam H. Harris Theatre, Chicago. Having put over The Covered Wagon in Chicago, Dan feels a natural pride in his connection with the two outstanding hits of the current season and he says he is going to hammer it over to a fare-ye-well.

Dan doesn't get his name in the papers much, but he pulls some wonderful stuff. He was the first to invade a judicial court in his campaign for What's Your Hurry, when he got one of the slogan banners into the traffic court, right over the judge's head, and we believe that he was the first to get a 24-sheet bill into the window of an occupied store.

Universal is to be congratulated upon having added Dan to its string. He is out to beat his Covered Wagon record, which will be going some.

Continuous

First National's publicity hound, Walter Enerhardt, writes that Jackie Coogan's birthday "is getting to be a national event." What he should have said is that it is a continuous performance.

Earle Hall Payne, of the Kentucky theatre, Louisville, had one the other day to put over Circus Days and invisted 2,000 youngsters to a special performance.

Jackie's press agent is a good sport and willing to vouch for a birthday 365 days a year. Wise managers, however, will limit Jackie to not more than three birth dates in any one year. The thing can be overdone, of course.

WE HOPE OUR SINS WILL FIND US OUT IF THEY ARE LIKE THESE

The Dance of the Seven Sins which decorated the panel above the entrance to Ascher's Merrill Theatre, Milwaukee, for Slave of Desire. This panel is put to as good use as the foyer in the Howard Theatre, Atlanta.

Eight Page Special Was for Main Street

Getting a double truck on Main Street is so common as no longer to attract attention, but L. J. Carkey, exploitation agent for the Schine theatres in Upper New York State, horns into the news with a stunt commanding respectful attention.

A Warner Brothers Release

THE MAIN HEADING

Hooking in as usual to the local Main street, he tied the paper to a special Main Street Section of eight pages, chiefly devoted to merchants doing business on that thoroughfare, but carrying some other advertising and general news as well as special stories for the feature, but the newspaper gave the entire front page of this section to the Warner feature, and Carkey was satisfied with that, being no hog.

Who is going to "see" Carkey's eight and raise it to a sixteen?

Balloon Banner Is Effective Novelty

Joel Levy, of the Capitol Theatre, Reading, Pa., worked something different when he had Penrod and Sam. He provided a light cloth banner with the name of the attraction and the house, and tied this to a couple of gas balloons. Waiting for a light wind, he released it and watched it go floating down Main street.

That was all there was to the idea as it was originally planned, but Fate took a hand and played billposter. A cross current at the local four corners slammed it up against the cornice of a hotel, and it was two days before they took it down. Meanwhile the legend was clearly displayed to all who cared to read while they ran. They could read it and walk, for that matter.

And of course Levy ran a hook-up with the Penrod clothes. It's a business maker, if you avoid the lottery feature in awarding the suit. The best way is to make it a voting contest, or offer it as a prize in a composition or impersonation contest. You may get away with a lottery, but you can't ever tell when some post office inspector will happen along and just utterly ruin your day for you. Play it straight.

Production Hints from Edward L. Hyman

Managing Director, Mark-Strand Theatre, Brooklyn

BECAUSE If Winter Comes is too long to permit a varied program, only an atmospheric prologue could be used in conjunction with this Fox release. For this reason the prologue was made more elaborate than usual to combine the elements of music, tableau and setting that the patrons of the Mark-Strand have been led to expect.

At the opening a tenor in smoking jacket was disclosed seated in a library chair before a glowing fireplace, center stage. The fireplace was backed up by a deep blue plush cyclorama, and directly above the fireplace was a transparency picture frame ten feet deep by eighteen feet across. This, at opening, was dark, attention being drawn to the tenor by a lighted floor lamp which stood beside the chair and by an orange spot from the side and two orange spots from the embers of the fire. The tenor sang the first verse and chorus of the song, "If Winter Comes," and as he finished lights came up in the big picture frame showing a winter scene, with four drapery-clad girls as the spirit of winter. An electric fan furnished the wind, and a snow bag overhead showered down the paper snow as the girls went through various poses to the accompaniment of a few bars of "Holy Night." As this dimmed out the Mark Strand Chorus off stage went through the refrain, the tenor dozing in his chair. Then a soprano off stage went through the verse, and the lights again came up in the picture frame, showing the four girls in a summer scene, with a profusion of blossoms. The orchestra accompaniment for these poses and tableau was Mendelssohn's Spring Song.

At the close the first scenes of the picture were projected, showing winter and summer landscapes similar to the atmospheric presentation.

Two back drops were needed in the big picture frame, the first being a winter landscape and the second one of spring. The change was made, as described above, while the chorus and soprano went through the song. Front lighting was a combination of deep blue, purple and green, from Mestrum floods and foots, these being up through the presentation and until the film went on the screen.

At appropriate places during the running of the picture, the chorus off stage sang the theme-song, each time in a different way to avoid monotony of repetition. At the final clinch of the story the chorus swelled its collective tones to a mighty crescendo, the final note ending exactly as the title, "The End," flashed on the screen. This effect was good for applause at every de luxe performance.

Here's Another

Now it's the Criterion Theatre, Oklahoma City, which got a double truck on If Winter Comes, with seventeen merchants telling how useful their wares will be If Winter Comes. Just to be different, we are going to switch and report only those instances wherein a theatre did not get a hook-up.

Wore It

When the "original" gown worn by Norma Talmadge in Ashes of Vengeance was loaned Julius Hopp, of the Forst Armstrong Theatre, Rock Island, Ill., he put it in a store window where it could walk around and show itself off. The motive power was supplied by a girl model inside the dress. It got much more attention.

Copied

Over in Philadelphia the Bulletin gave Potash and Perlmutter such a corking good notice that the Stanley theatre made it the copy for a larger than usual third day advertisement in all the papers.

The notice was doubly valuable because the Bulletin does not rave over amusements, and the opinion of its critic carried additional weight.

A Metro Release

TALK ABOUT YOUR LONG, LOW RAKISH CRAFTS! OLD CAPT. KIDD NEVER HAD ONE LIKE THIS

This piratical pullman was constructed by Howard Price Kingsmore, of the Howard Theatre, Atlanta, for Strangers of the Night, and was sailed up and down Peachtree street and held up the trolley cars. Just above the cornice you will see the lower edge of a pictorial banner. This was used in the foyer the week before, as shown in the second illustration.

A Universal Release

TWO SAMPLE DISPLAYS FROM KEITH AFFILIATEES ON THE "MERRY-GO-ROUND"

That on the left is from Moss' Regent Theatre, and on the right is shown the flashy display on the marquise of Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, both in New York City. Most of the theatres appreciated the motion possibilities.

Merry Go Round Is Smartly Exploited

Mark A. Luescher, former manager of the New York Hippodrome, and now exploitation manager for the Keith and affiliated theatres, reports that Keith managers have made better than average use of the exploitation possibilities of The Merry Go Round, and in one house the manager put it over so well that it had to be booked for an immediate return. Harry Mandel and John Bryan, of the Keith forces, and Joe Weil, of Universal, collaborated. Practically every house in the metropolitan district played to S. R. O. each night.

The general billboard campaign followed so closely upon the general campaign of Universal on this picture that the effect was practically continuous. The individual houses hooked up to this general campaign in their own sections. Several hundred thousand heralds, of various sorts, were provided by the campaigners.

What Moss Did

Harry Mandel, of the Moss theatres, split his 24-sheet stands. The Universal six sheets were posted either end of the 24-sheet space and the central twelve sheet space was given to the vaudeville and to dating the picture. This made an effective stand at less than the usual cost.

Four theatres, the Fordham, Franklin and Coliseum in New York, and the Keith Theatre in Jersey City, used a miniature merry-several of these operated in New York at a penny a ride, and one was chartered for these showings, the owner being provided with a clown costume. Passes for free rides were thrown out.

At Proctor's 125th

Proctor's 125th Street Theatre, New York, used a very elaborate mechanical display, and the Hamilton, New York, and the Prospect, Brooklyn, were among others to employ animated displays. The Jefferson used a "follow the green line" stunt, starting the line down the sides of the marquise, under the canopy and up to the box office, and Moss's Regent used a number of devices including a fanciful billboard shown in the cut, and a miniature of the Prater.

All of the houses used serpentines, balloons and flags to give the lobby a carnival aspect and helped the picture make one of the biggest clean-ups of the season.

Donated a Feature to Children's Week

For the recent National Children's Week George J. Schade, of the Sandusky theatre bearing his name, suggested a filming of Oliver Twist for the opening of the local observances, and donated the picture, getting his reward in good will and the moral value of this hook-up with the schools.

Stunts like this do not bring in direct money, but in the long run they will prove more profitable than the returns from any single stunt on a particular picture, since the effect is far more lasting. It is worth more than the expense to become identified with a prominent local movement, and no one knows this better than the astute George J.

Scared the Cow

Joseph T. Emerling, Paramounteer out of Omaha, drifted into Norfolk, Neb., to help Fred Webster, of the Grand Theatre, put over Hollywood.

He hired a cow for a family pass to the show, and used it for the no-bull stunt, dressing the boy who led her as a farmer, which required very little make-up.

That's old stuff, but noticing that the cow was skittish, Emmerling chartered a motorcycle with a powerful honker and when the boy and cow had reached the main street, he came up from behind and scared her into a runaway. It put a new kick into the antiquity.

Of course if the cow had run down anyone or had gone through a plate glass window, the stunt would not have been so good, but an exploiteer has to take some chances.

Add Browning

Add Tod Browning's name to the list of managers who have profited through the presentation of style shows with Potash and Perlmutter. It did not cost him a penny extra, and the co-operating store even threw in the "Miss New Haven" of the recent Atlantic City contest as the star of the show.

About $300,000 worth of gowns, golem figures, were shown during the progress of the well-rounded little prologue, and the only reason Browning did not make more money was that the fire department would not let him.

3,000 for $37.50

One of Bill Saal's ideas for the Missouri Theatre, St. Louis, was a contest on "Should a Wife Be a Silent Partner, and Why?" You could taken either side of the argument but you were limited to 25 words. There were $5 prizes each day for five days.

The Times liked the idea so well that it paid half the value of the prizes, which gave the Missouri more than 3,000 lines for $37.50, or a little more than a cent a line, which is pretty reasonably cheap for reading notices. Of course the play of that name was the attraction at the Missouri.

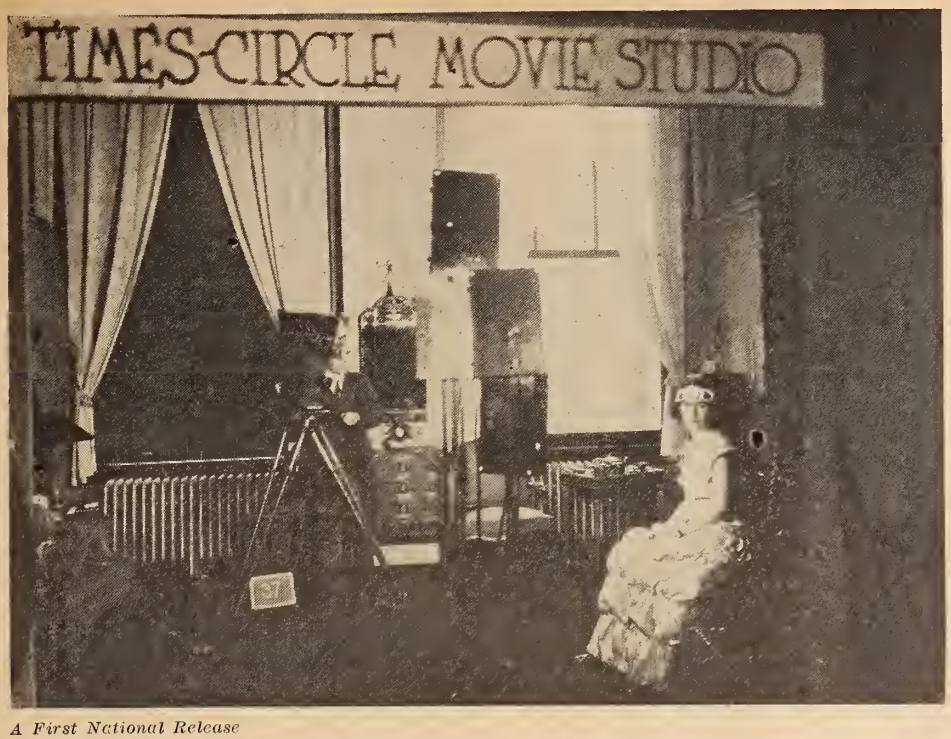
THIS KEPT BUSINESS UP FOR A TWO-WEEK RUN

This looks like an old castle front made over for "Why Worry," but it was imposing, and for two weeks the Main Theatre, Uniontown, Pa., did a fancy business, and the first week broke the house record, while the second week was close to that.



A First National Release

BETTER THAN A WINDOW IS THIS DEPARTMENT STORE LOCATION

This improvised studio was located in Indianapolis' largest department store. If you thought you looked like Norma Talmadge in Ashes of Vengance and the photographer agreed with you, he took a few feet for a film for the Circle Theatre.

Resemblance Contest Used Motion Camera

If you lived in Indianapolis and cherished an idea that you looked like Norma Talmadge, all you had to do a few weeks ago was to go to the largest department store and if the photographer thought you thought correctly, he would grind down a few feet of film for a showing at the Circle Theatre. About half of the feminine population of the town tried to crash the gates, but only those who had one per cent. of chance got a shot.

Ace Berry, manager of the Circle Theatre, had tied the Times to the contest idea, to help along Ashes of Vengeance, and for a couple of weeks the Times ran a daily story with one or more pictures of the contestants. Then the assembled film was run at the Circle and the winner was put into the "original" costume worn by Miss Talmadge and permitted to do some of the scenes in which the star appears alone, and this was also shown at the theatre. Beside the kudos of looking most like Miss Talmadge, the winner was given a gold wrist watch.

When the "original" costume was not working on the winner of the contest, it was displayed in a store window with a dummy of the leading man also wearing an original costume. The window was nicely dressed and got a lot of attention.

The pair of stunts were all that were needed to make exceptional business for the popular star.

AN EFFECTIVE USE OF DISCS ON WANDERING DAUGHTERS

This was done by the Isis Theatre, Houston, Texas, and the photograph can only suggest the effect, since the discs were variously colored and were placed so that contrasts made each more effective. The large circles carry the title and the others the players.

It's Nice for John But Tough on Gloria

When John Harris, who runs the Central Theatre, "for colored," down by the railroad tracks in Dallas, Texas, hooked on to the Paramount service, he was so pleased that he took extra space in the negro paper to tell the world. This is what he told:

Pictures Were Passes

Modifying an old scheme, Sid Lawrence, of the Regent Theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich., tied the local paper to a circulation scheme in which passes to the Regent were given all persons whose snapshots were printed in the Sunday picture section.

Only women were photographed and the photographers snapped many blank exposures to increase the interest, but only those whose pictures were used were given passes. Of course the paper played up the Regent and its attractions.

A SIMPLE SETTING FOR A PENROD AND SAM PROLOGUE

Used by B. W. Bickert, of the Isis Theatre, Houston, Texas. The fence was low enough to stand while the picture was being projected, the back drop, carrying the foliage, being taken up to disclose the screen at the end of a vocal interpolation.

Human Wreckage Is a Business Builder

Following a campaign largely taken from the plan book, Thomas G. Coleman, of the Galax Theatre, Birmingham, Ala., took a notable business on Human Wreckage.

This first step was a special showing before the city Health Commissioner, the head of the welfare department, the Better Films Committee, ministers and a few leading citizens.

The Health Commissioner, who is the only woman holding such a position, gave an endorsement which was quoted in a special circular letter with matched personal addresses instead of "Dear Patron," and was confined to a limited list likely to pay a return on such careful preparation.

The Salvation Army was interested and the value of the picture brought to the attention of religious and educational leaders. Then a couple of press stories which dealt with drug habits and were apparently pure news were slipped into the paper to get an indirect, but none the less forceful, effect.

Many ministers announced the showing of the picture during their pulpit announcements and one or two worked the announcement into their sermons.

Has a Questionnaire to Make for Interest

Tod Browning, of Gordon's Olympia Theatre, New Haven, has a local paper tied to a series of questionnaires along the prevalent lines, and to make it really interesting, Tod refrains from loading it down with questions about First National stars and attractions, though these are what he is putting over in a way that keeps even the suspicious unaware that it is an advertising stunt. Some days there is nothing about First National, and there is even advertising for other companies.

Worked in this fashion you can keep the stunt going indefinitely and retain the interest, shooting in questions about your own stars and attractions at the times when this will do the most good. Browning supplies a set of twelve questions daily, the answers to the previous day's questions being given. A sample set of questions may give the idea better: (1) What dancer is regarded as America's best dressed woman? (2) What screen actress is called America's sweetheart? (3) Who is regarded as America's greatest coloratura soprano? (4) What American girl won most fame singing among the troops in France? (5) Who made the first American flag? (6) Who founded the Christian Science Church? (7) What woman won fame as the Maid of Orleans? (8) Who wrote the play, "Uncle Tom's Cabin?" (9) What actress is said to have the most beautiful back in the world? (10) What woman ruled as Queen of England for sixty years? (11) What famous actress died recently at the age of 76? (12) Who was the fair maiden who vamped Marc Antony? Ticket prizes are given.

Schade's New Tags

George J. Schade, of Sandusky, worked a change on the tag stunt for Within the Law. He had printed up about 3,000 tags bearing the legend: "Warning! Keep Within the Law." These were not only tagged on automobiles, but on the bridles of horses and on bicycles. On the automobiles the string loop permitted them to be slipped on radiator caps, which is better than on the steering wheel or the door handle. It made an excellent title fixer and helped the picture to a good business.

Just goes to show that the traffic summons is not the only idea.

Likes Lingerie

It is strange that The French Doll is the first of the Mae Murray pictures to be tied to lingerie, since dress—and undress—are so liberally featured in most of these productions.

It's strange, but it is true, and now managers are making up for lost time. A hosiery concern has been tied up to the idea through the Metro and free stockings have proven a powerful puller, but many managers have gone further and have hitched to lingerie with excellent display results.

Charles Morrison, of the Imperial Theatre,. Jacksonville, grabbed a wonderful window in a specialty shop on the strength of the lingerie poses in the stills, and most of the women who lined up in front of the window later appeared through masculine proxies at the box office. Get the women and they will bring the men.

Splashed a Short

Because the First National comedy, Bow Wow, was in only two reels seemed no good reason to the Palace Theatre, Fairfifield, Maine, why it should not be exploited. Twenty dogs were given cardboard blankets and paraded through the streets, and twenty dogs make a wonderful parade in the town at the other end of the Waterville car line.

THIS LOBBY DISPLAY WAS SET TO MUSIC, TOO

Frank J. Miller, of the Modjeska Theatre, Augusta, Ga., geared a small organ to the platform and mounted cutouts from The Merry-Go-Round paper for riders. With the illumination on a flasher it made a tremendous box office appeal.

Had a Live Lloyd and Dummy Giant

Making a "production" of Why Worry in a window next the theatre was one of the means the Cameo Theatre, San Francisco, took to put over the comedy.

Getting an impersonator of Lloyd was a simple task, but there was no giant the size of Aasen looking for a job, so they had to make an extra large suit of clothes and stuff it with straw.

THE WINDOW TABLEAU

Oilcloth backing with compo board wings gave a realistic prison set, with the addition of a little straw, and in this setting the live Lloyd moved about performing short dramas suggested by the story and keeping the attention of his sidewalk audience.

Penrod Terriers

Penrod and Sam terriers are working well for managers who take this stunt for exploitation of the First National picture. Several successes have been reported and the latest chronicle comes from Louisville where the Kentucky Theatre offered a double of Penrod's pup to the child writing the best 500-word story on some dog they had already owned.

The prize went to a little girl whose canine pet had saved her from being trampled upon by a pony which had just thrown her from the saddle. The contest turned up some surprisingly good copy for the Post. It was vital to the other children, but the grown-ups enjoyed the ingenious stories too. This is cheaper than the Coogan pony and brings pretty nearly the same results.

Cuts Down a Mat to Fit a Space

Recently Ben Grim has been discussing the cut material available for the exploitation of short comedies, and Educational contributes a display from the Empress Theatre, Oklahoma City, in which the house makes the material fit the space with the simple application of the saw.

An Educational Release

MAKING A FIT

The half tone is a column cut originally four and one-half inches deep, which was too long for the space. Cutting off the horse's legs and the foreground does not detract from the attention value of the display, and does effect a considerable diminution of space costs. The other cut is used "as was" since it is a proper fit. One of these is supplied with each Educational.

The comedy gets one-quarter of the entire space, with Ashes of Vengeance for a leader.

Told the Ladies

Exploiters have to be general handy men to get a picture over just so. M. Barry, working for Fox out of Cleveland, went into Lima for If Winter Comes and not only delivered a lecture on the story before the women's clubs at the local library, but he wrote a rhymed review for the paper. He also put on a ballyhoo with a 16-piece band and boys carrying banners and turned a few odd tricks in his spare moments.

A FRONT FOR ONE PICTURE WHILE ANOTHER IS PLAYING

Dulcy was the attraction at the Broadway Theatre, High Point, N. C., but it had been so well sold to the public that after the first day the Circus Days front was put in place for the remainder of the Dulcy run. This tent is a standard drop.

Competing Theatre Used Six Day Idea

When the Blue Mouse Theatre, Portland, Ore., ran Six Days it used the large figure six idea advanced in the press book for the announcement with "6 Days" as the big line; the figure crowding the space.

An opposition house liked the idea so well that it used a similar figure six with "days more" and the title of the feature it was showing. John Hamrick, of the Blue Mouse, did not utter loud shouts of joy over the imitation, but he found that the opposition was really helping him put over his attraction, for people read on to find that Six Days was not at the other house and came to the Blue Mouse.

Local Telegram Is Very Nicely Worked

One of the best telegram campaigns is reported by A. B. Crawford, of the Hippodrome Theatre, Taft, Calif. He did not merely hand out telegrams. He took the trouble to do it so as to get the best results.

He offered to buy forms and envelops from the Federal Telegraph Co., for use in the stunt, but the offer was turned down. At the printer's he found a mat used by some other advertiser and abandoned in the office. It showed two towers with a large-lettered "Radio Broadcasting" and was just what he wanted. It could not have been better had he caused it to be drawn.

He filled in the mortise with Courtesy United Electric Co., Taft, Calif., and got something that looked really official, though the United Electric was merely the company from which he had borrowed a radiola.

The heading was printed in black and a message extoling The Cheat was printed in blue in typewriter type with the office check letters and all the rest, and it was signed by Pola Negri.

These messages were distributed by the Western Union Service boys with "United Radio" hat badges. The messages were not personally addressed, but the boys were given slips which the recipients had to sign, which gave them the weight of a personal message with infinitely less work. This was the nicest touch and seems to be original with Mr. Crawford.

Hooking up to this, a radiola was set up in the lobby, at no greater cost than credit lines on the card which announced that they hoped to pick up a message being broadcasted by the star. Of course they did, the same that was sent out on the blanks and which was sent out through local broadcasting.

With very little money and a lot of brains the picture was sold to unusual effect.

FOUR PRETTY DISPLAYS FROM THE PALACE THEATRE, EL PASO, ON PARAMOUNT PLAYS

These were planned by William E. Paschall and executed by the house artist. Guiterrez, who fully lives up to his reputation with these fine showings. The top row shows the displays for Bluebeard's Eighth Wife and Only Thirty-Eight, while below are the attractors for The Exciters and Hollywood, that for The Exciters being unusually good with real water for the dive.

Simple Animation for Mounted Star

These figures are cutouts from the 24-sheet, and in the lobby a real rope ran from the rider's hand to the fiure of the girl. The photograph is too dark to show the details, but the figure is mounted on tripod of which two legs run to the platform below while the third extends to the rear. These support an upright which terminates just above the waist of the rider, and the cutout is pivoted just below the point of the vest, permitting free motion.

Back of the pedestal is a fan motor geared to three wheels to reduce speed. The first belt runs from the hub of the motor to the circumference of the first wheel. The hub of the first wheel is belted to the circumference and the third wheel is connected the same way.

This third wheel has a peg near the outer rim to which is fastened a short rod connecting with the hind feet of the horse and as the wheel revolves the horse moves up and down, like a hobby horse.

It is very simple, yet it gives a far better attractor than any still pose cutout, and the rig can be used for many similar animations. The rod should be pivoted to the horse's hoof, to permit the swinging of the connection as the wheel revolves. This is simply done with a bolt with a washer between the rod and the cutout to allow free play.

Beat 'Em Up

Monday to Wednesday records at the Garing Theatre, Greenville, S. C., were badly mangled by The Merry Go Round which opened the Greater Movie Season for H. B. Clarke, doing a better business, by several hundred dollars, than had been done on those days for the last couple of years.

A special showing, plus the reclame of the Greater Movie Season, did the trick.

The lobby was nicely set with a mounted 24-sheet overhead and a three-piece banner with four legs enclosing the lobby.

THIS ODD ROAD BANNER HELPED TO SELL WHY WORRY

It was one of the contributing factors in an exceptional run for the Harold Lloyd production. At the bottom of the board is the message "Tivoli, one week. Harold Lloyd in Why Worry?" It was one of the stunts of F. H. Dowler, Jr., of Chattanooga.

Why Worry Banner Had Them Worried

One of the stunts used by F. H. Dowler, Jr., to put over Why Worry? at the Tivoli Theatre, Chattanooga, was a novel roadside banner, apparently placed on the Lookout Mountain Drive.

The mandatory notice attracted attention and a lot of persons read the sign, more through curiosity than because they felt that they were compelled to. They merely wanted to see what it was all about, and it was all about the Harold Lloyd showing at the Tivoli. This was roughly lettered on a letterhead of the bill posting company to make it look different.

He had ten of these along the various drives for which Chattanooga is noted.

He also got out 1,000 windshield stickers bearing merely the title, and a number of cards with both star and title. These last he posted in the most conspicuous places, including the front of the newly constructed eight-story office building of the Tennessee Electric Power Company. The business section of the town is so small that everyone saw it.

With a thousand stickers and as many goggles, he built up a business that was close to the record.

He Had Lights

Because the failure of the water power through lack of summer rains caused a rationing of the electric service in Johns, N. B., the Queen Theatre found a fine local angle for a Norma Talmadge play.

The bulk of the advertising in newspaper, on the boards and in windows was to the effect that: "Whether the Hydro Service works or not, we have The Eternal Flame for three days."

Eternal flames sounded mighty interesting to a town where they had to go to bed by candle light to save the juice, and it added materially to the business the star's popularity would have pulled in anyhow. It served to make good business better, if you get the idea.

Wasted Space Marks Chicago Advance Ad

It looks as though someone had wasted 54 lines in this opening grind for Monna Vanna at the Harris Theatre, Chicago. That bottom cut is 27 lines deep and we do not think that it sold one half of one percent. of one admission. The whole space is a bit soggy, but this bottom cut seems to be throwing money down the sewer. That fancy title is pretty poor, too, but people might study that for a while, though it will not get the man who is most desired: the man who is not looking for amusement

A Fox Release

MUCH LOST MOTION

and who is caught as he turns the page in search of something else. That title will never reach out and grab his eye as it travels over the page, but it may interest the amusement hunter. The waste cut might have been made to do double duty had the practice followed in the top cut been used. Had this been mortised to let in a type, not a hand lettered, "Scene from Monna Vanna" it would have been the best selling element in the entire space, for the man interested in the rather shadowy picture would have looked around for Monna and have discovered that the white streaked lozenge above told about her. Type would have stood out and would have carried out the title to the eye where the decorative plate is more decorative than informative. Even so small a thing as setting the limited selling talk in type would have helped more than a little, but the space is entirely hand lettered, though other spaces prove that the Chicago papers have a good dress of display in various sizes. The usual explanation of the big town agents is that only through hand lettering can they get the effects they desire, but that is an alibi rather than a real excuse. New York gives real results in type and any city office will give as good if the agent is persistent, but he sends down a few type layouts, does not get just what he wants, and turns to the deadly hand lettering forever after. It's laziness, not display, that forms the real reason.

Pittsburgh All Type Is Neatly Disposed

Pittsburgh, the home of the poorest amusement advertising in the country, can occasionally come through. This is an 85 by 2, or about two sixes, for the Cameo Theatre there, and it is as nice an example of clean typesetting as you can ask for. It is not only clean, but it is good display, and it comes from a town where the agents say they cannot get good type work, so they get worse hand lettering. When they can get such results from the comps, why do they keep on paying money to artists to muss up the spaces? Darned if we can answer our own question.

Rose Blooms Again in Full Page Size

Just to prove that his home town of Burlington, N. C., is no slouch of a city, W. C. McIntire shoots a page to announce the reopening of his Rose Theatre in that miniature metropolis of the South. Northern managers will be interested in the announcement that the Rose is to be exclusively white. He even draws the line at negro nursemaids. We gather that the Rose has previously opened a negro gallery. At any rate it is white enuogh now to please even a klansman of the K. K. K. There is a lot of reading in this space, but there is more time to read, and most subscribers who get the four page paper will have to read all of this to get their money's worth. Mr. McIntire is a red hot local patriot and he probably would not care if he lost a little on Fairbanks so that he might brag that his town had the big-city pictures. If all of the town had the same blacks and a yellowed print paper give a negative result. That white rose is worth a dozen scene cuts, and the title works in better than where there are figures to distract from the attention. The slogan, over to the left, sinks in a little, but Griffith's name comes out fairly strong and for a change of pace this forms a decidedly good appeal. It is hardly something to be worked week after week, but it is good for once. We particularly like the way the signature is worked in at the top. The first three letters of the house name solder the sig to the plate. More white space there might have cut the signature off, but this is a part of the plate without actually running into it.

Circle Still Wastes Its Display Spaces

While the Circle Theatre, Indianapolis, turns out some very good advertising, we think that it wastes a lot of space down at the bottom of its advertisements. It strings out the smaller features to undue length and increases the space bill beyond the point where the extra space can possibly bring extra returns. Beyond the point of visibility, extra space can sell extra money only when it is used to further argue in favor of a sale. Were this not so, it would be the simplest matter in the world to buy a full page and sell four times as many tickets as you can in a quarter page. That would be a very delightful condition, but unfortunately it does not exist, and there is always a point at which excess space becomes waste. This is reached when you exceed the point where your space is needed to put over your argument. It is a wasteful policy to "save" space by not taking sufficient room in which to note the added features, but it is just as wasteful to take too much space for these smaller details. By doubling up the small stuff could be as well carried in an inch or an inch and a quarter instead of the two and a half inches required here, so that some 50 or 60 lines are added to the cost without compensating return. It would even be better to pull in the space and add white above and below, since that would at least add to the attractiveness of the display.

Cut Waste Saved by Well Placed Title

This cut for Scaramouche in the display for the Chicago opening at the Woods' Theatre, does not give a very good reproduction. You can make out the figures and the crowds, but there is nothing sufficiently distinct to do real selling, though the cut does serve efficiently as attractor to the space and the title is so well played up in a reverse strip that it gets over with both feet. Often a reverse title wastes money but here it is a real display and gets the attention for the smaller matter. It is all hand lettering, but it is fairly legible. Probably it looked like too much of a job to set type in all those mortises, but type could have been set to fit and then pasted onto the line layout with comparatively little trouble once some printer is educated to the idea. Nelson Bell often does this for the Crandall houses in Washington with unusually neat results, and if he can, anyone else can.

A Full Display Is Still Attractive

By the best standards of advertising, this space from the Temple Theatre, Toledo, is too full of type and cut. There is too much talk and too little white space. That's according to the rules, but as a matter of fact the rule is shot to pieces because there is good display in spite of the apparent overcrowding. This is largely because the title and star are segregated from the rest of the space by the cuts, and yet joined through the type run-down from the title to the support display below; a layout, by the way, which gives the fullest display to the star and yet permits equal capital to be made of the well-known support. This is about the only excuse for the smaller cut over to the left. It probably will sell few tickets, but it serves its purpose in playing up Arliss and the drama, and probably does this better than would white space with this particular arrangement. It just helps to prove, if proof were needed, that there is no rule that is so hard and fast it may not be disregarded if this is done as intelligently as in the present instance. The placement of the larger cut is a little awkward. The star has his back turned on his space, which is poor practice, and yet, if the cut were shifted to the left he would not come into the space much better, so it is just as well to let the title run into the cut as to let the cut look at the title. Ordinarily it would be better to put the cut over to permit the eye to pass over the cut to the title since all reading is done from left to right. A considerable space saving is effected through cutting the foot of the girl into the border. It gives a full quarter inch to the entire space since the foot sticks out a half inch beyond the rest of the cut.

Plays Small Features Equal to Big Length

It is a healthful sign when a theatre like the Apollo, Indianapolis, plays up the smaller features with proper distinction. This is the lower third of a recent display in which

WITH THE ADVERTISING BRAINS

A WEEKLY DISCUSSION OF THE NEW, UNUSUAL, AND NOVEL IN PROMOTION AIDS

CONDUCTED BY BEN H. GRIMM

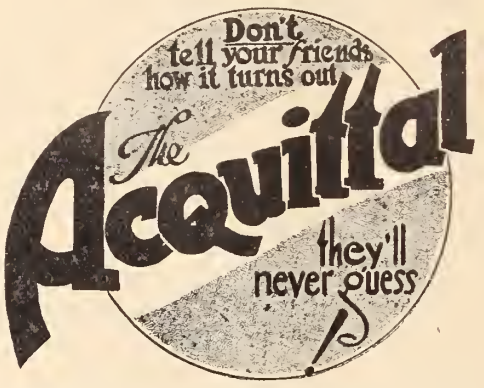
UNIVERSAL always has had the reputation of giving the exhibitor just about everything he needed to put over a picture properly, and recent issues of Universal campaign books do nothing to impair that reputation. In fact, some of the books published in the past few months, especially those on Universal "Super-Jewels," add further laurels to the crown of Universal showmanship.

We have made an intensive and extensive study of press books, and it strikes us that the campaigns prepared by Universal are about as top-notch as any.

Last week we stated that Goldwyn was the only company, to our knowledge, issuing a supplementary promotion book. The statement still stands, but we forgot to mention that Universal publishes the Universal Weekly, in the pages of which are reproduced many of the stunts that have been tried and proved by exhibitors playing Universal pictures. But this periodical is mailed to all exhibitors, and deals with no picture in particular. The Universal Weekly carries advance promotional dope on all of Universal's product, including short stuff.

GETTING back to press books, let us consider those issued by Universal on "The Acquittal."

Here is a complete compendium of ideas that ought to furnish any exhibitor, small-town or big city, with enough material to help sell seats in a thoroughly satisfactory manner. Not only is the general run of stuff practical, but also there is such a variety of ideas as to suit any showman.



The keynote of the whole campaign on "The Acquittal." The elements of suspense and mystery have been retained in almost every piece of promotional matter. Good showman-psychology that should sell plenty of seats.

THE campaign is included in three parts. A four-page, two-color plan book, a section devoted to newspaper ads. and a publicity clip sheet. Each is separate from the other, but together they form a whole.

THE front cover of the campaign book is a selling talk to exhibitors, and it contains a layout that might be adapted to a newspaper ad. Several of the cuts that form the layout are available at U exchanges—pictures of characters in the story. We might suggest here that it would have been a better plan to print this cover in red and black instead of blue and black, as has been done. The blue makes it more difficult to reproduce any of these illustrations direct from the press book.

The inside pages of the campaign book contain information regarding the picture, as well as exploitation ideas and suggestions and reproduction of the heralds. Heralds on the "Acquittal" are made in three different styles—one a teaser "coming" throwaway, another a novelty "Injunction" ordering the recipient to "court," and the third a four-page, two-color miniature newspaper. Incidentally, these miniature newspaper heralds seem to be growing in popularity.

The back page contains two-color reproductions of the posters, lobby displays, etc. The line of paper includes one 24-sheet, two 6-sheets, three 3-sheets, three 1-sheets and a window card.

An unusual lobby-card idea is also presented, a sample of which is reproduced in these columns. As the press book says, "Order the whole set of 11x14s and use the six which show in the lower left hand corner inserts of the principal characters.

"Get six pieces of compo or heavy matt board, one-sheet size (28x42). Make one opening for an 11x14 lobby card in each. Paint the whole board an even neutral background color for lettering, as shown in the illustration."

Copy for each of the six lobby cards is embodied in the press sheet. This is a good idea, and helps carry out the element of suspense and mystery. The idea may also be adapted to other pictures.

Reproductions of rough sketches of the twenty-four and two of the three-sheets. Sketches not fully lettered, but posters are.. Twenty-four carries big display line at top, "Who killed Andred Prentice." Entire line of paper stresses key note of mystery and should prove excellent helping to get customers for theatres that run the picture.

THIS element of suspense and mystery is the keynote of the whole campaign. It's good showmanpsychology to advertise "Don't tell your friends how it will turn out—they'll never guess."

The suspense and mystery idea have been carried out in virtually all of the newspaper ads., which are found in a separate four-page section of the complete campaign. There is a plentiful assortment of newspaper ads., both as to number, subject-matter, type and style. Twenty-four ads. are reproduced, exclusive of seven teasers. This, we believe, is more than the number usually prepared by most other companies.

One thing we like particularly about the assortment of ads. is that several samples of strong type ads. are given; one thing we don't like about the ad. line-up is that our old bugbear, "credit lines," is very much in evidence.

THE publicity clip sheet on "The Acquittal" is indeed comprehensive. It contains stories of all description—reviews, notes, advance stories, etc., and one or two very good feature stories. One little thing we notice in the publicity clip sheet is that the scene cuts, of which there are quite a number, have hand-lettered captions, Universal's "A Lady of Quality" press book contains some mighty good newspaper ads, especially as regards art work. The illustrations are uniformly high class and are mostly from the pen of Mon Randall, who has done some of the best things in this business, in an advertising art sense.

which have to be cut off by newspapers if they do not care to use the caption prepared.

We haven't swerved in our conviction that it would be better to have these captions set in type, and just one added reason is that, for instance, in one one-column cut we observe, the cut itself is three inches deep and the caption takes up almost another inch of space. These days extra inches mean a lot in newspaper pages, and we believe that all scene cuts would get a bigger circulation if not encumbered by hand-lettered captions—if not handicapped by that "extra inch."

IT'S not an easy matter to exactly place the credit for Universal press sheets. There's P. D. Cochrane, George Brown, Paul Gulick and others who all probably have a hand in preparing each campaign; not to forget Joe Hirt and Ben Wells, poster artists; Henry Clay Bate, Don Walk, Paul Perez and others. Anyhow, they're a gang of good showmen!

THERE'S a story which may be old, but which the advertising men of this business will appreciate particularly. Here it is: A certain film magnate was looking over a one-sheet prepared by his advertising manager. "Huh," he said, "that's no good. I'll write you copy for a one-sheet!"

So the magnate wrote two closely typewritten pages of copy and showed it to the advertising man.

"Fine," said the ad. man. "What we can't print on one side we'll run on the other side."

"You're fired," said the magnate. "Such ignorance. Anybody knows that one side of a poster is pasted against the wall."

"Under the Red Robe"

Cosmopolitan Offers Magnificent Version of Historical Novel of France in the Days of Cardinal Richelieu

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Heralded as what is believed to be the first motion picture costing $1,500,000 to produce, Cosmopolitan is presenting "Under the Red Robe," an adaptation of Stanley Weyman's popular historical novel, for an indefinite run at the Cosmopolitan Theatre, New York.

With what is said to be absolute accuracy to the original, whole blocks of Paris streets of the seventeenth century have been duplicated together with rooms in the palace of King Louis XIII at Fontainebleau, even including two famous paintings by Rubens, as well as the magnificent exterior and the entrance hall and grand staircase of Cardinal Richelieu's palace and the interior of another famous palace. Against such backgrounds are large numbers of women gorgeously gowned according to the elaborate mode of the period when the king thought more of the grandeur of his court than he did of statecraft and when Richelieu even undertook to surpass him in the grandeur of his entourage. There are also a great many men-at-arms in the gorgeous liveries of king and cardinal with their coats-of-arms, magnificent laces and embroideries that vie with the gowns of the women.

The story is one of intrigue which involves the plotting of the king's brother to secure the throne, and of the king's family to end the almost despotic sway of the powerful cardinal. Through the assistance of a dashing soldier of fortune, the cardinal succeeds in winning out against his enemies. The romantic interest is supplied by a love affair between the hero and the sister of one of the plotters. The title refers to the cardinal's garment.

It will be seen that the story follows along somewhat familiar lines for historical costume romances. While interesting, it somehow does not seem to develop any very great punch or powerful hold on the spectator, although there are several effective individual scenes, as for instance the running fight of soldiers on horseback in a shallow stream; the attempts of the faithful retainer to save his master, ending in the servant and a soldier plunging over a high cliff; and the touching scene where Richelieu, temporarily shorn of power, finds himself deserted by his army of sycophants. It would seem that greater stress has been placed on the magnificence and accuracy of the production for its drawing power than upon the dramatic values of the story, but by no means is the story uninteresting. This same idea would also appear to be responsible for the fact that in bringing out the other elements of the picture so much footage has been used that the hold of the story is weakened, with the result that there is an impression of too great length, which judicious cutting would improve by tightening up the action.

A newcomer, John Charles Thomas, well known as a singer in concert work and in light opera, has the role of the swashbuckling hero and creates a good impression. Alma Rubens in the leading feminine role, with quite limited opportunities, does effective work. The other featured player, Robert B. Mantell, the well-known stage tragedian, appears as Richelieu, and while he gives a good performance, does not seem at all times at ease before the camera. Gustav von Seyffertitz is excellent in the role of Clon. The lesser roles are creditably portrayed by a well-selected cast.

Just at the time that Cardinal Richelieu had risen from an obscure priest to be prime minister of France under the weak, foppish King Louis XIII, Gil de Berault, an impecunious gentleman noted as a swordsman, disregards the Cardinal's orders against dueling but is given the chance to save his life if he will capture de Cocheforet, who is plotting against the king. Gil sets out on his mission and captures de Cocheforet, but, falling in love with his sister Renee, sets him free and returns to the Cardinal to take his medicine. In the meantime the king's brother, the Duke of Orleans, causes the weak king to dismiss Richelieu, but gets in a fight discovers proof that Orleans is a traitor, and when this is presented to the king, Richelieu is returned to favor and Gil is praised for his great service to the crown and "sentenced" to marry Renee.

"The Leavenworth Case"

Vitagraph Offers Absorbing Entertainment in Screen Version of Famous Mystery

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

During her long career as an author of mystery stories which have achieved great popularity, Anna Katherine Greene has probably written none which is more baffling than one of her earliest works "The Leavenworth Case." This story has been transferred to the screen with unusual fidelity by Charles Giblyn as a Whitman Bennett Production and is being released by Vitagraph.

Almost at the first flash you find yourself face to face with a seemingly unsolvable mystery and from then on, with no waste footage, your interest is held tensely until the final and thoroughly satisfactory solution. The tremendous suspense of the original story has been even increased in the screen version, with the result that you find yourself continually on the alert, watching the unfolding of the story and waiting intently for the explanation of how and by whom the mysterious murder was committed. Few will be able to guess with any degree of certainty the identity of the guilty party. Here is absorbing and exciting entertainment for all who like a good detective-crime-mystery story—and who does not? No matter if it does follow along somewhat familiar lines.

Credit should go to Director Charles Giblyn for the manner in which he has handled this production; there is excellent continuity and a heightening interest, with no side issues to divert your attention from the main problem. Seena Owen in the leading role, as the niece under suspicion, gives a fine performance and Martha Mansfield is satisfactory in the unsympathetic role of the other niece. Wilfred Lytell as a mysterious character and Bradley Barker as the hero do good work. Paul Doucet as the secretary is, however, at time camera-conscious and inclined to overact.

Don't overlook this one as a box-office bet, if your patrons like mystery stories.

Length, 5,460 feet.

Story

When Ira Leavenworth, a rich old recluse, fails to appear for breakfast, his two nieces, Eleanor and Mary Leavenworth, with the aid of his secretary, Harwell, break into the sound-proof study and find Leavenworth dead, a bullet hole in his head. Suspicion points to Eleanor and then turns to a mysterious visitor who had spoken with Leavenworth before he was slain. Raymond, Leavenworth's attorney, and who is in love with one of the nieces, intercedes with the District Attorney and gets him to delay making of arrests. He then engages one of the most famous private detectives in New York to conduct an investigation. Eleanor is cleared of the crime and the real culprit confesses

"Our Hospitality"

Buster Keaton's Second Metro Feature Has Novel Theme and Is Unusually Entertaining Comedy

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

Buster Keaton's second production for Metro, "Our Hospitality," confirms the impression made by "The Three Ages," that excellent judgment was used in presenting him in comedies of feature length. It is a picture that should satisfy all kinds and classes of patrons and cause them to leave the theatre smiling, consequently it should prove a big box-office winner.

"Our Hospitality" contains melodrama, farce, straight comedy and burlesque, all dovetailing smoothly into an entertaining picture, with a climax that while containing fine touches of comedy goes the average thriller "one better" from the standpoint of stunts and thrills.

Aside from its other points of appeal, here is a picture that you can promise your audiences is absolutely different. The introduction of a reproduction of one of the very first railroad trains, with a dinky little engine like the modern stationary engines and coaches that resemble old-fashioned horse-drawn carriages, is a decidedly novel idea and gives opportunities for many original and highly amusing comedy touches.

The theme itself, which in a good natured way succeeds in getting a lot of fun out of a Kentucky feud situation, is an unhackneyed one. Buster finds himself in the home of the other faction but "our hospitality," as explained by the leader, will not permit his being attacked until he leaves. In his schemes to circumvent their vengeance, Buster has a fine chance for the kind of comedy work for which he is noted.

There is a real plot which is never lost sight of, and there is excellent continuity, the comedy situations and chase ending in the big thrill scene where Buster not only is saved by a log to which he is tied getting caught just as he goes over a high falls and his "daredevil stunt" in swinging out and grabbing the heroine in mid-air after she has actually gone over the falls, are consistently developed, none of the action being just dragged in for effect.

Buster has a typical Buster Keaton role and gives an excellent performance, his unique type of comedy showing up to advantage, while naturally he is almost the whole show, he is ably assisted by his wife, Natalie Talmadge, who makes a good impression as the heroine, and others whose names appear in the cast, all of whom enter into the mood of the picture and give good performances. This is certainly a Keaton cast, for in addition to Buster and Natalie, Buster Keaton, Jr., as a one-year-old baby, will especially delight the feminine patrons.

Length, 6,220 feet.

Story

On the death of his father in a Kentucky feud, William McKay, then a baby, is taken to New York by his mother to save his life. Growing to manhood, he receives a call to return home and claim his father's estate. It is now the year 1830 and Buster starts out on a dinky little train with cars resembling stage coaches. He meets a charming girl, and on arriving in Kentucky it develops that she is a daughter of one of the feudists. McKay is invited to dinner and finds he is in the hands of his enemies who are going to shoot him, but their code causes them to wait until he leaves their home. Then follows a series of humorous situations in which he does all kinds of stunts to either stay there or get away unobserved. Finally he gets away in hoopskirts. A chase follows in which the little train figures, ending in McKay being swept down a stream through the rapids and over high falls. He is saved by a log and later rescues the girl who has followed them. His enemies, returning home, find that McKay and the girl have found a preacher and are being married. Reconciliation occurs and McKay takes from his clothing about a dozen guns that he had swiped from his enemies' arsenal.

"The Virginian"

Excellent Production of Famous Novel Offered by B. P. Schulberg Through Preferred Pictures

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

As entertainment and as a box-office magnet, "The Virginian" is a splendid offering. Preferred Pictures has accomplished something that will interest a tremendous number of fans and readers. The novel by Owen Wister and the play by Owen Wister and Kirke La Shelle reached a high standard of popularity which this new screen version gives ample promise of equaling.

There is a need of shortening the film in its present condition. It seems far too long, measuring over eight reels and lengthening out certain situations at the sacrifice of their beauty and effectiveness.

Kenneth Harlan plays "The Virginian" with an appeal that few can resist. The charm of his performance here should give him a new place among the screen favorites. The romance between him and the "schoolmarm," played by Florence Vidor, has so many little human touches and such great heart interest that all the fans will love it. Florence Vidor is strikingly beautiful.

Tom Forman, the director, has given the production everything that the public expects in a first rate attraction. In atmospheric flashes of comedy, conflict, friendship and romance he has colored the important incidents of the story. Above all, the picture is strong in human feeling. The emotional note in the friendship between the Virginian and his best friend, whom he is forced to send to the noose, is intensely appealing. This is one of the scenes which is too protracted, however.

The settings deserve special praise. There are wide, commanding views of the cattle ranges, expertly photographed and lending great picturesqueness to the action. The entire cast is excellent. It is a picture with a deep emotional appeal and is a fine box-office offering.

Story

The Virginian and Steve are pals on a Wyoming ranch. When the stage coach bearing the new teacher overturns in the ford, the Virginian rescues her and after some difficulty breaks down her New England conventionality sufficiently to "court" her. His pal, Steve, proves to be a weakling and in spite of the Virginian's warning joins a cattle rustler and, his friend is forced to hang him along with the others. The Virginian's sweetheart scorns him for this inhumanity, but circumstances prove that her love for him is greater than any other feeling.

"The Way of a Man"

Pathe's New Serial, Released as a Nine-Reel Feature, Has Fine Action

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Nine reels of fast action is the condensed and featurized version of the new Pathe serial, based upon the novel by Emerson Hough, "The Way of a Man." Exhibitors who desire the serial type of entertainment without presenting it on the "installment plan" should welcome this. It should do well where a nine-reel feature is not too long.

The episodes have been well linked together so that the form is practically that of the usual feature. Also, the material is well suited to a feature production. It is a story of a young man's journey across early western trails and there is enough intrigue to make it constantly exciting. Harold Miller, Allene Ray and Bud Osborne play the important roles convincingly. Miss Ray is a pretty, colorful type and should please anywhere.

While the entire action is interesting, there are a few big outstanding thrills such as usually conclude each of the chapters when it is shown in two-reel episodes. A party of pioneers have a lively battle with the Indians; the hero and his enemy have a fight that starts in an upstairs room and proceeds vividly to the porch and through a fall onto a covered wagon below, ending with the villain's dashing escape and near-death, and the climax shows a dramatic defense of the cabin which the bandits are attacking.

Some of the touches show more care and detail than frequently is characteristic of a serial. The atmosphere and characterization is very good. Lillian Gale's interpretation of a pioneer woman, for instance, gives the picture an excellent bit of local color and a number of laughs. The character of the villain, fluctuating apparently between good and evil, affords unusual suspense.

Percy Marmont and Betty Bouton Give Performances of Great Charm in Fox Special

Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Gouverneur Morris' theme for this story is one of the oldest, but one which never seems to lose its power when treated with sincerity as here. The quality of the acting and the material side of the production will count greatly in the picture's favor. Percy Marmont and Betty Bouton have a seriousness and charm about their work that makes the story itself seem unimportant. They provide entertainment that in the majority of theatres will be popular.

The society girl, left penniless and forced to work in a department store where the price of respectability becomes too high, is the heroine of this story. Circumstances, such as her broken health and the man's inability to get a divorce from his wife, who wants the social prestige his name affords her, have considerable weight in directing the sympathies toward their unconventional life together. It has throughout a saving strain of wistfulness and pathos. It is this emotional quality and a good taste in appointments that almost overshadows the fact that the character of the story is not strong. This will probably not be generally observed, as the style is entertaining.

Percy Marmont's performance has that sympathetic appeal and understanding that has always distinguished him. His gift for stirring the emotions is active even when the immediate situation seems a bit forced. Betty Bouton is a new actress of great charm. She is pictorially pleasing and dresses most attractively without any excessively showy effects. The picture has been beautifully staged and photographed.

"White Tiger"

Priscilla Dean Starred in Crook Drama of New Character Made by Universal
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Tod Browning's latest crook drama for Universal is somewhat of a departure. For the greater part, it is minus the expected action and thrills. It seems to have another purpose which is not at all times perfectly clear, but which is principally to afford an intimate character study of three crook types.

As the average patron's taste runs more in favor of melodrama, especially in this kind of subject matter, "White Tiger" is not altogether satisfying as an attraction for the majority. It is vague in purpose and passive in mood, compared to the Universal-Jewel standard.

It does succeed in presenting a new angle of underworld psychology. The private life of crooks, their attitude toward each other and the atmosphere in which they live is pictured in greater detail, and more authentically, no doubt, than in the usual "thriller." It does not have the familiar idealistic trend in this respect. There is no bond of love or loyalty between them. Here is the point referred to in the title. "White Tiger" is the hating, fearful soul of the crook which has no real friend and is friend to no one.

In order to be sufficiently clear and impressive, a study of this type needs an abundance of humor and color. Priscilla Dean, Wallace Beery and Raymond Griffith are contrasting, vivid types for the main trio. At times their performances are full of interest. But through no fault of their own the attention of the spectator lags, at times, for lack of really human touches. Priscilla Dean is charming in certain scenes, particularly in the beginning. Here the mechanical chess man is an interesting novelty, giving the picture a bit of real color.

Story and direction by Tod Browning.
Scenario by Tod Browning and Charles Kenyon.
Photography by William Fildew.
Length, 7,177 feet.

Story

Sylvia Donovan, Roy Donovan and Count Donelli, three international crooks, come to America to make a clean-up. Although Sylvia and Roy are brother and sister they are unaware of the fact. Donelli knows the relationship, but keeps it quiet for reasons of his own. It was Donelli, then known as Hawkes, who had betrayed the pair's father to the police twenty years before. In America they rob the home of a wealthy man through a ruse by which Roy is concealed in an automatic chess-player and smuggled in. The trio flee to the north woods with the loot. Each crook mistrusts the other and all sit for sleepless nights and days watching and waiting. Roy and Sylvia return the gems after Detective Longworth's promise to help Roy start anew. Donelli flees into the night and later is found dead of exhaustion. Sylvia marries Longworth.

"The Mask of Lopez"

Fred Thomson Featured in Monogram Western With Good Action and Suspense
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Enthusiastic admirers of Western drama will enjoy Fred Thomson's first feature, "The Mask of Lopez," which Monogram is releasing. It is a fair example of a favored form of entertainment--the picture with intrigue, suspense, riding and fighting. It is not an exceptional picture of its kind, but it is interesting and lively and the smaller theatre which flourishes on Westerns should find it worth while.

Fred Thomson is a stunt actor of considerable ability and rather pleasing personality. He impersonates an ex-convict to get a job on a ranch owned by a pretty girl whom he wants to serve. The foreman is a cattle rustler and the story relates how the hero trails him and is trapped. Albert Rogell has given it good direction, investing the scenes with a good deal of life and spectacular value.

One of the thrills for the fan is the fight between the star and Frank Hagney, who plays the heavy. This is intensely realistic and long drawn out. The climax has good suspense, showing the cattle rustler outwitted and forced by the hero to adopt his disguise and meet the doom which he had planned for the innocent man. Silver King, a beautiful white horse, is an interesting figure in the drama. Hazel Keener is attractive as the heroine and the others, too, are well chosen.

"Pleasure Mad"

Reginald Barker Production for Metro Features a Truthful Performance by Mary Alden
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

With an appeal very much like that of "A Woman's Woman," which had the same star, this Metro release with Mary Alden can be well recommended to women patrons. Miss Alden plays another mother-and-wife role in her smooth, intelligent manner, and the character of the picture will insure its success almost anywhere.

Aside from the main theme, the jazz angle will interest another class which might not be so deeply moved by the familiar idea of the old-fashioned mother and her ultra-modern husband and children. The idea is entertainingly treated by Reginald Barker. The younger fans will appreciate the gay parties and the youthfulness of certain parts of the picture, as personified chiefly by Norma Shearer, who plays the daughter.

But the greatest appeal is the sympathetic performance of Mary Alden. The quality of her work is so good that the triteness of many of the situations fades from mind. Because of her the basic idea is made to seem real—that a woman is unable to keep pace with her husband's prosperity and consequently drives him and the children into dangerous pursuits. Without her acting, neither the role nor the story would be as convincing.

It is the type of story which features pleasing settings and clothes to advantage. Norma Shearer dresses attractively and adds a piquant touch which nicely balances the rather somber appeal which Miss Alden makes. It is interestingly done and should be satisfactory program entertainment in a majority of houses.

He turns to another woman for sympathy and when the break comes his daughter clings to him because he understands her, she says, while the son stands by his mother. His daughter goes on a party and is locked in a room by her host. Her father and his sweetheart are among the guests and her father hears his daughter calling for help and rushes to her aid. He shoots the man and is arrested, but word comes that the man has recovered and the family is now united on a sure foundation of better understanding.

"The Barefoot Boy"

Whittier's Poem Makes C. B. C. Attraction of Great Sentimental Appeal
Reviewed by Mary Kelly

Sentiment of a sort that will bring a tearful response from virtually every woman in the house gives "The Barefoot Boy" an undeniable appeal. It is an attraction that will register most deeply in heart interest. But it has good comedy and melodramatic values as well.

Whittier's poem suggested the idea of a barefoot boy hero, appealing because of his humbleness and innocence. Frankie Lee plays this part, and as pathos is an overruling element in it, he is a very good choice. The melodramatic possibilities of the early part of the picture have been stretched to the limit. Dick Alden is beaten by his stepfather, is the rescuer of a runaway, snubbed by the girl he saves, accused of setting fire to the schoolhouse, abused by his teacher—in all a self-sacrificing victim of almost every conceivable sort of cruelty.

Considered as a portrait of life, these events are of course unconvincing. But they serve to make a stirring drama, entertaining to the general public, and culminating in a farewell scene between mother and son that will be sure to make them weep.

The last half of the picture brings a new hero and a new mood. The boy returns to the town which he practically owns now and plans his revenge by proceeding to ruin everyone there except two or three of his steadfast friends. John Bower plays this rather stern role with marked feeling. Marjorie Daw is cast as the girl who has always loved him and who stands between him and his vengeful purpose which so nearly destroys him.

"The Barefoot Boy" has assured box office value, and has already demonstrated its emotional power. It has been well directed by David Kirkland.

Story

Dick Alden, a barefoot boy, helps his old friend, the village drunkard, to get out of the school house cellar and is seen by some of the children. The school house catches fire because of carelessness of a smoker and Dick is blamed. His stepfather beats him and the whole town scoffs at him. His mother helps him to escape and years later he comes back a wealthy man, determined to ruin every person in town. His enemies blow up his factory one night and both he and the girl who is trying to turn his purpose are injured. He realizes his mistake nad with the girl's encouragement decides to forgive.

"The Steadfast Heart"

Goldwyn Offers an Appealing Human Interest Drama on Theme of Downtrodden Boy Who Makes Good

Reviewed by Beatrice Barrett

There is no stronger appeal to the heart than the appeal of a child made an apathetic and hopeless creature by abuse. And there is no greater appeal to the sympathies than the downtrodden boy who, given a chance in the world, overcomes his handicaps of birth and environment and makes good.

"The Steadfast Heart" is a picture with this child appeal, and it will reach every heart in the audience. It is a simple, small town story, well told in a convincing, true-to-life manner that makes the characters live on the screen. Almost the entire first half of the picture is devoted to the life and hardships of the child, but unlike most pictures in which child actors are featured, this does not drag. Events move along quickly and in a manner that will hold the intense interest of the audience. Joseph Depew is a most able child actor with a happy faculty of becoming the boy he is depicting, and he cannot fail to arouse the sympathy of any audience.

The latter part of the picture, showing the boy grown up, fighting against the narrow-minded prejudice of a small town, contains many dramatic situations.

A fascinating love story is interwoven through the picture, starting with the first love of two children—the one the rich little girl of the town, the other the son of the town drunkard—and culminating in a real love theme when the boy makes good and returns to seek the sweetheart of his youth.

"The Steadfast Heart" makes no pretentions of being a big production, but is the sort of picture an audience can thoroughly enjoy. It is ably enacted by players who have all entered into their roles with a sympathetic understanding which makes the characters live and have personality. Miriam Battista does her part to carry along the juvenile part of the story, and Joseph Striker as the grown boy fighting alone to make a place for himself in the world will keep the interest aroused, while Marguerite Courtot plays an attractive other half of the love duo.

Story

Angus Burke's father stole money and ran away. His mother, half crazed by her life of abuse and poverty, believes the sheriff's men to be robbers and tells Angus to shoot. He kills the sheriff, is tried and released. Dave Wilkins takes the friendless boy to live with him. Angus is persecuted by the people of the town, especially Mal Crane, son of the prosecutor. His one friend is Lydia Canfield, the rich little girl of the town. Wilkins sends Angus away to school. He rises rapidly in the business world but is called back to Rainbow by the sickness of Wilkins. Mal Crane tries to run Angus out of town. Lydia is engaged to Mal. He and his father have formed an oil company and the people become suspicious of their dealings. Angus learns Crane has left town with the funds of the people. He goes after him and catches up to him just as Crane's car turns turtle down an embankment, killing Crane. Angus returns with the money, becomes the hero of the town, and wins Lydia's love.

"Flaming Youth"

First National Film Which Gets Down Beneath the Surface of the Jazz Craze; Provides Exceptional Entertainment

Reviewed by C. S. Sewell

In "Flaming Youth" adapted from a highly successful novel, First National has a production which gives every indication of being a tremendous box-office attraction. Superbly made and acted, it deals with an up-to-the-minute subject, social restlessness and the craving of pleasure in place of real love, as exemplified in the jazz craze, but unlike many other pictures dealing with jazz the manifestation of this craze as shown in wild and riotous parties has not been made the outstanding feature. There are such parties, but they are subordinated to the author's idea.

Here is a picture that seeks to get down under the surface and dig to the bottom of this ultra-modern problem, to find the causes and show the effects as exemplified by a wealthy girl who at a crucial moment is deprived of a mother's guiding hand. It is not a preachment in any sense but a tremendously interesting and vital human document that will provide absorbing entertainment for all types of patrons. It is a picture that you will watch unfold with continually mounting interest as you follow the career of this girl for whom tremendous sympathy is developed.

Those responsible have achieved an unusual degree of success in accomplishing the task they set out to do. It is not a story which depends on one big punch situation but rather a character study of the heart of a modern girl, as you follow her problems, you become engrossed in them. Then too, there is no absence of vital dramatic situations.

Colleen Moore in the leading role, an unusually difficult one, proves a revelation, and even though some may feel that she should have been more restrained in her portrayal of the growing girl, certainly her performance after she has reached womanhood is one of the finest the screen has seen; she enters wholeheartedly into the character and makes it so real that you seem not to be watching a picture, but real life. This intensely human and realistic note is also evident in the work of the other principals. Milton Sills gives a fine performance as the hero who is not a milk-and-water type but a man who has his faults. Myrtle Steadman was so fine as the mother that you regretted her death early in the story. Elliott Dexter did excellent work in the rather idealistic role of the doctor whose love for Pat's mother was one of silence and service to Pat. Phillip Smalley was good as Pat's pleasure-loving, philandering father, And so on through a large and unusually well-selected cast.

Grab this picture, Mr. Exhibitor, or you will be sorry. Boost it for it deserves boosting, and your patrons will go away from your theatre and advise their friends to see it, for it is a picture that from every standpoint is well worth seeing.

Length, 8434 feet.

Mrs. Fentriss, because of her husband's neglect plunges in for a round of gayety and jazz and two of her daughters following suit contract unhappy marriages. She seeks however to be more of a real old-fashioned mother to her youngest daughter Patricia. Being stricken with heart trouble from over-excitement she dies after telling her friend Doctor Bobs about Cary Scott the one man she really loves and making Bobs promise to write to her regularly about Pat placing the letters in a wall-safe.

Pat grows up a confirmed devotee of jazz. Cary Scott returns and becomes the one stabilizing influence in her life. After a while, they learn to love each other but Cary cannot marry her until he gets a divorce from his wife from whom he is estranged. Pat disillusioned because of the unhappy marriages around her hesitates to marry. She seeks solace in the company of a violinist who proves to be a cad and after a terrifying experience comes home ill and is near death. Cary returns and he and the doctor try to revive her. Finally it seems as if the influence of her dead mother's spirit has helped her and spoken through her, for she recovers and finds happiness in marriage with Scott.

Red Seal in Deal with Stanley Co.

Edwin Miles Fadman, president of the Red Seal Pictures Corp., 1600 Broadway, announces that he has just closed a deal with the Stanley Company of America for a solid circuit booking on the Red Seal five reel feature "Bill," whereby the picture will be featured beginning Thanksgiving week at the Stanley Theatre and from there will go to the other Stanley houses through Pennsylvania and New Jersey.

Simultaneously with this closing, it is announced that the De Luxe Film Company of Philadelphia, will distribute the film for the Red Seal Pictures in eastern Pennsylvania and southern New Jersey.

Hyman Buys Entire C. B. C. Product

Louis Hyman, head of All Star Feature Distributors, of Los Angeles and San Francisco, has completed arrangements for the distribution rights to the entire C. B. C. product for the year.

The arrangement, which was made personally with Jack Cohn of C. B. C., who is now at his company's West Coast production centre, gives All Star the handling in California, Arizona, Nevada and the Hawaiian Islands of the series of big features on the C. B. C. program this season.

"Innocence" Is Title

The C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation announces that the story, "Circumstances Alter Divorce Cases," which originally appeared in the Theatre Magazine, is being released under the title "Innocence," featuring Anna Q. Nilsson.

"Gambling Wives" Is Now in Production

W. E. Shallenberger, president of the Arrow Film Corporation, announces that active production on Arrow's big special, "Gambling Wives," is now under way in Hollywood, where the picture is being directed by Dell Henderson.

Dr. Shallenberger states that the contest, which was directed by Aldrich and Montgomery, through Mother's Home Life Magazine, for this production, was extremely successful, thousands of contestants participating from all over the United States, with winners coming from practically every part of the country.

The winners of the guaranteed parts and the opportunity tryouts were called last week by the Arrow Film Corporation, and reported at the office of Mother's Home Life Magazine in Chicago, on Thursday, November 8, where they proceeded in a body to Los Angeles, and their active work in the picture began on Tuesday, November 13.

The winners of the two guaranteed parts are William Liska, of Elizabeth, New Jersey, and John Del Vecchio, of Schenectady, New York, while the winners of the tryouts, who if they make good, will also receive parts in "Gambling Wives," are Ross Sedita of Birmingham, Alabama, Winifred Gallagher of Seattle, Washington, Charles Watts of Sioux City, Iowa, Clara Tschuchke of Lindhurst, New Jersey, and Dean Bell of Bassett, Nebraska.

As will be readily seen, the winners, coming from such widely scattered parts of the United States, will have an added value from a publicity and advertising standpoint in the production, says Dr. Shallenberger.

Second Monogram Now Being Edited

Andrew J. Callaghan, president of Monogram Pictures, left on his initial selling trip for his company. His first stop was Chicago, where he picked up the first print of "The Mask of Lopez," which is the first picture of the Western series starring Fred Thomson that the Callaghan concern will handle on the State Right market.

Pittsburgh, Cleveland, Indianapolis, Buffalo and Philadelphia will be visited by Mr. Callaghan before his return to New York the last of the week. While in Chicago Mr. Callaghan will confer with Watterson Rothacker, whose concern is doing all the printing for the Monogram Company.

The second of the Thomson series, "North of Nevada," is now in the cutting room and will be shipped East in the course of a few days. A screening of "The Mask of Lopez" for the reviewers will be held shortly and following same a public screening for all interested will be held probably at the Astor.

Abraham Carlos Back on Coast

Abraham Carlos, president of Carlos Production, making the Richard Talmadge productions for Truart Film Corporation, and producers also of "The Unknown Purple," arrived in Los Angeles after an extended visit to New York where he was in conference with M. H. Hoffman, vice president of Truart, regarding the forthcoming year's product.

Upon his arrival at the Coast Mr. Carlos engaged Henry Lehrman to direct the second Talmadge production, being made under the title of the novel from which it is being adapted, "To Live or Die." Carlos Production will only make two pictures during the year of the type of "The Unknown Purple," upon which over six months were in the making. The second story, a well-known stage play, has been obtained and Mr. Carlos is procceding with his preparations for its production.

Coit Albertson in "Restless Wives"

Coit Albertson appears in a heavy role in C. C. Burr's new production, "Restless Wives," with Doris Kenyon, which will be distributed on the Independent market. Gregory La Cava is the director of this Izola Forrester story from Ainslee's Magazine.

Buys Burr Product

Mastodon Films, Inc., through its representative, Lester F. Scott, Jr., closed contracts for the distribution of all C. C. Burr productions in the Wisconsin territory to the Mid-west Film Company (C. W. Trampe, manager), Toy Building, Milwaukee, Wisconsin.

Lesser Obtains "Captain January" for Baby Peggy's First Principal

"Captain January," by Laura E. Richards, now in its 52nd printing and with a circulation of more than 600,000 copies, will be Baby Peggy's first screen vehicle as a start for Principal Pictures Corporation. This announcement has just been made by Sol Lesser, president of Principal.

Work on "Captain January" will be started January 21, three days after Baby Peggy returns to the coast from her tour of the East and Middle West, during which she met thousands of people. The child star left New York City on Nov. 9, went to Boston and surrounding cities as the guest of the Boston Post and then proceeded to Chicago. In Baby Peggy Mr. Lesser believes he has a "find" that will prove equally as great as Jackie Coogan, whom he developed, and he considers "Captain January" the ideal story with which to introduce her to the public in a big special production.

Irving M. Lesser, vice president of Principal Pictures, conducted the negotations by which the screen rights for "Captain January" were purchased from the publishers, L. C. Page & Co., of Boston. Sol Lesser is now actively engaged on the Coast in arranging to produce the picture on an elaborate scale.

Hostettler Circuit Books C .B. C.

Julius Singer, who has opened a new exchange in Omaha under the name of Columbia Pictures Exchange, announces that he has booked the entire series of the C. B. C. Film Sales Corporation output over the Hostettler Circuit and that these features will appear in all of the Hostettler Theatres at an early date.

Title Changed

Harry Langdon, erstwhile vaudeville favorite now making two reel comedies for Principal Pictures Corporation, has changed the title of his first picture of the series from "The Skyscraper" to "The Greenhorn." Three of the series are now completed, "The Greenhorn," "A Perfect Nuisance" and "A Tough Tenderfoot."

Monogram Pictures Announces Sale

Andrew J. Callaghan, president, Monogram Pictures Corporation, announces the sale in Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territories of the Harry J. Brown series of six western pictures to the Biltmore Pictures Corporation.

The series include: "The Mask of Lopez," "North of Nevada," "Shadows of the Sage," "The Sheriff of Tombstone," "Riders of the Rio Grande" and "The Desert Ranch." Fred Thomson is starred.

Red Seal Company Closes Deal

A sale has just been closed by the Red Seal Pictures Corporation 1600 Broadway, Edwin Miles Fadman, president, whereby the Red Seal five reel feature "Bill" which recently played the Rialto Theatre, Broadway, will be distributed in Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey by the De Luxe Film Company, and in New England by the Franklin Film Exchange.

Exhibitors Praise C. C. Burr Production

"Three o'Clock in the Morning," C. C. Burr's current production starring Constance Binney, is going over "big" in New England, according to Samuel Moscow, of Moscow Films, Inc., of Boston, Mass., who controls the territorial franchise on C. C. Burr pictures. Mr. Moscow has received a batch of telegrams from exhibitors, all as enthusiastic as the following:

"'Three o'Clock in the Morning' standing them up to capacity houses."—John Dineen, Modern Theatre, Lawrence, Mass. "As good an audience picture as we have had this year."—J. Lourie, Modern and Beacon Theatres, Boston, Mass. "I'll buy all you can get like 'Three o'Clock in the Morning.'"—A. Goodside, Capitol Theatre, Springfield, Mass. "'Three o'Clock in the Morning' is my idea of entertainment. My business on this picture proves that I am right."—Al. Newhall Strand Theatre, Lynn, Mass.

Cobb Knows Where to Find 'Em

After having searched several months for a group of stories which might be used by Bryant Washburn and Elliott Dexter in their forthcoming productions for Grand-Asher, F. Heath Cobb, director of exploitation for Grand-Asher, announces that he has found stories which will be suitable.

Adaptations will shortly be made of the first to be produced and their titles will be announced later.

Constance Binney on Stage and Screen

Constance Binney, who is starring in a series of C. C. Burr screen productions beginning with "Three o'Clock in the Morning," will be the featured player in "The Perfect Lady," the new musical comedy which Laurence Schwab, co-producer of "The Gingham Girl," is to sponsor. This play is booked to open in Jersey City on December 10.

Dexter, Satisfied, Returns to Coast

After staying in New York City to attend the preview of his first picture for Grand-Asher called "The Way Men Love," Elliott Dexter returned to Hollywood where he will soon begin production on another special feature for Grand-Asher.

He announced himself well satisfied with his work in his first production.

"The Unknown Purple" to Run in Los Angeles

"The Unknown Purple," Roland West's adaptation of his own successful stage play, which was produced by Carlos Productions for Truart release, is to have an indefinite run at the California Theatre, Los Angeles, beginning November 25.

The picture will be staged with special prologue and epilogue, under the personal direction of Mr. West, who, besides writing the play and directing it for the stage, also directed the motion picture version. In the special prologue Henry B. Walthall, Alice Lake and Brinsley Shaw will appear in person. These three artists all have prominent parts in the picture.

Joins Federated

Buddy Stuart has become connected with the Federated Film Exchange, Inc., of Boston, Mass., in the capacity of director of publicity and advertising. Federated handles the F. B. O. and Grand-Asher product in New England.

Among Stewart's duties is the editing of "Film Digest," a publication issued for exhibitors by Federated.

Has Important Part in "Restless Wives"

Montagu Love plays a prominent role in support of Doris Kenyon in C. C. Burr's "Restless Wives," which will be distributed on the Independent market.

This is Love's second appearance in a C. C. Burr presentation, the first being in "Secrets of Paris," made at the Whitman Bennett studio.

NEWS FROM THE PRODUCERS

EDITED BY T. S. DA PONTE

One of the powerful love scenes in the William Fox Screen Version of "The Shepherd King," which was filmed in Egypt by J. Gordon Edwards, with Violet Mersereau in the leading part as the Princess Michal.

This Modernizes Barthelmess

Richard Barthelmess returns to a modern role in his next picture, "Twenty-one," his new First National Picture, after almost a year in which he has played nothing but character parts.

Dorothy Mackail plays her second role opposite Barthelmess in "Twenty-one." Ivan Simpson, Joe King, Dorothy Cumming, Nellie Parker Spaulding, Bradley Barker and Elsie Lawson and a large cast of flappers and society belles play in support of Mr. Barthelmess.

Record Smashed by "Scaramouche"

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" is a popular current Broadway, N. Y., attraction. On Sunday of last week "Scaramouche" broke the 44th street house record for the third successive time.

In Washington it is said that very few of the high governmental officials failed to review it.

Completed

"Cupid's Fireman," the latest Charles Jones picture completed at the William Fox West Coast studios, is founded on the Richard Harding Davis story, "Andy McGee's Chorus Girl." The girl is played by pretty, dark-eyed Marion Nixon. William Wellman directed.

Boston Enthusiastic in Lauding "Going Up"

The picture reviewers of staid Boston, as well as the fans, used many superlatives to express their enthusiasm over Douglas MacLean in "Going Up," when this Associated Exhibitors attraction played Gordon's Olympia last week.

In the course of his review in the Herald, "E. G." said: "'Going Up' is one of the funniest films that we have seen, and Douglas MacLean is a delight. On the stage, 'Going Up' was, of course, a good comedy, but on the screen it is as ridiculously funny as an animated cartoon."

George C. Mackinnon wrote in the Advertiser: "Simon-pure farce of the genuine 'screamingly funny' brand is 'Going Up,' now dispensing rounds of hearty laughter at Gordon's Olympia. It makes side-splitting entertainment."

The Hartford, Conn., papers also gave warm praise to the comedy during its run at the Palace in that city. "MacLean's experiences in this picture," says the Times, "give one enough laughs to last a week. It's one of the peppiest films that has struck a local film for some time."

Robert E. Sherwood wrote in Life, New York: "Douglas MacLean, a graceful comedian and accomplished farceur, has had no opportunities in recent years so favorable as those that are presented to him in 'Going Up.' That he makes the most of them is greatly to his credit, because usually, when a movie star hears opportunity knocking, he mistakes it for the uproar of the destructive critics."

Unusual Day and Date Run for Pickford Film

Unusual is the day and date run in two big Pittsburgh theatres this week of Mary Pickford's "Rosita," the United Artists Corporation release.

Beginning Monday, Nov. 5, this Mary Pickford attraction began showing to capacity audiences at Clark's State and Blackstone theatres, both in the downtown section of Pittsburgh, their advertising stating that it was the first time anything of this kind had been done in these two houses on any production. The fact that the two theatres are directly adjacent to each other makes this exceptional booking all the more interesting from a sales point of view.

The announcement that "Rosita" would play day and date at the State and the Blackstone not only caused comment among film men but aroused a good deal of interest and gossip with the Pittsburgh fan public as well.

"Blackmail" Completed Universal Announces

Universal announces the completion of camera work on "Blackmail," the big Jewel production being made by King Baggot from Rita Weiman's stage play, "The Co-respondent." It is a special cast production.

Heading the list of players are: Ruth Clifford, Niles Welch and Buddy Messinger, Charles Clary, Herbert Fortier, Arthur Howard, Joe North, William B. Lawrence, Mary Mersch, John Merkyl, Emily Fitzroy, Jane Starr, Hayden Stevenson and Carl Stockdale.

One of the outstanding features of the picture is said to be a graphic illustration of what one should do when faced with "blackmail" threats. This lesson was woven into the picture at the advice of executives of the Los Angeles police department.

To Film Scenes in Three Countries

Motion picture scenes for Maurice Tourneur's newest production, "Torment," will be taken amidst locales in three countries, according to arrangements perfected by M. C. Levee, who is at present in New York.

The story, an international crook drama, is laid in Russia, America and Japan.

William Fox presents Tom Mix in "North of Hudson Bay."

New York Manager Likes "Tiger Rose"

Dr. Hugo Reisenfeld, Managing Director of the Rivoli and Rialto Theatres, New York, was so thoroughly impressed by the Warner Classic, "Tiger Rose," starring Lenore Ulric, that he immediately set a booking date for the Sidney Franklin production following the special screening of the picture. "Tiger Rose" will open at the Rivoli Theatre December 2nd.

"I want to congratulate the Warner Brothers and Sidney Franklin on 'Tiger Rose,' Dr. Reisenfeld declared following the screening.

Exploitation in Omaha

Mail carriers in Omaha, Neb., with permission of the United States Post Office Department, distributed to every person in that city card heralds announcing "post office week" during the engagement of "Loyal Lives" at the Moon Theatre in that city.

The cards carried the post office slogan, "Mail early and often for service and efficiency."

Preferred Produces Balmer Story

"The Breath of Scandal," by Edwin Balmer, will be produced immediately by B. P. Schulberg as the third of the next series of Preferred Pictures which will include "Poisoned Paradise" and "White Man."

"South Sea Love" Is Released

"South Sea Love" with Shirley Mason as the star is the picture that William Fox released November 11. As the title indicates the scenes are laid among the islands of the Pacific and the picturesque life of the region has been woven into an interesting story by Frederick and Fanny Hatton. Shirley Mason plays the part of Dolores Mendina. Her leading man is J. Frank Glendon. The director was David Solomon.

"Universities of the World," an Educational, was also released November 11.

Announcement of Studio and Producing Plans Made by Levee

A new series of Maurice Tourneur productions for First National will shortly be under way at the United Studios.

Four carloads of furniture from the home of Mrs. George J. Gould will soon arrive at the United Plant and appear in future productions made in Hollywood.

Producing and general studio activities for the next three months at the United Studios will continue at a normal pace.

These are some of the news high-lights given out by M. C. Levee, president of the United Studios and producer of Maurice Tourneur pictures, on returning to his desk recently after a three weeks' business trip to New York.

The new producing contract signed by Mr. Levee in New York will become effective upon completion of "Torment," now in production under Mr. Tourneur's direction.

"We are not contemplating any suspension of operations at the United Studios," said Mr. Levee. "While we do not expect to experience the activities of six months ago, we do plan a continuance of normal production along sane lines.

"Studio improvements are going ahead at a rapid pace and all original plans for the increase of facilities and efficiency of United are being carried on. There is no slump evident on the part of the producers at this studio and a survey of production schedule indicates our plant will be one of the few to continue normal activities during the prescribed period of suspension of operations at many other plants."

As to the possible shortage of pictures resulting from the closing of studios, Mr. Levee said: "From my observations in New York I am confident that no shortage will be experienced. The distributors have enough productions on hand to keep them going for some time to come.

"There are few producers who will realize a profit on their pictures produced this year. Production costs must come down if the industry is to survive."

Ten Special Productions for Preferred's Latest Program

Plans for ten special productions, to be filmed as Preferred Pictures in the immediate future, are said to be making the Schulberg studios in Los Angeles the busiest spot on the West Coast. Three pictures are being filmed almost simultaneously. "Poisoned Paradise," from the Robert W. Service novel of that name has been begun by Director Gasnier, with an all-star cast headed by Clara Bow.

With the completion of continuities, now being prepared, work will begin on "The Breath of Scandal," from the novel by Edwin Balmer, and "White Man," a screen version of George Agnew Chamberlain's novel. Since the three stories are of widely different characters three armies of carpenters and technical men have been organized for the preliminary tasks that must be completed before cameras begin to grind.

"Poisoned Paradise" will be filmed amid the luxuries of Monte Carlo and the slum districts of Paris. In both cases photographic reproductions of the actual districts to be shown have been used in order to make as realistic as possible glimpses of Monte Carlo and the French metropolis.

"White Man" is a drama of the jungle. One of the most interesting of the feats that must be accomplished during its filming is the moving of one of California's famous big trees from its natural habitat to the Schulberg studios. Other settings include a genuine jungle, which has been located not far below the Mexican border, and a glimpse of the Metropolitan Opera House and its stage, in New York.

"The Breath of Scandal," based on Mr. Balmer's stirring story of modern society, required several elaborate American city backgrounds. The remaining pictures, seven in number, will be filmed as rapidly as the physical requirements can be met, in order to make possible the release on schedule time of the fifteen Preferred Pictures announced as the season's output by this organization.

"Pioneer Trails" a Gold Mine

J. A. Cooper, manager of the La Crosse Amusement Company, La Crosse, Wis., telegraphed Vitagraph the day after the opening of "Pioneer Trails" at its theatre: "'Pioneer Trails' opened Monday to a standout from one to eleven, breaking all house records."

W. V. Prentice, Manager of the Lyric Theatre, Toledo, Ohio, said: "Your 'Pioneer Trails' is a winner. 'Pioneer Trails' should be a gold mine."

New Hepworth Editor

Donald Buchanan has been engaged by Hepworth as editor-in-chief of their productions. He is now at work editing and titling "Lily of the Alley" and will start soon on "Strangling Threads."

Bob McGowan, director, is captured for the first time by the speed camera in a deep study on screen technique with "Farina," the ace-of-spades beauty, one of the chief players in "Our Gang" Comedies, produced by Hal Roach.

Mack Sennett Studio Speeds Up to Meet Requirements of Pathe

While the trade and public press are carrying news of the curtailment of production by some of the industry's biggest companies and rumors are rife that studio work is to be further retarded in certain quarters, advices from the Mack Sennett Studios on the West Coast disclose increased production activities on the Sennett lot to meet Pathe's program of two-reel comedy releases for the current season.

Pathe's recently announced program of more abundant and better comedy product during the new season will suffer no setback by the slowing up of production work, declares a statement from the Pathe home office this week. The thoroughly sound business policy governing all production activities at the Hal Roach and Mack Sennett lots, whose output is being distributed by Pathe, the well-balanced policy of turning out types of production in popular demand with a minimum of expenditures and a total elimination of waste, which has been consistently followed heretofore, will continue to be enforced in the case of every producing unit releasing its product through the Pathe channels, declares the statement from the home office.

Richard Jones, supervising director and production manager of the Sennett Studios, has been busy during the past few weeks supervising the installment of new facilities and the acquisition of additional players for the several units producing under the Mack Sennett banner. At the present moment every department in the big plant is taxed to capacity and functioning one hundred per cent.

Samuel Goldwyn Buys "Cytherea" for Screen

Samuel Goldwyn last week purchased the screen rights to Joseph Hergesheimer's novel "Cytherea." The book was published two seasons ago and because of the adroit handling of an unusual theme attracted more attention than any previous work of this author. Other Hergesheimer novels which have already been picturized are "Tol'able David" and "The Bright Shawl," two Barthelmess pictures.

Like "The Eternal City," this new independently-produced picture of Mr. Goldwyn's is scheduled for release through Associated First National Pictures. George Fitzmaurice, who took his company to Rome to make "The Eternal City," will direct "Cytherea" and is now in Havana in search of suitable locations.

"Is Sure-Fire," Say Warners

"A sure-fire box-office attraction—one of the most thrilling and dramatic romances that has ever been filmed!" That was the consensus of opinion of the Warner officials following a private showing in the home office projection room of the Warner Classic, "Lucretia Lombard," produced by Harry Rapf. Irene Rich and Monte Blue co-starred in the production, and other prominent roles are interpreted by Marc McDermott, Alec B. Francis, Norma Shearer, John Roche, Lucy Beaumont and Otto Hoffman. "Lucretia Lombard" is a screen adaptation of the novel of the same name by Kathleen Norris.

"Scaramouche" Debut in Toronto

Rex Ingram's "Scaramouche" opened at the Tivoli Theatre (formerly the Allen) in Toronto last week and reports of the newspaper critics show it was given the same hearty reception it has received everywhere else.

"A crowded house saw 'Scaramouche,'" wrote the critic of the Toronto Daily Star, "while a thousand people were turned away. Many of those who saw it pronounced it as the greatest screen drama they had ever witnessed."

Griffith Meets the President

D. W. Griffith recently was presented to President Coolidge by Representative Treadway. The noted motion picture director and producer showed President Coolidge several scenes of his forthcoming film feature, "America," a picture of the Revolutionary War.

American soldiers of today, attired as were those earlier fighters, re-enacted the battle scenes. Many of the historic relics of those days were used in Mr. Griffith's scenes.

"Get Together Club" Holds Dinner

The "Get Together Club" composed of the executives and employees of the New York Exchange for Educational Films, Inc., held its first dinner at Keene's Chop House, Oct. 26.

The "Get Together Club" is a social and welfare club, holding meetings at the exchange at 729 Seventh Avenue every week, where matters of social interest and welfare of the exchange are discussed. Charles A. Greenblatt is president of the club.

Finishes Job

Mildred Davis has practically completed her first Ben Wilson production for Grand-Asher release, under the direction of Arthur Rosson.

Carl Miller is also featured.

Tarkington Stories Are Ideal Screen Material

Twice winner of the Pulitzer award for fine American fiction, Booth Tarkington, creator of "Gentle Julia" and a host of other lovable juveniles, is rated high in modern American letters. His story of "Gentle Julia" has been adapted for the screen by William Fox, who gave Bessie Love the title role and cast Harold Goodwin as the awkward Noble Dill, her small town swain.

Booth Tarkington was born in Indianapolis, on July 29, 1869. He graduated from Princeton and almost immediately became a successful author of short stories. He published "The Gentleman from Indiana," in 1899 and thereafter, in remarkable succession, "The Conquest of Canaan," "His Own People," "The Flirt" and in 1914, began his Penrod stories with the first under that name. Then came "Penrod and Sam," "Seventeen," "Alice Adams," and between his novels were scores of masterful short stories and lesser books.

Among the successful plays Tarkington has written are "Monsieur Beaucaire," "The Man From Home," "Cameo Kirby," "Your Humble Servant," "Mister Antonio," "The Country Cousin," "Up From Nowhere," "Clarence," "The Wren," "The Intimate Strangers" and others. He collaborated with Harry Leon Wilson in the writing of "Cameo Kirby," which William Fox has adapted for the screen among the 1923-24 specials.

Carewe's Force Sails from N. Y. on S. S. Paris

The second section of the Edwin Carewe company sailed Wednesday, November 14, on the French liner S. S. Paris. Those who left to join the director and to proceed to Algiers where exteriors for First National's "A Son of the Sahara" will be made included Claire Windsor, Rosemary Theby, Bert Lytell, Montagu Love and Paul Panzer beside the production and technical staffs.

The change in sailing date from Saturday to Wednesday was made necessary owing to the inability of Miss Windsor to finish her work out west in time to enable her to arrive in New York by Saturday.

Mr. Carewe has been abroad for a month now and has already looked over the desert locations in Biskra, Algeria. He reports everything in readiness for the arrival of the company and will meet its members in Paris and accompany them south to Marseilles and then across the water to Algeria.

Aside from the roster of players already mentioned Walter McGrail will be in one of the principal roles of the picture. He preceded the main party, accompanying Director Carewe a month ago.

Louis N. Jerome will have charge of the business management of the company. The complete personnel of the production and technical staffs is as follows: John D. Schulze, technical director, Robert Kurrle, cameraman, Wallace Fox, assistant director, Cleo Fox, secretary, Al Greene, second cameraman, Richard Easton, second assistant director, and Lawrence Coursier, laboratory expert.

Smith Ties Up Traffic

David Smith, who is producing "Red Roses," a super-feature for Vitagraph adapted from the novel by George Randolph Chester, effectively tied up all traffic at the junction of the main thoroughfares of Los Angeles last week.

Director Smith obtained permission from the police department of the southern California metropolis to stage some of the scenes in the heart of the shopping district. Scores of automobiles were used and when the congestion was at its height an ambulance came clanging down the street.

Doris Kenyon Stars in Blaney Film

Doris Kenyon has the leading role in Charles E. Blaney's production "The Love Bandit," which Vitagraph will release. Victor Sutherland and Cecil Spooner are also in the cast.

Production on the second of the Blaney-Vitagraph pictures will begin soon. The selection of the second super-feature has not yet been announced.

Extended Runs

Not only is "If Winter Comes" hanging up a new record for extended engagements all over the country but it is teaching a new set of patrons the path to the picture theatres. Columbus, Ohio, and Buffalo are two of the latest cities to acclaim the film version of the A. S. M. Hutchinson story by holding it over for a second week. Detroit ran the picture for four weeks, and Los Angeles will post a long run record with it.

Named Branch Manager

The W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that Sherman S. Webster is now branch sales manager of the Cleveland office. Mr. Webster replaces C. L. Peavey, resigned.
